After the benediction, the class, and all the Historical Society, with numerous invited guests, went to the residence of A. Buttars on State street, where a formal reception was tended by the Society to the class. Refreshments were served and the society adjourned at a late hour rejoicing that Charlevoix could take so proud a position in the sisterhood of cities.

J. E. Carter was so proud of that morning boy which arrived at his house Sunday evening, that he started out early Monday morning with a box of "Belvedere" cigars to let the other boys rejoice with him.

J. S. Smithson will deliver his "candle lecture" at the Barnard school house on Tuesday evening June 26th. Admission 20 cents; children under twelve 10 cents. Proceeds to be used toward purchasing an organ for the Sunday school. Everybody invited.

Mrs. Dr. Carlstein received notice last Friday that Mrs. Howard, mother of Mrs. E. M. Clark, and well known in Charlevoix, died on Tuesday, June 12th, at Saline. Mrs. Clark had returned from Florida before Mrs. Howard's death, and was with her during the last hours.

Chas. S. Hampton was in town Wednesday, looking after the interests of the Daily Resorter, which will be issued July 8th, and continue eight weeks. The Daily Resorter has done more to advertise the resorts of northern Michigan than any other paper published in this region.

E. B. Hodge has disposed of his stock of harness goods, and will close the shop. He will, however, remain in town, and find something to busy himself. This step has been made necessary by the slow collections; and the scarcity of ready money among the patrons of the shop.

Lee Beardslee's bicycle is not from Grand Rapids, and did not cost $180, as has been stated. It is made by Gormly & Jeffrey, of Chicago, and can be had for $135, and Mr. Beardslee, as agent will furnish list of sizes and prices, and take orders of any who want to buy one of these excellent wheels.

Perry Weed has gone west to "grow up with the country." He will locate in Edgeley, Dak., his family stopping a while with friends in Wisconsin, while he establishes himself in business. Perry has many friends in Charlevoix, who will be glad to hear of anything rich he may strike in that western country.

The Noss family, musical novelty company, will give one of their entertainments at the opera house, June 30, under the auspices of Maj. E. H. Green camp, S. of V. The press of this country unite in praise of this troupe. Tickets 35, 25, and 15 cents, on sale at Cochran's drug store, and by members of the camp.

An attempt by the Sentinel to monopolize the manuscript essays of the graduating class until after the Journal was issued this week failed, in all but one case. If Mr. Smith is satisfied with that kind of journalistic enterprise, he will find the Journal on hand often enough to keep him busy. His scheme will work harm only to himself and Miss Enos.

To Prof. Enos more than to any other man is due the credit for the high standard attained by our public schools. We have not heard one word of complaint of discipline and mediocrity, but have heard numerous patrons express their satisfaction at the progress made by the pupils in the various departments, and the influence indirectly extends to the primary classes.

C. W. Caskey was in town Monday, and completed arrangements by which the steamer Lou A. Cummings is to leave Charlevoix every morning at 6 o'clock, run to Petoskey, Harbor Springs, Cross Village, and Lake James, and return same day, leaving Petoskey after the arrival of the evening train from the south. This will give the Charlevoix people a chance to go south by morning train, as well to return home after arrival of evening train. J. L. Hurd, agent in Charlevoix.

The directors of the Agricultural Society met Saturday last at the Secretary's office. The attendance was small. The business was important, and arrangements made to make the annual fall fair excel all previous fairs, in fact, an effort will be made to make Charlevoix County Agricultural Society the best institution of agricultural products and implements north of Grand Rapids. Will the people help? Are the citizens of the neighborhood interested in their county?—Enterprise.

☞The Noss Family gave a very pleasing entertainment at the opera house Tuesday evening. When the curtain rose and the band began to play all eyes were turned upon the little drummer, who was leaning by the principal attraction for the evening, although the entire programme pleased the audience. But little Bertha by her readness in everything and the correctness and ease with which she performed her numerous parts as drummer' cadet, drum major, in song and dance, delighted everybody. The operetta at the close gave us a chance to laugh heartily.—Coldwater Republican. This company will appear at the opera house June 30.

Last Friday Mrs. W. A. Brown approached the editor with tearful eyes and said she had always been willing to share her most valuable and beautiful plants with her friends and neighbors, and would give ships as long as she said any, but when it came to a rose, the best lavavanna pulled up and carried away, root and branch, she thought that was asking too much. On the night previous, the flower garden, as well as those of Mrs. Capt. Wilbur, Mrs. Capt. Pollock, Mrs. Capt. Edwards and Mrs. Kirkpatrick were decorated and robbed of their choicest treasures,—some of them plants that had received the best of care for a number of years. So far there is no certain clue to the perpetrators, and no cause can be assigned for the outrage.

☞The Noss Family made their first appearance in this city at the opera house last evening, and played to a large audience. No organization of its kind ever gave better satisfaction! The performance of Miss Bertha Noss, 10 years old, was wonderful, and alone worth the price of admission. She is a whole show in herself, manipulating 16 instruments in one selection. All acted their parts perfectly and the entire performance was very attractive and popular.—Niles Star. Will appear at opera house June 30.

Death of Mrs. Dr. Chamberlain.

Mary P Chamberlain wife of Dr. D. C. Chamberlain died yesterday morning at the residence of F. J. Meech in this village after a long illness. Mrs. Chamberlain was born in Shrewsbury, Vermont, April 10, 1819, and in early life settled in Troy, N. Y., where with her husband she lived over thirty years.

They came to Charlevoix Co. in 1878 and for the past four years have lived in Charlevoix village. Her remains are held at the house to-day and the remains will be taken to Leroy, N. Y. for burial.

THE DEMOCRACY.

Proceedings of the National Democratic Convention.

Stephen M. White, of California, Made Temporary Chairman.

Patterson, of Colorado, Presents a Silver Gavel, and Praises the Noble Metal.

The Various Committees Announced—Incidents of the Convention.

ST. LOUIS, June 5, 1888.

The Democratic National Convention began its eight days of work in this city in the early hours of the morning, it being shown that the gavel of Chairman Barnum was not wielded until ten minutes had sounded its opening until noon.

The trickling stream of humanity which began to run into the big Exposition building as early as 8 o'clock grew to a torrent, which surged in and swirled about gauge of the ball to overflowing, and long before noon 10,000 human faces

Assistant Reading Clerks—M. L. Scott of Virginia, I. E. Barnett of New Jersey, John W. of Iowa, S. H. Henry of Mississippi, John W. Kern of Indiana, J. S. Carr of Missouri, E. D. Lawson of Ohio, W. A. P. Beasley of Missouri.

Official Stenographer—Edward B. Dickson of Illinois.

Sergeant-at-Arms—Richard J. Bright.

Chief Doorkeeper—Daniel Able of St. Louis.

The convention unanimously adopted the list as read by Mr. Prince, and then, on motion of the Chairman, Senator Hon. Arthur P. Gorman of Maryland, Hon. Galusha A. Grow of Pennsylvania, Hon. John G. Carlisle of Kentucky, to wait upon Mr. White and escort him to the stand.

The committee entered the hall amid great enthusiasm, as the chair, and Mr. Barnum then introduced him to the convention in the following words: "Gentlemen of the Convention, I have the pleasure and the honor to present to this convention the Hon. Stephen M. White, of California.

ARTHUR P. GORMAN.

Mr. Chairman—Gentlemen of the convention, if there is no objection, and I assume that there will be none, this present will be deemed as the order of the day, that when we shall adjourn we will have to be ruled by silver. (Great applause.)

Senator Gorman, of Maryland, passed up the following resolution, which was read by the Secretary:

Resolved, That the roll of States and Territories be now called, and that each delegation name one member to act as a member of the Committee on Credentials, one member on the Committee gazed upon the high desk reserved for the presiding officer of the convention, as yet empty, but with its gleaming white silver gavel, a gift of the Nevada delegation, fall of curious interest for the expectant multitude.

The noise proportions of a cyclone in a few minutes, it is only long in size, referred on either side by half a dozen lusty lungs, and more which stretched around the auditorium in a broad, overhanging gallery. A superstage reaches from the main floor to the platform fifty feet in the east wall of the hall and accommodates 440 of the gallant sons of Erin, members of the National Democracy, who thus are enabled to overlook officers, delegates, and spectators. The chair throne arrangements are simple but effective, the hangings with red, white, and blue bunting, relieved by festoons and borders of evergreen. Upon a pedestal on the right of the entrance of the stage stands a bust of Thomas Jefferson, while the left hand side of the gallery above the stage, heavily draped in gilt, is a large portrait of the President in office. On either side are smaller portraits of Cleveland, Hancock, Tilden, Hendricks and ex-Gov. Marmaduke of Missouri. The balconies of the pillars and the faces of the long, wide, massive pillars between the great windows are profusely decorated with American flags, alternate large and short festoons, caught up with large red, white and blue rosettes.

The hall is amply lighted in the daytime by a skylight in the roof, and at night by 1,000 incandescent electric lamps. A very striking effect is produced in the gallery above the stage, in full sight of the delegates and spectators, by an enormous shield bearing the portrait of George Washington upon a background of a white cravat.

At 12:05 p. m. ex-Senator Barnum of Connecticut, Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, rose from his chair, and with the aid of a gavel on the desk, rapped for order. The band which were discoursing a lively tune ceased playing, and the hum of conversation and the cheers which greeted the appearance of each distinguished individual who entered the convention gave way to quiet, and with a preliminary rattle the great assemblage subsided into comparative silence.

"The committee will please come to order," said Chairman Barnum. "Bishop J. C. Gregory, of St. Louis, will open the proceedings of this convention with prayer.

Bishop Gregory stood forward and addressed the throng of guests, saying:

"Almighty God, our heavenly Father, who art ever above all the turmoil, and yet dost stoop to us in answer to our prayer, we adore Thy name. We praise Thee. We give Thee thanks for Thy great goodness to the people of Thy heritage, and we pray Thee, in Thy mercy, to strengthen and the work of this Democratic Party. We thank Thee for this great country which Thou hast given us; for the increase of our population and our wealth and our power; for the division of our country, for the peace that followed it; for the Church, and for all Christian institutions.

"Despite of our ingratitude or forgetfulness of Thee, our disobedience according to the multitude of Thy laws, Thou hast kept us from the ravages of pestilence, famine, and war; from sedition and treason, and murder; from the high crime, and crime and sin.

"Empty. May this Democratic party of our country be laid in faith and hope and charity, with righteousness and love to God and our country. We beseech Thee, Almighty God, that Thou will bless this Democratic party that there are in authority, and in the place to provide for us able men who fear God, who love truth and righteousness, who love our country, who love God and our country, who love the people of our country, who love the poor, who love the rich, who love the people of the South, who love the people of the North, who love the people of the East, who love the people of the West, who love the people of the Pacific Coast, who love the people of the Territories, who love the people of the District of Columbia, who love the people of the Church, who love the people of the world, who love God and our country, who love God and our country, who love God and our country.

"Grant, O Lord, that this convention may be guided upon the high desk reserved for the presiding officer of the convention, as yet empty, but with its gleaming white silver gavel, a gift of the Nevada delegation, fall of curious interest for the expectant multitude.

FARM AND GARDEN.

EVERY DAY LESSONS OF VALUE TO FARMERS AND GARDENERS.

An Important Point in Horticulture That is Often Ignored in the Endeavor to Make Shapely Trees and Induce Uniform Growth of Vines.

Pruning is one of the most important operations connected with the management of trees, shrubs and vines. We prune one part of a tree to reduce its vigor and to favor the growth of another and weaker plant. We prune a branch, or a shoot, to produce ramifications of these parts, and thus change or modify the form of the whole. We prune to induce fruitfulness and to diminish it. We prune in the growing as well as in the dormant season, and finally we prune both the roots and branches. Thus we see that pruning is applied to all parts of a tree at all seasons, and to produce the most opposite results. How is it, then, that there, fore, to know how to prune, what to prune and when to prune.

A COLUMNAR PEAR TREE.

A horticulturist in Country Gentleman, who is attention to a fact often ignored, viz., that pinching back a growing shoot or pruning a growing branch weakens the same. This fact must be borne in mind when one is endeavoring to make a tree shapely or get a uniform growth of vine.

In the Old World use is made of this principle in training fruit and other trees into various forms. Some fruit trees are trained so as to make perfect trellises, flat as a pale fence, these are called espaliers. Others are erect, round and shoot up like Lombardy poplars, columnar trees. Appended is an illustration of a columnar pear tree.

To make this tree, explains the horticulturist quoted from, the grower has to pinch back all the strong growing shoots toward the upper portion of the tree, as the season progresses, and any shoot that seems stronger than the rest, anywhere. In the fall and winter, when the finishing time for pruning arrives, the upper part of the tree is still severely pruned, as shown in the illustration.

Attention has been called to this form of tree simply to illustrate the general principle that pruning or pinching back a strong shoot weakens it, and that the weaker ones profit by what is to the strong ones has been denied. In conclusion adds this horticulturist. If the shoots on a growing vine are all weakish at the bottom, and a few strong ones are pushing at the top we should pinch these strong ones back and take out the growing point noon after it starts, or as soon as it occurs to us that the lower branches need strengthening. If it be an evergreen that we would thicken at the bottom, pinch out the growing points of the strongest branches, but let alone the weaker ones. If it be a pear tree that we would train to any special form, keep back the stronger branches and let the weaker ones grow. Only in this way can we get branches where we need them.

Honey Plants.

All flowers, whether wild or cultivated, are visited by the industrious bee for honey, and it is not easy to say from what species it derives the most of its sweets. Orchards in full bloom are melodious with their hum, and later on the fields of buckwheat are extraordinarily attractive, so much so, indeed, that honey made principally from this plant is readily distinguished from that made earlier from fruit blossoms, white clover, etc., which is more highly esteemed on account of its finer color and quality.

Crimson Roses.

Numbered with desirable crimson roses is the Louis Van Houtte, which last summer endured so well the heat and dry weather at the English rose shows, where the varieties exhibited are judged by very strict rules. Louis Van Houtte occupied the twelfth place in a list of sixty varieties at the National Rose society's London exhibition last summer.

LOUIS VAN HOUTTE.

The one fault of this rose, according to James Vick, the well known seedman at Rochester, N. Y., is that it is a little tender in most localities this will not detract from its merits, for if properly protected, as thrifty rose growers of the north always practice, it will bear northern winters unharmed. One excellent characteristic of this rose, according to Vick, is its continuous, blooming habit. It blossoms freely the second time, and so is a true remontant. The flowers are of medium size, semi-globular and full. Our cut gives an idea of form, though reduced in size. The color is a crimson maroon, very rich and strong.

Louis Van Houtte was introduced by the late Francois Lacharme, of Lyons, France, one of the most celebrated rose growers of our time. Among other noteworthy crimson varieties raised by him are Alfred Colomb, Anne de Diesbach, Charles Lefebvre, Hippolyte Jamain and Xavier Olibo. The only rose of American origin, according to Vick, that will compare with Louis Van Houtte and the varieties above mentioned in color and other valuable qualities is Marshall P. Wilder.

CHINCH BUGS.

Remedies and Preventives for This Serious Pest.

Hem ellen and preventives recommended by Professor Riley, and found to be effective on trial in the extermination of that serious pest, the chinch bug, are briefly as follows Irrigation, burning, rolling, trampling, manuring, early sowing, mixing seed, or protecting one plant by another, preventing the migration from one field to another by upright boards or plowed furrows or ditches and abstaining from cultivation of grains upon which the insect feeds. With not a sect more than the chinch bug is there greater necessity for clean cultivation.

Numbered with other summer remedies is irrigation where it can be practiced. In addition to winter burning the remedy can be used to good effect in other cases, as where the attack of the bugs appears to be confined to a definite portion of the field, that portion should be overlaid with straw and burned, if not too large. The prevention of migration by means of ditches or turned boards has been employed with good effect in some localities Sowing strips of plants distasteful to the bugs, such as flax, hemp or buckwheat, around the fields to be protected is resorted to in some cases. On the other hand, sowing strips of favored food around the fields to be protected is practiced, as a strip of timothy, Hungarian grass or millet. The bugs lay their eggs by preference in this protective strip and then are destroyed by the plowing and burning

A new, and, under certain circumstances, efficacious remedy is that of kerosene emulsion. Applications made by Professor Forbes and reported upon by L. O Howard all proved efficacious The time of application was just after the wheat harvest, when help is abundant. Experiments made with kerosene emulsions by Professor Osborn, of Ames, Ia., and reported to the Entomological department of Washington, make the emulsion appear of value when directed against the bugs that are massing on corn. The results in the destruction of great numbers. In this application the cyclone nozzle was found exceedingly satisfactory.

A Simple but Useful Implement.

The little implement here illustrated is a very simple but useful affair in the garden. It may not be familiar to our gardeners, but it has stood the test of time among French gardeners, who use it quite extensively.

It is made of hardwood turned on a lathe or otherwise cut. The great use made of it is in putting out bedding plants from small pots, and the diameter should be the same as that of the pot from which the plants are taken. A single stroke in prepared ground will be all that is necessary, although it may take not a tap with a mallet or some convenient object makes quicker work.

A FRENCH DIBBLE.

Potatoes Under Mulch.

At the Colorado state agricultural college, where potatoes have been grown under mulch for three seasons, it has been decided that the best mulch is composed of either partially decayed materials or of clean out straw. It is reported that the yield under mulch is ordinarily greater than without, especially in uncongenial climes. The shading of the ground furnishes the proper conditions of temperature and moisture at the rock, as well as assuring the necessary mechanical condition of the soil so desirable in securing uniformity and the greatest possible development of tuber. A mulch, to be of any value in a dry climate, should, according to the report in question, be quite a foot thick, using large seed pieces, however, to enable the tops to push through the cover.

The opinion is expressed that mulch culture is only practicable on a small scale and in localities, soils and seasons unfavorable to the potato under ordinary culture.

Remedy for Apple Tree Borers.

The entomologist of the Ohio experiment station advises one and the same remedy for both the round headed and flat headed borers and bark lice that so injuriously affect the trunks of apple trees. The remedy is a wash made by mixing one quart of soft soap, or one pound of hard soap with two gallons of boiling hot water and then adding a pint of crude carbolic acid. This mixture should be applied late in May and again three weeks later with a scrub brush to the trunk and larger branches of the tree. If the bark is rough it ought to be scraped before the wash is applied. No cracks in the bark at the base of the trunk where the insects can enter should be missed in the application, as the sole object is to prevent the laying of the eggs from which the grubs are hatched.

Deep Soil for Strawberries.

Strawberries will send their roots from twenty to thirty inches into the ground, if it is made very rich and well worked to that depth. Mulching with rotted forest leaves saves all necessity for watering, and with the ground prepared and fertilized in this manner the plants will be sure to produce larger, more and better colored berries. This is not guess work, but the teaching of practice and experience.

Agricultural News.

Farmers can have the bulletins sent out from their state agricultural experiment stations forwarded to them free by making written application to the station for the same.

A peanut trust is reported as having been formed in Norfolk, Va., and embracing firms engaged in the peanut trade in St. Louis, Cincinnati, New York, Norfolk, Petersburg and Smithville, Va.

The South Carolina department of agriculture has recently issued a bulletin on the resources and industries of that state. Readers desiring full information on any point are invited to apply to the commissioner of agriculture, Columbia, S. C.

The experiment station at Cornell university, under the provisions of the Hatch bill, has been organized, and work will begin at once.

The Monterumia irrigating tunnel in southern Colorado, just completed, is more than a mile long. It is destined to convey, with some fifty miles of canal, the water of the Dolores river over one of the richest valleys in Colorado. It is claimed that by this enterprise 200,000 acres of land will be reclaimed.

How the West Was Unclosed.

We have been taunted with the question, "Why do you not, in the west and the south, go to manufacturing, if so much money is gained in that way?" Mr. Chairman, let us look at the history of this country for the last twenty-five years, and its legislation as affecting the west and the south on the one side and New England on the other Before the war, as the census returns show, I have not time to read them, but will incorporate them in my remarks, under a low tariff manufactures prospered in New England. The great west and the south, having an agricultural people, were producing also, but all were prosperous in the same ratio, and were upon an equal fly, so that there was but little complaint. The people of the south and the west had all their capital invested in farms and farming.

But, sir, when the Morrill tariff law increasing the duties on imports was enacted New England was in a position to receive the benefit of that measure Manufacturing had been her business she had plant and capital engaged in it, while at the west capital was engaged in agriculture What was the result, then, of Morrill tariff? It immediately set in operation a process of transferring the wealth of the west into the lap of New England by a protective tariff In manufacturing for the army New England had a vast market and an enormous profit, for she sold products in greenbacks ranging all the way from thirty to sixty cents on the dollar, and received bonds paid for in greenbacks all the way from forty to sixty cents on the dollar New England was ready to take advantage of this legislation and did so.—Mr Beam, of Nebraska, in House Debate.

"Preventive" is Death.

There is no little meaning in the statement, based on official reports, that in the last thirty one years our manufacturing trade has fallen off $257,000,000 The explanation is that while the Republicans took charge of the government American ships sailed on every ocean and every port American commerce exports and importations and now they are carrying away almost one sixth The carrying of this large commerce of $1,200,000,000 was a very profitable business, but the money went into foreign pockets—chiefly free trade British ship owners It is stated that in the last eight years we have paid out to foreign steamship companies $1,200,000,000 in freight and passage money.—St. Louis Republican.

A Happy Family

Circle is the greatest blessing of our civilization, but such a thing is not possible when disease and death lurks on the threshold. One of the most important matters to be attended to, is that the Liver and Kidneys are in a healthy condition. More trouble arises from derangement of these organs than any other cause, often resulting in Diabetes, Bright's Disease, and other difficulties that are generally counted incurable. Parmelee's Impregnin, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Cure will prevent and cure all these difficulties with great certainty. Large bottles $1. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Brace Up.

You are feeling tired, your appetite is poor, you are bothered with headache, you are dispirited, nervous, and generally out of sorts and want to brace up. Brace up, but not with whiskey, stimulants, spring medicines, or bitters, which have for their basis very cheap, bad whiskey and which stimulate you for an hour, and then leave you in worse condition than before. What you want is an alterative that will purify your blood, start healthy action of the general functions the proper conditions of temperature and moisture at the rock, as well as assuring the necessary mechanical condition of the soil so desirable in securing uniformity and the greatest possible development of tuber. A mulch, to be of any value in a dry climate, should, according to the report in question, be quite a foot thick, using large seed pieces, however, to enable the tops to push through the cover.

The General Issue.

The great issue of the coming campaign is Progress against Reaction.

Since the St. Louis Convention of 1876 the watchword of the democratic party have been Administration and reform. Its policy has been liberal, enterprising, and aided to the duties of healing the wounds of a great conflict, restoring the healthy and united action of all parts of our governmental system, and making laws and administering them accordingly with the requirements of the new era of peace and reunion. Fraud in 1876 and misapprehension of issues in 1880 postponed the opportunity of the democratic party to enterprise the program of progress through fraternity until after the election of 1884.

During a season of excessive power of a little more than three years great advance has been made in spite of difficulties created by the survival of republican laws and practices and the constant opposition of one branch of the national legislature. Prosperity, public lands, foreign relations, the interests of labor and the administration of all departments of the government, the democratic reform scheme of public service, and the tariff lead away. Every one now understands that democratic policy is not merely a policy of reform, and that under it the country is bound to go on gaining in wealth and prosperity and in the enjoyment of the rewards of labor. All apprehensions have been dispelled, and the conservative and the bold and radical theories have found no countenance in a plain, practical, common sense course through which the conditions of the times have been met and dealt with masterfully.

There has been no attempt at sudden or violent revolution either as to methods or as to men. The march forward has been straight and steady, without confusion or rush, and every step gained has been deliberately taken and firmly held until the next advance is made.

Under the conditions that exist four years is not long enough to complete so conservative and orderly a change, conducted so entirely in accordance with the spirit of our institutions. But a beginning has been made, and the achievements of the administration are solid and enduring. This is what the democratic party has done and is doing for the country.

Now what do the republicans propose? Under the utterly false cry of opposition to free trade—false, because by no democratic authority or organ is free trade proposed—the country is asked to go back to the extreme doctrine of monopoly protection, which was introduced only as a war expedient, and then apologetically, as born of great necessity. Now, after a period of a century of the failure of that theory to satisfy American labor or preserve American commerce, we are called upon by the republicans, not merely to save and respect existing interests, as democrats are doing, but to make the principle of our great country that of isolation and the still stronger principle that the rights of whose wealth and special privileges already set them apart as an aristocracy should be made safe.

With a monster surplus, the danger of which every one admits, it is urged to extend the policy under which that surplus accumulated. In the face of unprecedented labor agitation, it is resolved that the system under which those disturbances were created be made permanent and unassailable. And as part of this programme of big city and corporation domination it is urged to renew the hates and proscriptions of the period of reconstruction, to invent an issue against the tariff, and to remit the people of the Southern States back again to the condition of defeated insurgents on probation and under discipline.

This is the issue of the election that of progress against reaction. It depends not upon the individuality of the republican candidate, but on the essential conditions of the republican party. Whether Gresham, Depew, Hawley, Harrison, Sherman, Allison or any other republican presidential nominee, does not matter. The question before the people will continue the same—shall the country go forward in the path peace, progress, prosperity and equal rights, or, turning it back upon all these, shall it go back to the days, retrest along the road leading to the despotism of monopoly, industrial and commercial confusion, administrative extravagance and sectional hate?—New York Star.

Thurman the Democrat

And what a democrat ALLEN G. THURMAN is!

A plain Virginia farmer's son, he imbibed his first lesson of the dignity of labor in the fields and reaped the first fruit of his labors in the open market.

A college bred man he stored his mind with the treasures of Demosthenes' pleadings, and studied the consequences of the overthrow of the will of the majority.

A lawyer, he delved deep into the foundations of the constitution, and became saturated with the doctrines of personal liberty and universal equality.

A law-maker, he has summed up the limit of corporate aggression upon public and private rights, and lent the ear of kindness and consolation to the cries of the oppressed people of the republic.

A partisan, he has neither shirked nor shunned the contest not only his own ranks, but has managed to make his influence beneficially and powerfully felt in public affairs without antagonizing the factional enmity of either party.

An orator, he is logical without being tedious, frank without making any confidences, witty without vulgarity, and eloquent without bombast.

He has lived a pure and blameless life, and he has made an imperishable name. An election to the vice presidency can hold nothing to the honors of such a man. It can only show "the old man eloquent" the great love which a grateful people entertain for one of their most faithful and illustrious champions.

The Effect of Protection.

The effect of a protective tariff is to foster and maintain a horde of monopolies that will disappear at the touch of free trade. With the world for a market as well as a target from which to draw the utilities and luxuries of civilized life, "corners" will be impossible and the "trust" must prove an untrustworthy method of getting a living. The high tariff promises most to those trusts is the hand that wins at Chicago, but will it stop there, when the nation? Will when the people understand the effect of the tariff in sustaining the price of goods and lowering the price of labor.

American workman—Give me wages sufficient to feed, cloth and educate my family in a decent manner. What I think manufacturer—Give my dear sir, depend on the demand and supply of labor. We always buy in the cheapest markets.

American workman—But isn't the tariff for our protection against cheap labor

Protected manufacturer—The tariff is to protect against cheap goods, we demand free trade in labor.

American workman—But I must live.

Protected manufacturer—That is your lookout. I run my factory on business principles. Those willing to work the cheapest are the ones I employ.

American workman—Then it appears that the tariff is a sham, a fraud, a delusion, a trick, so far as giving me any protection from cheap labor I am compelled to buy where I can, in the dearest market and sell my labor in the cheapest market.

Protected manufacturer—You shouldn't bother your head about such abstruse questions. We know what is for your best interests.—Evening News.

FOR THE CAMPAIGN.

Every reader of the JOURNAL has one or more friends whom they can, with a little effort, persuade to become regular readers and patrons of the paper. As an inducement to use their influence now, we offer the paper until November 8th for the small sum of 25 cents—the sooner you begin the more papers you get for the money.

Any person receiving the paper without having ordered it, may know that some friend has paid for it for them, and therefore may place the figures Snow following the name.

Send us the names as soon as you will.

In consideration of this very low rate, and to avoid separate mailing, it is desired that campaign subscriptions be paid in advance.

Send in the names this week.

A New Railroad Project

Jerry Boynton says he has a project to build a road from the Baltimore & Ohio Road in Indiana to Rogers City, on the Huron shore of Michigan, 250 miles long, touching the commons, Higgins' Lake, Houghton Lake, Harrison, Six Lakes, Greenville, Lowell, Hastings, Battle Creek, Coldwater, Indiana Line, and the Baltimore & Ohio. Rogers City is but thirty-five miles from Sault Ste. Marie and a point where navigation is early in the spring and open late in the fall. It will tap the best undeveloped country in the state, both for lumber, salt, and a fine agricultural country. It will cost several million, but he says there will be no trouble about getting money.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

A Rare Combination.

CLEVELAND AND THURMAN.

Young man for war and old man for counsel.

Cleveland to fight the battles of reform against the monopolists, tariff robbers, land thieves, trusts and evil legislation.

Thurman to watch over the United States House of Lords, a sentinel to look after the people's interests.

It's a rare combination and will sweep the country, including Michigan.

A Great Ticket.

On every hand it is asserted by democrats and conceded by republicans that the St. Louis ticket is the strongest one that could have been found. Such a belief makes an admirable starting point for the campaign that will follow. There are no jealousies or rivalries to be smoothed over. If the democrats cannot win with

THE HOUSE PASSES THE ARMY BILL.

THE House passed the army appropriation bill on the 16th inst. after adopting an amendment appropriating $100,000 for a military post near Chicago. Mr. Sandall reported the sundry civil appropriation bill. The total of the bill is $64,714,796, being $3,027,807 less than the regular estimates, and $7,861,276 less than the regular and special estimates. The amount appropriated for the current fiscal year is $61,000,000, and the total year was $62,828,076. The apparent excess of $1,926,317 over the present appropriation is nearly accounted for by two features of the bill alone—for the Congressional library $214,000, and for the Bureau of American States such an increase of $126,000. Another big increase in the bill over the present appropriation is for the Rock Island bridge, Davenport and $50,000 for the Rock Island bridge.

GERMANY.

The Death of Kaiser Friedrich Announced to the Army in a Spirited General Order.

Emperor William II. of Germany has issued the following general order to the army:

While the army has only just discarded the White Mourning for the mortal remains of the Willing, I, my dear friends, great father, whom heaven will ever bless, lay down the sceptre of Frederick Barbarossa by the death of his dear and warmly beloved father. This is indeed a serious and sorrowful time in which God's decree places you at the head of the army. It is your duty, my faithful comrades, to show the world in full daylight the confidence with which I step into the place to which God calls me so imperiously strong, for I know what sense of honor and duty my glorious ancestors have implanted in your hearts, and how in how great a measure this feeling has at all times been manifested in the army. A firm and irrefragable fastness to the land was as an inheritance handed down from father to son, from generation to generation, and in the same way I refer you to my grandfather, who stands fresh and hale before your souls, and to my father, the glorious and unforgetable war lord, such as could not be more freely conceived, or in a form more appealing to the heart. I refer you to my beloved father, who as Crown Prince and Prince Frederick Charles, at the head of the army, led to victory a host from the glorious ancestors whose names shine brightly in history, and whose hearts beat warmly for the army. Thus we belong to each other—I and the army, thus we wave from one to another and thus we will stand together in an indissoluble union of fidelity and obedience. I know that I left army of Charles Frederick the best guard, and I swear over to remember that the eyes of my ancestor look down upon me from the other world, and that I shall die day and night in the service to them of the glory and honor of the army.

TRAIN ROBBERY.

A Missouri, Kansas and Texas Express Held Up by Robbers.

Dispatches from Muscogee, Indian Territory, give the following particulars of a bold train robbery near that point:

The south-bound Missouri, Kansas & Texas express was stopped at the Verdigris bridge by a masked man who had crawled out on the girder of the bridge. He had a Winchester and a revolver and the express car was covered. The express messenger was killed by a bullet, he being a very warm night, the side door was open, and he was sitting in the door when shot the fatal shot. Before he could close it two men entered the car and robbed him of the express and a valuable package. One shot was fired into the baggage car, but no damage was done. The left arm of Charles Gardner, the mail agent. Two shots were fired in the front of the smoking car, one shooting through the right forearm of Harry Ryan. The other struck a passenger named Ben C. Turver in the left cheek, and passing backward broke his neck, causing instantaneous death. Turver was from Sherman, Texas. He is a single man, and was going home from a trip to Chicago. The leader of the robbers gave his name as Captain Jack. Some of them were masked. They secured but little booty.

ROBBED BY MASKED BRIGANDS.

The Northern Pacific Express Held Up by Bold Road Agents.

The west-bound express on the Northern Pacific Road was held up and robbed between Big Horn and Myers stations. When the train was in the vicinity of Junction City the engineer noticed a bright light ahead, which was being moved to and fro. Knowing there had been a heavy storm the night before, and fearing a bridge was gone, he slowed up. Scarcely had the train stopped before a masked man appeared at the steps of the engine. An instant later three shots were fired in rapid succession. About $1,000 was secured by the robbers, who escaped. Several persons were injured by the shooting.

Fears for Stanley.

The fears that trouble has befallen the Stanley expedition have been confirmed by letters from the Congo.

St ley Wounded.

A dispatch from Lisbon to the Brussels Independence Belge says: Advices from the Congo say that Arabs, who have arrived at Kinshassa state that Henry M. Stanley was wounded in a fight with natives and that afterward one-half of his escort deserted. Tippoo Tib had not sent the promised convoy to Stanley.

Breaking Booms.

The lumber booms at Cloquet, Minn., broke recently, setting free 60,000,000 feet of logs, causing a loss estimated at $300,000. Alarm prevails along the river, and the Minneapolis lumbermen have begun to run their logs into Coon Creek as a precautionary measure.

JOY FOR FOUR HEARTS.

The Late President's Son and Daughter Wedded to Miss Belle Mason and J. Harry Brown.

The Garfield home at Mentor, Ohio, presented a fascinating and happy scene last week. A courtship that began eight years ago, when one of the parties was a young man just approaching his majority and the other a girl barely in her teens, ended in the marriage of Miss Mollie Garfield, daughter of the late President, to J. Stanley Brown, formerly private secretary of the bride's father. At the same time Harry A. Garfield, eldest son of the late President, wedded Miss Belle Mason, daughter of the late James Mason, for years chief counsel of the Lake Shore Railroad and a prominent attorney. The double ceremony took place in the library of the Garfield mansion, made famous during the memorable campaign of 1880. Rev. W. V. W. Davis, of Worcester, assist., formerly pastor of the Euclid Avenue Presbyterian Church of Mentor, where Mrs. Garfield and family attended, was the officiating clergyman, having come on from Massachusetts expressly for that purpose. Mr. Brown and Miss Garfield were first made man and wife, and this service over, Harry Garfield and Miss Mason were united in marriage. The ritual was the simple one of the Presbyterian church. There were two bridesmaids for each bride. Many prominent people were present.

MR. AND MRS. J. STANLEY BROWN.

HOW HE DIED.

Germany's Beloved Emperor Passed Away Without a Struggle—The Death-Bed Scene.

The last hours of Emperor Frederick of Germany were absolutely painless, and the end came without a struggle. A Berlin dispatch thus describes the final scene:

Between 3 and 4 o'clock his breathing became terribly labored, and some moments of struggle seemed over, alternating with spasms and gran ing. At 4 o'clock the physicians felt that the end was near, the Empress sent the royal family to be summoned. All gathered around the bedside, during the administering of the sacrament, and indeed, the Emperor appeared to be quite conscious. A touching scene occurred at the bedside while the Emperor's life was passing away. Bismarck was called to his dying master's last farewell. The Emperor, with a powerful effort, raised himself, taking the hand of the Chancellor in his own feeble grasp, and motioning to the Empress to come nearer, he took her hand and joined it with that of Bismarck, thus giving a silent and pathetic token of his desire for a reconciliation of all differences between a wife and the Prime Minister. The Empress, with a burst of tears, began pressing his wan hands rested on the coverlet. The Crown Prince stood opposite him. The Emperor was seated at the foot of the bed. But later she knelt at the bedside and pressed her husband's hand, while the Prince watching his dying father's faint grasp for breath. Every five minutes the doctors felt the pulse. The expression on Dr Mackenzie's face showed that it was weakening. At times the pulse was imperceptible, and the doctor was called to place his ear close to the Emperor's lips to detect his breathing. At 11 o'clock Dr. Mackenzie left the room. The Empress tenderly kissed the head of the Emperor. At 11 the doctor drew his watch and declared that all was over.

PARDONED BY THE PRESIDENT.

Executive Clemency Shown to a Number of Condemned Men Whose Cases Had Been Considered by Mr. Cleveland.

The President has granted a pardon to George L. Weber, of Montana, convicted of murder in the second degree and sentenced Nov. 5, 1885, to twenty years' imprisonment. Pardons have also been granted to George Smith, Western District of Arkansas, convicted of larceny and introducing spirituous liquor in Indian Territory, and sentenced to one year's imprisonment on each charge and to pay $50 fine; John Bishop, of Minnesota, selling whisky to Indians, sentenced Oct. 7, 1887, to thirty days' imprisonment and a fine of $300; John R. Barnes, of Utah, for unlawful cohabitation, sentenced April 30, 1888, to three months' imprisonment and $300 fine; John Sevier, a Cherokee Indian, Western district of Arkansas, for manslaughter, sentence suspended; Zial Eagle, of Utah, for bigamy; Barney C. Dooley, of Arkansas, for destroying letter by burning a postoffice of which he was postmaster, sentenced Nov. 6, 1887, to one year; W. V. McCandless, of Montana, for counterfeiting, sentenced in May, 1886, to seven and one-half years; and R. D. Jones, of Utah, for bigamy. In the case of John Q. Adams, of Missouri, selling whisky to Indians, sentenced in March, 1888, to six months' imprisonment, the President commutes the sentence to four months.

THE TRADE REVIEW.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Statement for the Past Week—A Hopeful Feeling Prevails.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s review of trade for the past week says:

The moderate improvement in trade noted a week ago does not yet seem to be more than the slight reaction which occasionally breaks a period of uncertainty and comparative inactivity. The signs of a lasting improvement in trade do not yet appear. Uncertainty still prevails and the speculation which has been so disastrous to many, tends to impede exchanges in most branches of business. In some, moreover, the cold weather of spring has so far curtailed trade that retailers are carrying over stocks larger than usual, and postponing their purchases. But the feeling is not so hopeful as it was a month ago, it may be not so hopeful as it should be, while the prospect as to spring wheat and other crops is necessarily vague. With favorable weather the general results would probably be fair, and in some quarters a decidedly hopeful feeling begins to prevail. Money is in ample supply at the leading centers, for money is overabundant and quoted at 1 per cent, notwithstanding the renewal of gold exports. The Treasury has raised its price for bonds, taking a large amount one day, but the only considerable offers since have been $1,000,000 at a shade its new limit for 4s, and a like amount at a shade its limit for 4½s.

LOCUSTS HAVE COME AGAIN.

After Nineteen Years' Absence the Devastators Resume Work.

A Dubuque (Iowa) dispatch says that locusts have appeared there in vast numbers in the last two days. They are popularly supposed to be the seventeen-year locusts, but the calculation is two years off this time. Their last appearance was in 1869, just nineteen years ago. They come up from the ground, leaving holes about one-half inch in diameter. They come up as a grub, and soon after shed their skins and cling to the scarcest shrub for awhile and then fly away. A Wheaton (Ill.) dispatch says the seventeen year locusts have appeared there in vast numbers, and literally cover all kinds of bushes, hedges, trees, and even perch on the fences while they peck their teeth. Their favorite food appears to be the leaves of currant bushes and maple trees. They also eat potato vines and other vine. Great apprehension is felt over their general devastation, and it is feared the shade and fruit trees will be ruined.

POLITICAL CONVENTIONS.

Various Pointers, Nominations and Resolutions of Political Bodies.

The Maine Union Labor party met in delegate convention at Waterville and nominated W. H. Simmons for governor. The platform favors greenbacks, postal banks, government telegraph and railroads, service pensions, an income tax, a secret ballot, and homestead laws.

The Maine Republican State Convention, held at Portland, nominated Edwin C. Burleigh for governor on the first ballot. He is a warm friend of Blaine's. The resolutions denounce the President's message, the Mills bill, and free trade, and express the government for its course in the fisheries dispute. President Cleveland is charged with hypocrisy in the enforcement of the civil-service law; and prohibition is indorsed. The mention of Mr. Blaine evoked great enthusiasm.

The Prohibitionists of Vermont, in session at Montpelier, nominated a full State ticket headed by Henry M. Seeley for Governor and adopted a radical prohibition platform.

LYNCHED A FLORIDA NEGRO.

Dennis Williams Hanged by a Mob for Wounding a White Man.

Dennis Williams, the colored man who shot Superintendent McCormick at Ellaville, Fla., a few days since, thirty miles east of Tallahassee, was lynched and his body found in the Suwanee River. The grounds were tied to a stone and the negro were bound hand and foot by the lynchers. Williams was shot while in a buggy with the superintendent of the mills to make Williams deliver up a loaded gun which he had concealed in anticipation of her in a crowd of people. Williams refused to do so, and then McCormick undertook to take the gun, and Williams fired a charge into McCormick's shoulder, shattering the bone. McCormick is very popular, and the shooting created immense excitement. Since the finding of Williams' body it is rumored that the negroes have banded together for revenge.

MRS. SHERIDAN DEAD.

Gen. Phil Sheridan's Mother Passes Away at Somerset, O., at the Age of 87.

Mrs. Mary Sheridan, mother of Gen. Philip Sheridan, died at her home in Somerset, Ohio, the 12th. Mrs. Sheridan's death was due as much to extreme old age as to a slight bruise she had received a few days before, which she had contracted. She retained all her faculties, except that of speech, to the last.

Mrs. Sheridan was born in Ireland in March, 1806, and came to America in 1817. She was married to John Sheridan at an early age and came with him and their one child to the United States in 1853. After two years' residence in Albany, N. Y., they went to Somerset, where Mrs. Sheridan lived at the time of her son's death. The father died in February, 1866, and the mother in 1875. Gen. Phil was the only daughter, in her old age. The three of the family are now alive—Gen. Philip H. Sheridan, Col. Michael V. Sheridan, of the General's staff, and Col. John L. Sheridan, of Indianapolis. The funeral occurred at Somerset on the 15th.

A MURDERER REPRIEVED.

An Indian Widow Lays Open the Scalp of Her Husband's Murderer.

Flute Willie Dunn killed Charlie Wilson, mucca, grandson of old Winnemucca, of the Pyramid Lake reservation, near Winnemucca, Nevada, by stabbing him in the throat. Dunn was tried by a jury of his peers, sentenced him to be hanged. Agent Gibson telegraphed the result to the Indian Department at Washington. The Department stopped the execution and the United States Marshal took the pris ner to Reno, where he was almost a fight on the reservation, as the dead man's relatives wanted him hanged at once, but Chief Natchez decided for the white man's law. The widow, however, got even satisfaction by laying open the murderer's scalp with a club.

SHOT HIMSELF BEFORE HIS WIFE.

Poor Health Drives Jacob Doll to Suicide—Mrs. Doll Insane.

Jacob Doll, who has successfully conducted a grocery business in Louisville, Ky., for nineteen years, shot himself in the presence of his wife. Both had been in poor health for some time. Doll asked his wife how she was, and she said she felt much worse. He said he was feeling very badly, too, and at once fired a ball from a pistol into his temple and fired the shot produced instant death. Mrs. Doll later tried to kill herself with the same pistol. Doll was worth $15,000.

AMELIA RIVES MARRIED.

The Virginia Authoress Weds J. A. Chanler, of New York, at the Home of Her Mother.

Miss Amelia Rives, the authoress, and John A. Chanler, of New York, were married at Castle Hill, near Charlottesville, Va., in the presence of a small band of relative friends. The ceremony took place in the library of the Garfield mansion, made famous during the memorable campaign of 1880. Rev. W. V. W. Davis, of Worcester, assist., formerly pastor of the Euclid Avenue Presbyterian Church of Mentor, where Mrs. Garfield and family attended, was the officiating clergyman, having come on from Massachusetts expressly for that purpose. A RICH GOLD FIND.

Two Prospectors in the Cascade Range Show a Forty-two-Pound Gold Nugget They Picked Up.

Two prosp ctors have arrived at Ottawa, Ontario, from the Cross Range of mountains in British Columbia with a lump of almost pure gold weighing forty-two pounds. They had it tested until satisfied of its value, and then shipped it to Montreal to be melted up. A reporter saw it and offered them $500 for their find, but the offer was refused. The men are silent as to where the lump was found. They are looking up the subject of mining rights, and will go west again immediately.

DEMOCRATIC LORD STANLEY.

The Actions of Canada's New Governor General Meeting Approval.

Lord Stanley, the new Governor General, took the oath of office on Monday, says an Ottawa (Canada) dispatch. His democratic actions have already become the subject of remark. He was on Parliament hill long before the general honor and enjoyed his waiting time in walking up and down the boulevard, chatting with Sir A. Caron, Sir Fred Middleton, and his aid-de-camp. After the guard had arrived Lord Stanley inspected the men, which no other Governor before him has ever done.

A BAD BLAZE.

The Works of the Indianapolis Veneer Company Destroyed.

Fire destroyed the works of the Indianapolis Veneer Company, the large cabinet ware factory of D. E. Stone & Co., and the lumber yard of A. Burkhardt, on Kentucky ave. Indianapolis. The aggregate loss will be about $100,000, with $53,500 insurance. While this fire was still burning a second alarm came in from the south-west part of the city, which proved to be a fire in a stave factory. The building was destroyed. The insurance will cover about two-thirds of the loss.

HONORS FOR A CHICAGO GIRL.

She Makes a Successful London Debut as a Prima Donna.

A cable dispatch from London says that Miss Scanlan, of Chicago, under name of Miss Columbia, made her debut at Covent Garden Theatre as Amina in Bellini's opera, "L'Alticaine." She was well received by a crowded audience. Her voice was especially sweet in the upper tones in the fourth act and in the closing scene. Madjeson, who was present, said it was the finest performance, and a splendid dramatic action and a good voice, which is especially rare in an American singer. Her reception was enthusiastic. She has a good future."

INTERNATIONAL TYPOGRAPHERS.

E. T. Plank Elected President—Other Officers—Next Meeting to Be Held in Denver.

The election of officers in the International Typographical Union Convention, at Kansas City, resulted as follows: President, E. T. Plank, of San Francisco; First Vice President, Charles Hayes, of Leavenworth, Kan.; Second Vice President, Columbus Hall, of Rochester; Third Vice President, J. J. Weldon, of Chicago; Secretary and Treasurer, W. B. Prescott, of Indianapolis. The term of office was changed from one to two years. It was voted to hold the next convention at Denver.

HIGH WATER CAUSING TROUBLE.

Sixty-five Families at Crookston, Minn., Forced to Leave Their Homes.

The Red Lake River, near Crookston, Minn., has touched eighteen feet above low water mark, and is up to the bridges. Some sixty-five families have had to leave their homes, some losing all their effects. At Crookston the Red Lake River is very high. The bridge between the junction and Thief River Falls is reported swept away and the big boom is in great danger.

AN UNFORTUNATE RIDER'S DEATH.

Solomon Strauss Unhorsed and Dragged Along the Street.

People in the vicinity of the Postoffice building at Cincinnati, Ohio, were horrified to see a frantic horse running close to the curbstone, dragging his rider. Where foot was fast in the stirrup, and dashing the boy's head against the curbstone from time to time. When the horse was stopped the boy was dead. His name was Solomon Strauss.

Ministers Nominated for Congress.

The Rev. J. H. Wilson has been nominated for Congress by the Prohibitionists of the Tenth Indiana District.

Solomon G. Comstock has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Fifth District of Minnesota, and if elected will succeed Kustre Nelson.

Charles Dwyer, Democratic member of Congress for the Second Iowa District, has been renominated.

Charles C. Townsend has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Twenty-fifth Pennsylvania District.

Abner Taylor has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the First Illinois District.

NO MORE BURCHARD.

The National Committee Does Not Care to Have "Rum, Romanism, and Rebellion" Repeated.

Preparing for the Republican Convention—Estimate of the First Ballot.

CHICAGO, June 15, 1888.

The inauguration of the formalities preliminary to the calling to order of the Republican National Convention took place, when the members of the National Committee assembled in these headquarters to settle all preliminaries.

Mr. Hiram Price, Chairman of the committee, presided, with Gen. W. L. Alexander of Iowa acting as Sergeant-at-Arms, and Theodore Roosevelt of Oyster Bay, N. Y., assisted by Carson Lake of New York. Twenty-eight States were represented by members or by proxy. Seated about the long table were the following gentlemen: Gen. Powell Clayton of Arkansas, E. F. Putney of Georgia, David T. Little of Illinois, John C. New of Indiana, Hiram Price of Iowa, Joseph Ross Leland of Kansas, Walter Evans of Kentucky, J. M. Hayne of Maine, James A. Gary of Maryland, R. G. Horr of Michigan, Dwight Merriam of Minnesota, Ira Evans of Minnesota, John R. Lynch of Mississippi, Robert T. Van Horn of Missouri, Joseph A. Hobart of New Jersey, A. L. Cooper of Ohio, Chauncey I. Filley of Missouri, W. P. Brownlow of Tennessee, N. W. Cuney of Texas, George W. Hooker of Vermont, Jacob Rich of Wisconsin, Clark Churchill of Arizona, Robert E. Wood of Dakota, Frank W. Mondell of Utah, Thomas S. Minor of Washington Territory, and Frank W. Mondell of Wyoming Territory.

The meeting was opened by Mr. Clarkson on behalf of the sub-committee of arrangements, who reported in substance the plan of seating that had been adopted, which was based on the plan used in the Chicago Lynch of Mississippi, Payne of Wisconsin, Clark of Arizona, Hayne of Maryland and Conger of Ohio took part in the discussion that the report gave rise to. Mr. McCormick is very popular, and the shouting created immense excitement, since the finding of Williams' body it is rumored that the negroes have banded together for revenge.

Mr. Clarkson called attention to the notice of adjourning Chamber. Several members of the committee at once intervened and the Chamber was cleared. The committee then adjourned, to meet again at 10 o'clock to-day. Only a few of the Democrats were present, and most of the Republicans were personal friends of the gentlemen. It will come out that most of the Republican members of the committee are for Sherman, and that the Democrats will be called upon to do the work of nominating the ticket. Another gentleman moved that the Chairman prepare every meeting be submitted in manuscript before delivery to the Chairman of the committee, that the Chairman thought the officers of the committee should be given time to do so, and that he would be obliged to do the work of the committee. The matter of prayers and Chaplains was then promptly relegated to the Sub-Committee on Arrangements.

Mrs. John A. Logan is in the city. She is looking Alger, and is firm in the conviction that he is all there.

Naval Holstead is doing yeoman service for Sherman with the Pennsylvania people.

The Gresham boom has perceptibly weakened within the past few days.

The Harrison men are not doing much shouting, but they are thinking the issue as solid for their man.

Mr. Fowler, of Arkansas, the veteran of many national conventions, is here. He says he would rather see the chances of Allison and Alger than for any other aspirants, save Blaine, and that Blaine was out of the field to stay, and he knows it.

All of the big guns of the party are against Gresham, Filley, New, Clayton, Hawley, Hooker, and the men who generally are smiling at his boom.

The Allison men are doing any loud shouting, but they are credited with doing a good deal of quiet work in the right way.

Alger, Allison, Gresham, Harrison, and Sherman are the chief factors in the contest, and the Ohio delegation is one-way in force and bending every energy in the direction of keeping their respective men.

The Daily News this morning gives the following estimate of the first ballot:

Interviews with numerous friends of the candidates indicate that the contest will be long and not as the writer result in arranging the contest there, and that the first ballot will be as follows: Sherman first, with over 300 votes; Allison second, with about 250 votes; Blaine, a fair fifth, with possibilities in favor of several other candidates.

If the contest does not end on the second ballot, that over five hundred of the delegates will be in Chicago who will have the opportunity to nominate him, and if the convention should be deadlocked on the second ballot not related his availability as a candidate.

The Pedigree of Mr. Blaine's friends is the following special telegram from Washington:

The Republican platform of 1888 has been formulated by the Committee on Resolutions in Chicago, and it is said that it will be found to be a very creditable document, and that it will be a workable platform of the party. It is not yet known how the Committee on Resolutions, but everything points to a Tariff Reform plank, and a strong plank in favor of the Monroe Doctrine.

The main features of the platform will be as follows: Reaffirmation of the principles of the party as expressed in the strong terms of the President's last message, and in the civil service promises as outlined in his letter accepting the nomination, and in the pledges given in his private letters, and in the long work of Senator Hoar and Representative Grosvenor of Ohio and Henderson of Iowa, in a general way it may be said that the platform will be in the spirit of Blaine, and it will be all sufficient in the strongest terms on the Tariff question, and the Monroe Doctrine, and the Chairman of the Committee of Resolutions is called to account for his game, at usurpation of the power vested.

The tariff plank is the joint work of Representatives Hoar and Grosvenor, and it will be found to be a very strong plank, and it will be the majority of the minority of the Ways and Means Committee in the House, and it will be found to be a minority report on the Mills bill, which recommends a Tariff Reform plank, and it will be a gentleman. It will come out that most of the work of the committee was done by Mr. Hoar, and that the Senator will be made as to the disposition of the surplus. Not much attention will be given to the Mills bill and the Tariff Reform plank, and the Secretary of the Treasury is not mentioned in the Chicago dispatches, and it is generally understood that the Secretary of the Treasury is not a candidate.

Senator Plumb of Kansas has written the Chairman of the committee that he would arrange the President for the way in which the Lake Lead Commission Bill, which passed the Senate, was defeated.

TO CLEAN carpets, go over them once a week with a broom dipped in hot water, to which a little turpentine has been added. Wet up a little more than a yard and set soft ones of the woolen fabric. Irregularly is one of the best laws of dress-making just now, but there is artistic arrangement and instinct.

The high English darts and manners are yet in vogue, and are as uncomfortable as of yore.

STRIPES are seen in preference to checks. Plain and striped silk dress patterns are a feature this season.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

MR. GRAY made a speech in open executive session of the Senate on the 11th inst. in favor of the ratification of the Samoan treaty. At the close of Mr. Gray's remarks Mr. Sherman moved the floor and further consideration of the treaty. On motion of Mr. Sherman, postponed till May, 1889. The Senate Appropriations Committee reported the resolution for the relief of the widow of Gen. Custer, with a substitute. The bill has been increased to $5,000, the amount paid to the widow of Gen. Custer, and $1,000,000 is made to carry out the right-hand rule in the distribution of surplus. The House concurred, estimating that $1,500 additional individual, by request, a bill appropriating $10,000 for the development and conservation of the resources of Alaska, by Mr. Dawes, was reported adversely. Mr. Cullom made a long general attack on Mr. Cox's tariff bill, and on the interstate commerce bill, which he said was a bill which he characterized, Nevada, as a "crude, ill-digested, and impracticable measure." In the House, Mr. Coxe, replied in a humorous vein to the speech of Mr. Cullom, the chairman of the committee, Mr. Springer, of Florida, introduced a resolution for the appointment of a committee to report bills repealing all laws providing for the appointment of United States officers, and authorizing the President to appoint officers, and providing that the President shall nominate to the Senate the officers for which the United States shall enter the ports of the United States, and for other purposes.

SENATOR CULLOM, of Illinois, addressed the Senate on the 12th inst. in support of his bill to amend the Inter-State Commerce law. Mr. Charles Foster, of Ohio, presented the credentials of Senator Gibson, of Louisiana, for the unexpired term of Senator Jones, of Arkansas. Elections and instructing that committee to report back the bill with a view to its passage, Senator Hoar said he would do so. The Senate had a heated debate on Mr. Stewart's resolution instructing the Finance Committee the day to the consideration of the Mills tariff bill, and on the Senate's action on the Mexican Pacific railway bill, which Mr. Stewart desired to strike from the free list flat, but which the committee had reported back with a recommendation to strike from the free list hemp, manila, and sisal, and to place upon the dutiable list. The bill was finally recommitted.

MR. DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS.

For President of the United States—
GROVER CLEVELAND, of New York.
For Vice President of the United States—
ALLEN G. THURMAN, of Ohio.

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in State Convention in the Detroit Opera House, at Detroit,

ON THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1888,

At 11 o'clock a. m., to nominate candidates for state officers and for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

According to the rule adopted by the state convention held at Detroit in 1885, every county is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes, but any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the counties they represent.

The delegates from each congressional district will meet in caucus at 10 o'clock a. m., on the day of the convention

I. M. WESTON, Chairman.
WM. J. MCGEE, Assistant Secretary.

Under the above call Charlevoix County is entitled to 6 in delegates, Committee Meeting.

There will be a meeting of the democratic county committee, at the office of A. D. Cruickshank, chairman, in Charlevoix, on Thursday, July 12th, at one o'clock p. m., for the purpose of naming four delegates to the State Convention to be held at Detroit, July 19th, and for the transaction of such other business as may come before the meeting

A. D. CRUICKSHANK, Chairman.
J. MILO EATON, Secretary.

To the outcry, "Give the poor man cheaper blankets," the grand old party replies: "Not any. We can't give the poor man cheaper blankets, but will give him cheaper 'booze.'"

The tariff attitude of the republican managers is one of defiance. They refuse not only to reduce the tariff, but to adjust inequalities they themselves admit. There are a good many earnest republican tariff reformers, and there will probably be two mugwumps this year where there was but one four years ago.

"FREE trade but not free trade"—necessary but not superfluous protection—a tariff for revenue but no tariff for surplus—is the democratic doctrine as expounded by Gov. Hill. This is the principle and policy that the World has steadily favored. It is the idea in the president's message. It is the basis of the Mills bill. And it is the platform laid down by the St. Louis convention.—N. Y. World.

HARRISON AND MORTON.

After six days of agony and turbulence, the republican party, in convention at Chicago, on Monday nominated Gen. Benjamin Harrison of Indiana for president of the United States, and Hon. Levi P. Morton of New York for vice president. Mr. Harrison is best known to the people of the nation as the grandson of president William Henry Harrison, who was elected president in the memorable campaign of 1840. He is 55 years of age, is an Indianian by birth, and a lawyer by profession. Mr. Morton represents the money interests of the empire state. He is a rich banker, and a very cultured man. Mr. Morton was one of the "300" who held out to the last for Grant in the convention of 1880.

A Shrewd and Bold Bid.

From the point of view of higher politics, the most interesting incident at the convention at Chicago yesterday, and indeed the whole convention, was that portion of the platform which finally commits the republican party to the abolition of the whole system of internal revenue. The question of the surplus made it absolutely necessary that the party should propose some specific measure for tax reduction, and this is the only one that is consistent with the continuation of the present protective duties. It is "Pig Iron" Kelley's pet scheme. It furnishes a counter to the democratic scheme for the reduction of duties, and it is a shrewd and bold bid for the support of one or two of the closer southern states. Above all, it is the first effort of the party to meet the surplus problem with a specific solution other than extravagant expenditure.—Evening News.

Wellington R. Burt.

It is now almost a settled fact that Wellington R. Burt, of East Saginaw, will be the democratic nominee for governor. It is a popular clamor from the people, and when the convention meets we expect to see him nominated by acclamation as unanimously as Grover Cleveland was nominated for the presidency. There is no question but he would be a tower of strength to the ticket. He is in hearty sympathy with President Cleveland on the tariff notwithstanding he is one of the largest salt producers in the state, and has large interest in lumber. Besides this he is extremely popular in the Saginaw valley among the lumber men, a strike never having occurred among men in his employ.—Charlotte Leader.

What is Beyond?

Valedictory essay by Miss Marguerite Enos, read at the graduating exercises of the Charlevoix high school, June 19th:

Our happy school girl life is a thing of the past; all its studies, pleasures, and real or imagined griefs; our little disappointments that now seem only things over which to laugh, but which then were perhaps borne with no small amount of murmuring, of complaining for our own benefit, and pouting for the benefit of the long suffering teacher.

But if we magnified our disappointments, we also magnified our amusements, and we did not outgrow this last trait as we did the other. No one sees the ridiculous side of occurrences in such a ridiculous light, as the school girl, and no one giggles more frequently or delightedly than she. Perhaps I might say the sane of school boys; I do not know. The members of this class have had very little opportunity to observe their habits.

It seems so short a time since we were little girls in school. How we looked with awe on the Misses of the graduating class of that time, and now very old and wise they appeared to us to be! We scarcely dreamed of ever attaining to their seeming knowledge. If we ever thought of their having once been no higher than we then were, it seems as if vast lengths of time must have passed since they were at the beginning. Now, looking back, time has flown so rapidly, our ascent has been so gradual and unnoticed, that our attainments do not seem so great, after all, compared with what they then seemed to us.

We think with regret, of the hours spent in idleness, of what we might have done, and of the opportunities wasted, for the loss of which we can never atone. But in spite of these lost opportunities, we still had in view some object. At first, it may have been only to get each day's lessons, with no thought beyond that; as we grew older, it was to reach a higher grade, a higher room, and gradually we grew to think of finishing the course as the goal to be attained.

In the beginning, we hardly thought of it; we did not look so far ahead; but, as we went from one class to the next higher, we began to realize that we were working for something beyond, and as our object became more definite and we drew nearer to this goal, so our interests increased.

To know that we are in the last year but one, is to feel almost as if we had a right to the distinction of being in the graduating class. There is a great satisfaction in the thought that we are almost ready to step into the shoes of the graduate, although they may not fit especially well, and we may not be able to proceed with any greater dignity, as we would naturally be expected to do. But when we do reach the last year, and draw on those shoes in which we expect to distinguish ourselves, who can blame us if we feel a certain elation?

Then it is, that we apply ourselves, we strive to make each day's work, the best that is possible; we talk of it days and we dream of it nights, and in proportion to our several ideas of what we are aiming, so we each think of it and work for it. Perhaps we exalt this object too much, or we make it seem the end of all. If, as we should do, we have looked upon this as only the gateway through which we may enter in that which lies beyond,—the future with all its possibilities for further attainments—we cannot fail to realize that we should greatly retard our future progress.

And now, as we stand at the gateway, before the gate which lets us into the future, is swung open, we turn back once more, to review the scenes with which we have been familiar. We see ourselves as children there is the old school house where one began her studies, and there, the place where another mastered her A, B, C's. So, there is brought before each one of us, the scenes and incidents attending our first school days. The faces of old friends from whom we have long since been separated, come before us. We see ourselves growing older, leaving those old acquaintances, and gradually drifting together, working together for a time, and then,—how inexpressibly saddening, as we turn toward the future and the gate opens a little way—to see ourselves drifting apart again! To feel that we shall never meet again under the same circumstances, never have the same relations to each other, never live again our glad school life together. We must take a last farewell to old associations. Thus, we linger, pausing in recollection, one after another, the mile-stones of our lives; stopping here and there, as some scene of especial interest attracts our attention and lingering longer and with greater affection, on our school days which we have passed together. However we may be scattered, our thoughts will always return to these days, and whenever our pathways cross—and may they cross often—we will greet each other with a kinder regard and a warmer interest, because of old associations.

But what of the future? What has it in store for each one of us? We cannot tell. It reaches on and on before us, but there are no vistas through which we may look and know. We can only remove obstacles as they come—and each obstacle removed, proves an advantage—thus clearing our path as we go along.

Why can we not all so live, that when this future becomes our past, it will be pleasant to look back upon? To a certain extent, we may each control our future. As we have different dispositions, so we have different degrees of ambition, and will make varied use of our opportunities. Now we are in a position where we may choose whether or not, we will pursue a higher course of study; and should that choice be denied us, still there is no cause for discouragement, for if we have the firm purpose within us, we can make of ourselves almost anything we choose. Surely there is not one of us contented to idly waste the opportunities offered, satisfied with the little already gained and which will certainly be lost if we remain inactive. There is so much remaining for us to accomplish, for when we endeavor to realize something of the possibilities presented to us, we must think, what a very meagre portion we have made our own! When we read the biographies of men of learning, the thought of our comparative insignificance, must almost dishearten us. But a great deal that is possible for others is possible for us; and there may be some among us, whom we shall be proud to own as friends and class-mates. However that may be, there is not one among us, who, by availing herself of every opportunity as it is offered, cannot make of herself an intelligent woman. It is very natural and easy to talk of what we intend to do and to make plans for the future; it is decidedly quite another thing to execute those plans. We should have some definite purpose in view, and follow that steadily. It is so easy to turn aside for little things, to neglect to take advantage of little things, and without realizing it, to allow our purpose to become obscured. If the time spent in planning lofty things, were utilized in pursuing a fixed purpose we would come much nearer to the attainment of something lofty.

Our studies so far, have had a twofold effect. Not only have we promoted mental discipline and knowledge but we realize the advantage it has been to us, and the pleasure we have taken in its acquisition, and desire to go on. The old adage "The more we have, the more we wish for," proves as true in this case, as in all others. The higher the plane we reach, the more are our sources of enjoyment—of literary enjoyment certainly. We grow to understand better and appreciate more, that is really elevating. We are no longer confined to the most ordinary literature, but a great wealth is opened to us. It is our privilege to enjoy that which has ennobled the great thinkers and minds, and no one can deprive us of the intellectual advantages gained. The broader our range of knowledge, the more there is for us to enjoy, and not only this, but the mind expands and develops and we are able to take an unprejudiced view of things, where if one line of thought is closely followed, the mind becomes narrowed.

Our capabilities increase with the discipline of our minds and our ambition increases with our capabilities and thus we are led higher and higher. By the thoughtlessness or indolent neglect of little things, we are led to the neglect of greater, we become dissatisfied with our progress and are easily induced to give up. By the opposite course, to become better and better able to rise and we will. But if we cannot all be great, we can all be good. It is said that "an honest man is the noblest work of God," should it not also be written that "a noble woman is the grandest work of God?" Is it not something to be the "greatest work of God?" There cannot be anything half so well worth striving for. All doubt we are unable to tell just what is in store for us, we know it is possible to make our lives well worth living; to make that our purpose—to use our best efforts to develop all that is noblest in our minds, to strive to develop intellectually—then there is in store for us, a future to which we may be glad to look forward; all our memories will be bright and as our pathway opens, it will continually brighten.

"So let us, then, the while we live,
May die as dies the natural flower,
A self-evolving thing of power;
That every act and every deed
May bear within itself the seed
Of future good and future need."

Presentation of a fine new banner by Maj. E. H. Green to the sons of veterans.

Exhibition of fire department.

At one o'clock sharp will be witnessed Bill Wild's Wild West. The greatest show of the kind on the road, will give a free exhibition. Be in time to witness this procession. The following are a few of the rare curiosities to be seen at this wonderful show. A live long-eared elk, a specie supposed to be extinct a thousand years ago, a jaguar or American tiger, a live buffalo, a Rocky Mountain zebra, or better known as the wild ass, the swiftest beast in the world, and many others equally rare and curious. There is in connection with this show a large company of noted Indian warriors, among which are the noted Chief Roaring Bull, the brave Red ground, and Big Bear, that stands on the rock.

There are also a large company of genuine cowboys, all mounted. Under the canopy will be exhibited the attack on an emigrant train by Indians, and the rescue of the train by the cowboys. The buffalo chase will conclude the grand entertainment. Don't fail to come and bring your families, as this is an opportunity of a life time.

Suitable prizes given for the following races. Horse race, foot race, boat race and other races and games, giving the athletes a chance to disport themselves.

All entries for any of the games or races must be made to the committee in charge by 10 a. m., who will make known terms and conditions. Games and races will be called by the marshal or assistant at the sound of a bugle.

Burns, Stevens & Co. have recently added eight new horses, five buggies, and several sets of new harness to their livery outfit, besides a windmill and numerous other improvements about the barn at a cost of over $1,300 and they are now able to accommodate the public better than ever.

The Schofield concert company gave two fine entertainments at the opera house last Thursday and Friday. The vocal music was of a class to which the words could be easily understood and the sentiment appreciated, while the banjo exercises were emotionally the best we ever heard.

The latest fad among young ladies is called "tips." They count every time a gentleman tips his hat to them and when they reach 100 tips the 100 recently, if unmarried, is supposed to be "the huckleberry" the young lady receiving the tip will marry. The "tip" craze is spreading with frightful rapidity.

"A paper that will secure manuscript for publication and then mangle it, is a very poor specimen."—Sentinel. Just so. Those papers which print all the news, in full or in abstract as their time and space will permit as soon as possible, are considered the most enterprising. There are many worthy examples.

P. A. Earl died at Chicago last Saturday morning, of heart disease. The remains were brought to Charlevoix on the steamer Petoskey, and the funeral services were held at the Congregational church yesterday afternoon, under the auspices of Pioneer Assembly 3311, K. of L. of which he was a member. Mr Earl was about 60 years of age, and leaves a widow.

With a day and a half of good working time after an entertainment or two even, before the hour of publication, anything short of a complete report would be considered an unpardonable slight. But time, space, and human endurance are limited as events of the past week abundantly prove. However, there is no objection to anyone running a continued story if they like.

At the invitation of Mrs. T. B. Smith, the editor and wife enjoyed a pleasant dinner at the Belvidere house last Sunday. Mrs. Smith gave such excellent satisfaction in her attendancy of the affairs of the hotel last season that she has been retained the present season. And last Sunday's dinner is a sufficient guarantee that everything will be as pleasant and satisfactory as could be desired.

The Nos family lost evening at Lake Winter, gave one of the finest entertainments ever given in our city. The instrumental music was unusually fine, and all the acts were well received. Miss Bertha Nos captured the hearts of the people at once, and her exhibition of marvelous skill elicited generous applause. Mr. Sam Nos she is a host in himself, and well worthy the generous applause given him. The entertainment will be repeated this evening with change of program and those who fail to attend will miss a genuine treat.—Petoskey Democrat.

Permission has been obtained from the postoffice department to have the mail from Petoskey carried on the Friant, but it must be done without expense to the department. As Mr. Cook must continue the stage, to supply intermediate offices and be ready for the mail, instead of receiving and delivering the mail to the boat at both places, the extra expense will have to be provided by subscription. There should also be a fund to compensate Capt. Wm. Gaskill for the care and responsibility of safely carrying the mail on his boat. Now if escorters and business men will the mail brought on the Friant to arrive at 9.30 instead of 1.00 as at present it will be necessary to go down into their pockets for at least $50 for the months of July, August and September.

The most important society event of the season was the marriage of Mr. Moses Blumrosen, of Manistique, and Miss Jennie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. Rosenthal, of Petoskey, which took place at the residence of the bride's parents on Tuesday afternoon. The ceremony was performed by Rabbi Coplan of Detroit. The ceremony consisted of the ancient Israel form and was very impressive. After the usual congratulations, refreshments were served in a large pavilion which had been erected especially for the occasion. Many fine and costly presents were received. Mr. Blumrosen is one of the leading business men of Manistique.—Democrat.

That Apology.

"Now, Mr. JOURNAL, in your next issue produce the proofs of what you state concerning the missing manuscript."—Sentinel.

All right, sir. After the exercises at the opera house were concluded we went to Prof. Enos, and asked if he would give us the manuscript of the essays. He said he had promised it to Mr. Smith for the Sentinel. We then went to the graduates and found them willing that we should have their manuscripts. The next morning they were all brought to the office. Afterwards in deference to her father's wishes Miss Enos came and took her manuscript away. We then asked Prof. Enos if he would try to get Mr. Smith to consent that we have the use of Miss Enos' paper for last week. He said he would. Afterward he returned and said he could not get it for us for last week "but that Mr. Smith seemed to hold him responsible for all the papers because of his promise.

As to making abstracts of the papers, we simply followed a time-honored and respectable custom—a custom that is adopted by enterprising newspapers everywhere. We had no time nor space to print them in full, and preferred to give the outline, while the matter was fresh.

No one regrets a controversy more than we do; but whoever thinks for a moment we are going to sit down quietly every time anyone says "No," will get left. It is a matter of business, and if we don't hustle a little for ourselves, no one will do say his thing for us.

Courteous Journalism.

The Sentinel says, "At all times we have tried to act neighborly and courteous toward it, journalistically, and its editor personally." Yet the same article ascribes to us "a condition of imbecility and depravity." This is very courteous, journalistically. And last Saturday, when in our office, he said, "Your hair grows down too close to your eyes, you ain't got any brains." This is also very courteous, personally. When you give that text chapter, Willard, just touch it gently. You forgot got a partner to share the responsibility as on a former occasion.

The Van Raalte Sank.

The propeller Favorite, while entering Muskegon harbor Sa urday night last, collided with the passenger steamer Van Raalte bound for Grand Haven, with about 75 excursionists aboard. The proper signals were given and responded to, but when nearly abreast, the Favorite veered from her course on account of some derangement in her steering apparatus and struck the steamer, crushing a hole in her bow three feet long. The Van Raalte began filling, but was hastily run alongside the north pier and her passengers landed safely. Soon afterward she sank.

Bernard Burns Dead.

At 3.30 o'clock this afternoon our people were shocked with the announcement that Bernard Burns was dead. Only last night he was about the streets apparently hale and hearty. At 6.00 o'clock this morning he went to the barn, attended to all his stock, and was just ready to return to the house, when he was stricken with a fit of coughing, with sharp pains in the throat. In a few moments the pains went to the stomach, followed by vomiting blood, cramps, and diarrhea, which continued with more or less severity until a few minutes past three this afternoon, when he died. Mr. Burns was about 63 years old. He will be buried Saturday at 12 o'clock, the funeral services to be conducted by the society of Orangemen, of which he was a member and an officer.

EARLY DAYS.

Romantic Incidents of the Settlement of Prairie du Chien, Wis.

The Gallant Defense of Fort Crawford Against the British, in 1814.

Jefferson Davis' Elopement with the Daughter of Gen. Zachary Taylor.

How Old Rough-and-Ready Was Cured of His Nose-Tweaking Propensities.

BY GEORGE P. MATHER.

The denial which Jeff Davis made some little time ago of the story of his elopement with the pretty daughter of Gen. Taylor reminds me of an incident in that romantic affair that was told by Hon. Daniel E. Burt, one of the pioneers of the State, not heretofore published. At the time, Taylor, then a Major, was in command at Fort Crawford, Prairie du Chien, and Davis, then a young lieutenant at the same post. Mr. Burt had settled on the main road between Fort Crawford and Galena, about midway of the two places, a few years before. At Mr. Burt related the story to me, he had just finished his chores one winter night, and was returning to the house when he heard the sound of bells approaching from the direction of Fort Crawford. He stopped, with his foot on the doorstep, and in a moment out of the woods came a male sleigh, drawn by one horse, in which were seated two ladies. The sleigh drew up, halted opposite the house, and the gentleman in quick, sharp tones, asked if they could stay all night. The latch string in those days was always out, and Mr. Burt at once responded heartily in the affirmative, and invited the pair to 'walk right in.' The invitation was quickly accepted, while their host took the horse, which showed signs of having been driven fast and far, to the stables. After seeing that the animal was well cared for, Mr. Burt returned to the house, where the travelers had already been made at home by the good wife. A traveler in those days was a godsend, as but faint echoes of the world's progress reached the pioneers in the backwoods. From the bearing of the gentleman, Mr. Burt at once came to the conclusion that he was an army officer. The companion was a young and very pretty girl, much agitated somewhat nervous and constrained. Contrary to usual custom, they avoided conversation, except to say they were relatives on route to Galena. To any and all leading questions the young officer replied briefly and in a non-committal way. The couple retired early, and were up and off soon after daylight. From a few rifflards dropped in his hearing, Mr. Burt arrived at the conclusion that if it was not an elopement it was something very like. He knew there were no army posts nearer than Fort Crawford, and he guessed the pair came from there. He afterwards learned that his surmise was correct, and that the couple were Lieut. Jeff Davis and Miss Sarah Knox Taylor, daughter of old "Rough and Ready." So far as he could learn Col. Taylor was not sufficiently impressed with Davis as to desire him as a son-in-law, and refused his consent to the marriage of the young couple.

The elopement followed.

The pair had expected to reach Galena the same night. Knowing Col. Taylor's energetic ways, it was no wonder they were nervous over their delay at Mr. Burt's. They were not followed, though having been turned in the wrong direction. This is the story as Mr. Burt related it in conversation, while at Crawford, from which the lovers fled, was at that time one of the most important frontier stations, and was erected soon after the war of 1812 to keep the Indian tribes in check. For many years it marked the frontier line. It is less than forty years since Congress was memorialized to station a company of dragoons there "to protect the frontiers." During its time the old fort has passed many an officer who rose to prominence later in the Mexican war or the Rebellion. Among those besides Taylor and Jeff Davis were Dick Taylor, the late Gen. Hancock, and others who afterwards became prominent. Crawford resembled the present Fort Snelling. It was occupied up to the close of the Mexican war, with the exception of a short time in 1827. During the civil war the old barracks were utilized for hospital purposes, if not some remains of the works be a part of the officers' quarters, that are incorporated in the handsome residence of Gen. John Lawler, and a section of the barracks now used as tenement houses. These are given in the accompanying sketch.

Very few people are aware that Prairie du Chien, where Fort Crawford was erected, is one of the oldest settlements in the country, and was a commercial center of note long before the revolutionary war. Beneath the prominent shelf of the old town is a block of history richer than that of any early New England village in story of Indian wars and sieges.

The Frenchman had penetrated there before the French and Indian war, and made the town the headquarters for the Northwestern fur trade. It used to be in his time in favor of England, which was not slow to recognize the commercial importance of the point. Although known to fame as the place selected by Fort Crawford for its defense, it was the scene of a memorable siege at the hands of a mixed British and Indian force. When the war of 1812 broke out, Prairie du Chien was left unprotected. After the fall of Detroit, the Government recognized the necessity of fortifying this point so as to secure control of the waterways and commerce of the section. Early in 1814 Lieut. Perkins, of the United States army, was sent with three boat-loads of men to erect a fort and garrison with the troops composing the expedition. By this diversion it was hoped to hold the Western tribes in check.

The fort was a fairly built, the central log house barracks being surrounded with stout works of oak palisades firmly set in the ground and backed by dirt. Two substantial block-houses flanked the works. The armament of the fort was very light. The artillery was concentrated on two gunboats commanded by Capt. Yeager, which was the first war flotilla known on the Mississippi.

The structure of no important a point caused quite a stir at Mackinac, then the headquarters of the British troops, and before the last palisade was in place an expedition had been organized to resist it. This led to a siege and defense which for brilliant achievements in arms stands out more prominently than any other incident in our early history. The attacking force consisted of eighty British volunteers, under the command of Col. McKay, with a swarm of Indian allies, which had been picked up on route. Fortunately, they were illy supplied with cannon, their only piece of artillery being a brass three-pounder.

The little garrison came very near being taken by surprise, saving heard nothing of the approach of the British forces, on the Sunday morning which preceded the siege. The officers of the fort were preparing to take a ride over the plain which extended back to Prairie du Chien, when a shot from the gunboat announced the garrison warned of the situation and coolly remarked that there were "ponies of red cattle down by the river."

That put an end to the ride and picnic which was to have followed.

Instead of tasting forks and punchbowls, muskets and ammunition were the demand. All the inhabitants who could hastened to avail themselves of the protection of the fort. The gates were then closed and the little garrison waited breathlessly for the attack. As the British force displayed more broad level plain, it was seen they could approach within a short distance of Northwest, unobstructed by any cover. Lieutenant Lieut. Perkins and his command, confident of the strength of their defenses, prepared to make a stubborn resistance. The two gunboats were anchored so as to protect the more exposed portions of the fort.

The Americans did not have long to wait. A round shot from the brass three-pounder of the besiegers opened the ball, and a lively artillery duel followed with but little damage to either side. Finding he could not effect a breach in the palisaded wall, and annoyed by the fire from the gun-boats, Col. McKay turned his attention mainly to them, meanwhile making arrangements to carry the fort by assault. Twice, everything was ready, but at the last moment the Indian allies refused to advance, warned by the effective fire of the besieged and by the fate which befell others of their nation when attempting to carry a fort further north.

The attack on the gun-boats was more successful. Two or three balls planted between wind and water led the commander of the flotilla to up anchor and flee down the river, leaving the garrison to its fate.

Discouraged by the failure to capture the fort and enhance their fight, Col. McKay ordered a lot of red hot shot prepared to fire the barracks and block houses. About this time the supply of powder ran short in the fort. The commissariat was also uncomfortably low, the gun-boats when the British force arrived, having drop their keg of powder down the river to re-enforcements could reach him, and learning the preparations being made to attack the walls. Lieut. Perkins arranged terms of surrender by which the garrison was allowed to march out with their arms and baggage, and drum and fife, followed by the British officers, these terms of surrender being not violated by the Indian allies, of course. Not only was the Indian force kept from the fort, but a guard was placed around it to prevent anything like an ambuscade. The casualties during this memorable siege were very light. An attempt was made to retake the fort by means of an expedition from St. Louis, but it was attacked and routed on the Rock Island rapids by a force sent from Prairie du Chien under command of Capt. Duncan Graham, by Capt. I. G. Anderson, then commanding the fort.

In accordance with the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, Fort McKay was at last given up, and occupied by the British in 1815, in Prairie du Chien, the place being known as Fort Shelburne. On the night after the evacuation the fort was destroyed by fire, supposed to have been set by some one left by the retiring forces.

When Fort Crawford was erected the Sioux were almost an unknown factor, and of those Redcoats of the plains, the Cheyennes, not so much was known as of the inhabitants of the Tongs islands. It was the treacherous Winnebagoes and crafty Sacs and Foxes who made the most dangerous quality in the problem of a peaceable occupancy. The removal of the garrison to Fort Snelling in 1826 gave the former an opportunity, and a massacre of the inhabitants of the flourishing village was arranged. The scheme was frustrated by the action of a chief named Red Bird and two braves. The murders took early in June, 1827, went to the house of Hon. Jas. Lockwood, and broke their way into Mrs. Lockwood's bedroom. The lady hearing them coming fled to the store of Capt. Graham, of Rock Island Rapids fame, and was saved by him. Baffled in their first prey, the Indians went further down the river, where they killed two men and scalped an infant, which they left for dead. Strange to relate, the child lived and became the mother of a large family. The news of the massacre soon reached the village and the settlers flew to arms. The Indians retreated and the Winnebagos, who followed, which was terminated by the dramatic surrender of Red Bird, who gave himself up to Major Whistler. He was brought to Fort Crawford, where he died of consumption. His two accomplices were sentenced to be hanged, but were pardoned by President Jackson.

When the Blackhawk war closed that noted chieftain was confined at Fort Crawford, where he remained until taken to St. Louis by Lieut. Jeff Davis, who turned him over to the United States authorities at that point. Warned by experience the War Department maintained a garrison at the fort until the commencement of the Mexican war. It was just previous to that time that Zachary Taylor was commandant.

LIEUT. JEFF DAVIS.

"Old Rough and Ready" had earned his nickname among his soldiers before Buena Vista. Although he was a rough character, and as kindly a heart beat under that homely exterior, he was something of a martinet, and a terror to the privates of his command, especially such as were accustomed to shirk from grace. Of this class was one unfortunate who was officer in the guard house on duty, which circumstance led, oftentimes, to the full retreat of Col. Taylor's wrath. Being directed against Private Blank when the engagement of the same did not seem exactly to warrant it. Among other peculiarities, the Commander of Buena Vista had a disinclination to allow objects to the nose and giving the tweaking of the same a place in his memorabrance for hours afterward. One day Col. Taylor happened to have his ire aroused by some offence by Blank, and he came striding down the line uttering numerous words not provided for in the regulations of war. Reaching the trembling private, in tones more vigorous than refined the outraged commandant asked what Blank meant by such an infraction of discipline—and, without waiting for a reply, reached for the prominent facial projection of the unfortunate soldier. In anticipation of the tweaking which was to follow, Blank had taken the precaution to his nose, and commencing with pork rind. His commanding officer's fingers therefore only closed on slip. Another attempt resulted in dismal failure, for this time the officers and man had grasped the situation, and a broad smile spread over the face of those who happened to be in the rear of the outraged colonel, while those in front indulged in most seraphic disturbances that threatened to result in a general laugh. The Taylor attempted to execute the favorite movement of his adversary, but the Blank, When he did he caught, it was something terrible to witness. Poor Blank was at once conveyed to the guard house and double-ironed, with a prospect ahead of seeing a court-martial, when his superior had evolved something commensurate with the offence. The sentence was then promulgated in a broad grin—when Col. Taylor was not about—and the story spread over the village.

When his anger had time to cool down, Col. Taylor began to appreciate the joke, and it did not need much urging to get his consent to have the court dismissed. The old fort began to go to pieces. Prairie du Chien, too, fell into decay, and ceased to be spoken of as the place of the pontoon bridge across the Mississippi.

DEADLY STRUGGLE.

Extraordinary Contest Between a Gorilla and a Lion in Central Africa.

The Giant Ape, Challenged by the King of Beasts, Accepts the Defi.

The Gorilla Superior as a Slugger and in Science—Is Combat Fit for the Cassars.

In the gloomy recesses of the primeval forests still to be found in Central Africa there is a wonderful battle still raging forth its unmeasured space to the monarch and the gorilla. The lion, the great traveler, gives the following account of the struggle he witnessed in Central Africa between a gorilla and a lion: My guide book, and to make my way through the jungle with his back against a tree, the shoulders of a huge gorilla. His head hung down by his sides, his legs crooked in front of him, and his long arms hung sideways on his shoulder. Some distance off a lion was lying, his head between his paws and apparently sound asleep. Suddenly the gorilla, emerging into the sunlight, commenced to beat his breast, and to keep watch and ward over the shoulders of the lion, and to sound the alarm. The scream of agony from the female, which was the signal for the battle, ceased, and it did so the female literally fell from a tree and rapidly by a force sent from Prairie du Chien under command of Capt. Duncan Graham, by Capt. I. G. Anderson, then commanding the fort.

In accordance with the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, Fort McKay was at last given up, and occupied by the British in 1815, in Prairie du Chien, the place being known as Fort Shelburne. When Fort Crawford was erected the Sioux were almost an unknown factor, and of those Redcoats of the plains, the Cheyennes, not so much was known as of the inhabitants of the Tongs islands. It was the treacherous Winnebagoes and crafty Sacs and Foxes who made the most dangerous quality in the problem of a peaceable occupancy. The removal of the garrison to Fort Snelling in 1826 gave the former an opportunity, and a massacre of the inhabitants of the flourishing village was arranged. The scheme was frustrated by the action of a chief named Red Bird and two braves. The murders took early in June, 1827, went to the house of Hon. Jas. Lockwood, and made their way into Mrs. Lockwood's bedroom. The lady hearing them coming fled to the store of Capt. Graham, of Rock Island Rapids fame, and was saved by him. Baffled in their first prey, the Indians went further down the river, where they killed two men and scalped an infant, which they left for dead. Strange to relate, the child lived and became the mother of a large family. The news of the massacre soon reached the village and the settlers flew to arms. The Indians retreated and the Winnebagos, who followed, which was terminated by the dramatic surrender of Red Bird, who gave himself up to Major Whistler. He was brought to Fort Crawford, where he died of consumption. His two accomplices were sentenced to be hanged, but were pardoned by President Jackson.

When the Blackhawk war closed that noted chieftain was confined at Fort Crawford, where he remained until taken to St. Louis by Lieut Jeff Davis, who turned him over to the United States authorities at that point. Warned by experience the War Department maintained a garrison at the fort until the commencement of the Mexican war. It was just previous to that time that Zachary Taylor was commandant.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—Measles have taken Bell site by storm.

—The St. Ignace people mean to have a high old time next Fourth of July.

—Merrill, Saginaw County, is to have an old-style Fourth of July celebration this year.

—Central Lake, Antrim County, is rent from center to circumference over a dispute over a name.

—Wheat in the southern part of the State has headed out and the harvest will be on within a fortnight.

—They know not what they do. The St. Ignace people are trying to get up a brass band as a permanent institution.

—Bellaire has a new paper, and is going to have water works, and has a band pavilion and other "city" appurtenances.

—Worms are reported to be destroying the strawberry vines in various parts of the State, and fruit growers find them a new and formidable enemy.

—The too abundant use of water on lawns and the continued wetting of shaded places is said to be injurious to health. Malarious fevers are said to be the result.

—Ionia is to have a new hotel, and the citizens are now canvassing for the funds. The proposed structure is to be four stories high and to cost $40,000.

—Jay R. Monroe, a young man of usual promise, and Cashier of the Kalamazoo Savings Bank, of Kalamazoo, died of pulmonary consumption.

—Women lawyers are becoming a power in the land. Michigan University has already sent out twenty-four young women finishing the course of law. This year a young woman from the Sandwich Islands, Miss Alma Hitchcock, will make the twenty-fifth.

—The officials of the Soo Road and the Atlantic Elevator Company were in Gladstone the other day. The object of their visit was to select a site for a grain elevator which will have capacity for a million bushels, and will be built at once.

—A recent fire destroyed the principal business portion of Norway. A strong wind was blowing and the flames jumped rapidly from one wooden building to another. In the burnt district none was saved, and careful estimates place the loss at $200,000, with very little insurance. The weather was cold and stormy, and many were seriously suffering among the homeless. The business part of Norway is in ruins, and the principal buildings burned. More than five hundred people are sufferers. The largest losers by the fire are: C. L. Embury, general merchandise, $25,000; Hasson, hotel and fixtures, $8,000; Patenaude, drugs and jewelry, $6,500; Lindquist, general merchandise, $6,000; J. H. Gee, $5,500; F. Levy, generals, $4,000; Kosenhainer, general merchandise, $4,000; Masonic building, $4,000.

—Reports from thirteen places chronicle the storm of the 10th inst. was general, and unprecedented in the annals of Michigan. The storm broke like the bursting of a water-spout, and continued for two hours, accompanied by heavy lightning. All the country from the Wisconsin line to the upper range and the whole width of the peninsula suffered. In all, for fifty miles from Houghton the work of the deluge was most damaging. At Houghton, Calumet, Lake Linden, Hancock, Lake Linden, Tamarack, Mesnard, Nonesuch, Ishpeming, Marquette, and as far east as Seney the storm was terrible. In approximation of damage is possible. Houses were undermined, and in some cases swept away; culverts and bridges were destroyed, and miles of fences and sidewalks were washed away. Although several railroad culverts were destroyed and washed out, but travel was generally delayed on all the peninsular roads. Three culverts on the Duluth, South Shore and Atlantic Railway near Baraga were washed away. The damage will require much time to repair. The water was so high in all the streams.

—The State Board of Agriculture meeting recently closed was confined principally to a consideration of topics relating to the interests of agriculture, and to Prof. Bailey in the chair of horticulture was not appointed, but it is thought he will be appointed may fall upon Prof. Taft, of the Missouri University.

—Fire in the capsule factory at Ann Arbor destroyed the entire stock and one of the buildings. Loss $15,000; insurance $12,000. The fire was without doubt the work of an incendiary.

—Hargreaves Bros. & Tripp, lumbermen, at Detroit, have made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, to Francis G. Russell. Assets, $2,374.85; liabilities, $7,072.39.

—The body of Charles Maiden, of Cheboygan, who committed suicide several nights ago by jumping into the river, has been recovered, disproving the theory that he had not drowned himself, but had left town.

—Fred Plant is a Huron County farmer. He has in the habit of keeping a smudge burning day and night to keep away the pesky mosquitoes. One day, during the absence of the family, the high wind carried some sparks to his house. Neighbors discovered the flames in time to save Plant's furniture. There was no insurance on the house.

—The high water in the Sturgeon River and in Sturgeon Bay do Noc caused the dams of the Van Winkle Lumber Company to be carried away, and a big log jam resulted. Several million feet of sawlogs have been scattered through the woods for miles, and to get them back into the stream will necessitate an outlay of many thousands of dollars. One report says it will cost $20,000 to replace the dams and remove the obstructions from the river.

—Some time ago Hattie, the wife of Edwin Wartens, of Norway, left him and returned to her family, and she has possessed was burned up in the great fire. She was on the street, when she met her husband. He demanded her return to his house. She refused. He at once shot her with a revolver, then picked her up, and, at the muzzle of the revolver, marches her through the streets to his house. She was terribly injured, but caught her to move. He is in jail at Iron Mountain awaiting the appearance of Judge Lynch. The poor woman will probably die.

—The Michigan weather-service supplement to the monthly crop report says that the temperature for May was four and four-tenths lower than the normal for thirteen years. The rainfall was three and fifty-one-hundredths, which is slightly above the normal. The central portion of the State had the greatest amount. The prevailing winds were from the ——. Frosts were reported on eight days previous to the 20th. The percentage of vitalization of weather and temperature signals was 83-2-10 per cent. Signals are displayed from 140 stations and from baggage-cars of twenty-six railroad trains in the State.

FARM AND GARDEN.

TIMELY TOPICS CONSIDERED IN A PRACTICAL MANNER.

Opportune Hints About Cutting and Curing Grass, with Advice in Relation to Stacking the Hay—A Good Ventilator for Hay Stacks.

Progressive farmers have laid aside the sickle and the scythe for the horse mower, and not a few employ the labor saving implements of hay tedder and horserake in the curing of their hay crops. This saving of time and labor means, where large areas are to be gone over, a saving of health and money as well.

A VENTILATOR FOR A HAY STACK.

Where a haying machinery is to be used the farmer who takes time by the forelock will have in readiness, so that there will be no needless delays when the press of work comes on this account. Implements already on hand will be put in good working order, and such new machinery as is required selected.

When the grass is heavy let the dew be partly dried before beginning the cutting; about noon the hay tedder may follow the mower, and toward night the grass raked and put into cocks. Care should be taken not to use the tedder after the leaves have dried, if there is much clover, as it will crumble and waste a valuable portion of the hay. When the day is fair, with probabilities of continued fair weather, many farmers practice cutting their grass in the middle of the day, or toward evening, and leaving it until the next day.

Burning too long in a hot sun is bad for the newly cut grass, as this renders it brittle. Dry sunless weather, with little dew, presents the best possible opportunity for making hay. Much of the best clover hay is only fairly wilted when it is raked into cocks; in this case the cocks are opened once or twice and exposed to the air a few hours, and then put up again. If not well cured, hay keeps better in a close mow in the barn than in a loft or in a stack that is exposed to the air.

A ventilator will do much to preserve hay stacked when damp. There are many kinds. The one shown in the cut is advised by Prairie Farmer as being as good as any, and is described by that journal as follows: The three heavy poles should be set in the ground rather firmly and fastened together at the top. This not only acts as a ventilator but will help to keep the stack from settling to one side. It will also assist in keeping the center of the stack from settling faster than the outside, this slanting the hay so as to carry the water off. A pole or rail from the center to the outside laid on blocks will let the air into the ventilator. A V shaped trough with the open side down will answer the same purpose, and may have a screen or stakes over the outer end to keep vermin out.

Tying Up Lettuce and Early Cabbage.

The Gardeners' Chronicle, in the way, are exceedingly desirable, being tender and of fine flavor, are greatly improved by tying up to blanch. Fold the soft outer leaves carefully around the heart, or centre of the plant and bind the whole firmly, but carefully, with twine.

Tying up of the leaves of early cabbage is much practiced by the London market gardeners, says Gardening. Illustrated, and is economical. The operation is simple of time; the fact, the same as above described for the Cos lettuce.

A TIED UP CABBAGE.

There are several good reasons given by the gardeners for this practice. The center being protected from the weather, the cabbages is hard, sooner by two or three weeks than they otherwise would do, and they are more easily handled in gathering and packing for market. The plan is one that is seldom adopted in private gardens, but there can be no doubt that it is one that can be recommended, says as good authority as J. T. Lovett, the well known New Jersey market gardener, inasmuch as there is a gain of a week or two as regards cutting, and compact little cabbages are always preferable to loose ones, which, moreover, are apt to get broken or otherwise injured in gathering. It may be worth while to test this method with our early cabbages.

Silage on a Noted Dairy Farm.

Messrs. Smith, Powell & Lamb, who have 50 of nearly all the crops grown on the farm for silage, first corn most desirable and profitable, clover next, but pre fer for stock a part of each. They say:

Corn should be drilled thin enough to produce ears which should be well glazed before cutting. We would leave it lying in the field one to three days to wilt and partially dry before ensiling. Cut one-quarter inch, pack thoroughly and see that the corners of the silos are well filled. We prefer to fill one silo three or four feet and then change to another, leaving the first two or three days to heat. When full and the last filling has heated, cover with building paper, on which place matched planks. We weight about one hundred and fifty pounds per square foot, but some parties have good success with very little weight. Clover should be cut when nicely in bloom. It may be put in the pit and kept nicely without running through the cutter, but it will require less room in silos and probably give better satisfaction to cut it.

The New York assembly has passed a bill giving a bounty of two cents a head on all English sparrows killed.

MODES OF APPLYING MANURE.

Different Opinions Expressed on a Subject of General Interest.

It is not an easy matter to lay down general rules in regard to the application of manures that will be wise in all cases.

Opinions differ somewhat as to the economy of spreading farm yard manure upon the surfaces of fields or lawns in late autumn or early winter. Circumstances also cause here as elsewhere. It seems, however, reasonable to maintain that winter top dressing should be restricted to level fields; for both rain and snow must sweep manure from frozen hillsides before its constituents have had any fair chance to soak into the ground.

There are advocates both at home and abroad of the practice of carting out fresh manure from the barn yard as fast as it is made and spreading it directly on the fields. The chief gain in such practice is doubtless the saving of labor.

The spreading of short manure upon grass in the spring, or in the autumn even, is no doubt commendable in many situations as a means of maintaining the same. A chief objection to the system of surface spreading, which applies particularly to light leaching soils, is that the soluble portions of the manure, as they lie on the ground, are liable to dry out to a peat like substance that is not specially useful to the growing crop.

However manure may be applied, it is of importance to secure its equable distribution in the soil. In a general way, it may be said that horse droppings and manure from sheep pens should be applied by preference to cold clayey loams, or to moist soils rich in humus. These hot manures tend to warm and enliven the land. On the other hand, the slowly fermenting cow manure is preferred for warm light soils. On light sandy soils it will be found a good plan when using horse manure to mix it with some slow sort, as cow or swine manure.

Comb Honey in Small Packages.

In Gleanings in Bee Culture is described the plan of a Michigan apiarian by which he gets two small packages of comb honey that have proven very popular in his market.

A seven-eighths board is selected just long enough to slip inside of a Langstroth frame. Then with a jack plane, set coarse, he scoops off the shavings. The shavings of course roll up, but he tumbles them into a pail of water, and when they get well soaked, they are straightened out, piled up and dried. This gives thin strips of veneer, and cheaper than you can imagine. He then fires a board as in the second engraving. The langstroth frame is slipped over this board.

These little blocks are made by gluing a three-eighths board on top of a seven-eighths board, as you see. Now, with a circular saw, cut grooves clear through the thin board until the saw strikes the thick one. These grooves are of such a width that three of the afore mentioned strips of veneer will drop into each groove, the strips running lengthwise of the frame. When this is done, three short pieces of veneer are dropped into the grooves crosswise. But to make these bits of wood stay in place when the frame is pulled up, a little glue is put into each corner with a camel's hair brush. You want to be careful so the glue will not run in too far, and stick in the fore. Before you put in the glue, however, drop some little squares of foundation into each little section. The glue should just catch each corner of the foundation. When the whole thing is dry, lift it off and hang it in the hive. When the little sections are full and sealed over, take frame and all to the grocer: slip off the outside, and show him that he can separate the squares into long strips. With a sharp knife he can now cut them up into little cakes as wanted. If a customer wants two, four, six or eight, let him have them all in a slice, to save handling so many loose pieces.

PLAN FOR MAKING SMALL SECTIONS.

Of Interest to Bee Keepers.

The query recently sent out to authorities on bee culture by "Gleaning in Bee Culture"—"Do you prefer the entrance at the end of the frame? Why?" elicited quite a number of replies including pluls of which is conceded by the residents of the town "It has 15 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lameness for many years; could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and am able to do all my own housework. I owe my thanks to Electric Bitters for having renewed my youth, and removed completely all disease and pain." Try a bottle, only 50c. at Dr. G. W. Crouter's drug store.

Toothache.

Did you ever have a crooking, jumping, snapping, roaring, bothersome, toothache, that kept the whole family in an uproar until 2 o'clock in the morning? Maybe you have it, but all have not heard of the wonderful cures made by Hamilton's Toothache Drops which are warranted to cure in one minute. Safe, yet effective. Price only 25 cts. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Got to Stand it!

Mr. A. bought his wife one bottle of Burnett's Blood Purifier, and now he thinks he has got himself into business for she declared so much benefit from it that she must try another bottle or two and be permanently cured. There is no Purifier known so efficient in its working as this. Only $1.00 per bottle. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Beckien's Arnica Salve.

The Best Salve in the world for cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Worth Knowing.

Mr. W. H. Morgan, merchant, Lake City, Fla., was taken with a severe cold, attended with distressing cough and running into consumption in its first stages. He tried many so-called popular cough remedies and steadily grew worse. Was reduced to flesh, had difficulty in breathing, and was unable to sleep. Finally tried Dr. King's New discovery for Consumption, and found immediate relief, and after using about a half dozen bottles found himself well, and has had no return of the disease. No other remedy can show a record of cures as does Dr. King's New discovery for Consumption. Guaranteed to do just what is claimed for it. Trial bottles free at Dr. Crouter's drug store. 4

Cholera.

And the milder forms of bowel difficulty, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, &c., all come from a disordered digestion attended with pain in the Stomach, Cramps, Colic, &c. Be wise and ward off these attacks by taking Hamilton's Jamaica Ginger Tonic and Pain Cure, which is a sure remedy. Never known to fail to give immediate relief. As an outward application in Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Sprains, Strains, Lame Back and Side it can't be beaten Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Renews Her Youth.

Mrs. Phebe Chosley, Peterson, Clay Co. Iowa, tells the humiliating remarkable story, the truth of which is conceded by the residents of the town "It has 15 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lameness for many years; could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and am able to do all my own housework. I owe my thanks to Electric Bitters for having renewed my youth, and removed completely all disease and pain." Try a bottle, only 50c. at Dr. G. W. Crouter's drug store. 4

The Wide Awake.

In the June Wide Awake Margaret Sidney gives an amusing story of home life, called "Eurania's Boys and How They Kept House," which teaches mothers nor boys will think far out from the truth, though both are married. F. Anstey, the author of Vice Versa and The Tinted Venus, has a funny story too, "Don." Chronicling the heroic treatment of a deceitful greedy little dog by a young lady of fortune. Edward Everett Hale begins "The Story of Boston Common" and tells about the witches and the Whipping Stone and the old train-band parades and the cow-pastures of this celebrated old park. Another historic field is surveyed, over the sea, by Amanda B. Harris, in "The Wild White Cattle of England"; Landseer's famous painting. "Wild Cattle of Chillingham," is reproduced to illustrate the paper, together with a lifepicture of Cadzow herd. Elbridge S. Brooks writes about "Polo," and Henry Brooks, the Salem antiquarian, has an illustrated article about "The Old Tinder-box." Frank C. Crowninshield, wife of Commander Crowninshield, U. S. N., begins a good training-ship serial, "Plucky Smalls; His Story," full of fun, pathos and adventure, drawn from life. Mrs. Sherwood in "Double Roses" goes on with experiences of Phyllis and Wilhelmina in New York City. A good coin-story, "The Red, Red Copper," is begun, following the article last month about "The Pleasures of a Young Numismatist." There is a capital little paper on "Two Ways of Making a Birthday Book," and a good biography of La Fontaine, and Mrs. Lemmonnier writes about "One Asiatic Consin, the Arabs." Margaret Eytinge, Cavazza, M. E. B. Mrs. Margaret Delaland and Mary E. Wilkins contribute poems of the number; everybody should read "The One Hoss Shay" of Holmes, a year. D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston, Mass.

A Happy Family

Circle is the greatest blessing of our civilization, but such a thing is not possible when disease and death lurks on the threshold. One of the most important matters to be attended to, is that the Liver and Kidneys are in a healthy condition. More trouble arises from derangement of these organs than any other cause, often resulting in Diabetes, Bright's Disease, and other difficulties that are generally counted incurable. Parmelee's Dyspepsia, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Cure will prevent and cure all these difficulties with great certainty. Large bottles $1. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

THE NEWS RECORD.

A Summary of the Eventful Happenings of a Week, as Reported by Telegraph.

Political, Commercial, and Industrial News, Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Suicides, Etc., Etc.

A DAY IN CONGRESS.

Routine Work Transacted by Both Houses.

Communication of the public land bill was resumed in the House the 27th, the ayes and noes being taken on Mr. Holman's amendment retaining title in the Government to coal mines found on the public lands, but allowing entrymen to mine such coal deposits until Congress sets further order. The amendment was adopted, and the bill was then passed. When Mr. Mills called up the bill for the relief of Pennsylvania suggested, on his individual responsibility, as a means of expediting adjournment, that the tariff bill be laid aside until next session. He felt compelled to make the suggestion because of the fact that the surplus is kept down by an entire repeal of the tobacco tax. Mr. Mills rejected the suggestion, and made a counter proposal that an early day be fixed for taking a final vote on the bill. No action was taken. In the Senate, House amendments to Senate bills authorizing the construction of bridges across the Ouachita river, Arkansas, the Mississippi river at Muscatine, Ia., the Missouri river at Nebraska City, Neb., the Columbia river between Oregon and Washington territory, the Mississippi river at Quincy, Ill., and the Illinois river at Peoria, Ill., and the Mississippi river at Clinton, Ia., were severally concurred in. The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the River and Harbor Appropriation Bill.

LYNCHED FOR HIS CRIME.

Wallace Mitchell, the Kansas Murderer, Hanged by a Mob.

Wallace Mitchell was returned to Syracuse, Kan., from Trinidad, Col., whither he fled after murdering Oscar Johnson, aged 15, and wounding August Johnson, the boy's father, in an attempt to rob him. He was taken before a justice and pleaded guilty of the crime. He told the story of the murder with the utmost sang froid, and as if it was an every-day occurrence. At the conclusion of the testimony he was remanded to jail until the September term of court. The coldblooded cowardly act of this fiendish deed by the prisoner excited the people, and about midnight a hundred armed men succeeded in taking him from jail and hanging him to a telegraph pole.

GO UP IN SMOKE.

Various Fires Causing Heavy Losses.

A fire at Fort Apache, Ariz., destroyed the entire quartermaster and commissary supplies. The estimated loss to the Government, including buildings, is $100,000. Fire destroyed the across-the-road-house, corn house, and other departments of the Isabella furnace at Isabella Station, Chester County, Pa., together with valuable machinery. Loss over $50,000. The Mexican freight depot and adjoining building in Paso del Norte, Mexico, were burned, together with about seventy freight-cars. A large amount of freight was also burned. The estimated loss is about $200,000.

SAD END OF A PLEASURE EXCURSION.

A Steam Yacht Struck and Sunk—Two Ladies Drowned.

The small pleasure yacht Enid was struck by the steamer James W. Rankin, a mile north of Newburg, N. Y. There were eight persons in the small boat, and two of them, Miss Anna Miller and Mrs. Benjamin Odell, Jr., were drowned. The rest were rescued by the steamer. Miss Miller was the daughter of David Miller, of New York, and Mrs. Odell the wife of the Republican State committeeman in the Fifteenth Congressional District.

CHARGES AGAINST A CONDUCTOR.

Marshall Lafferty Imprisoned for Embezzling Ohio and Mississippi Tickets.

Marshall Lafferty, a conducter on the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad, has been bound over to the Grand Jury, at Cincinnati, Ohio, in the sum of $5,000 on a charge of embezzling. It was in testimony that he took up tickets from passengers and appropriated them to his own use by failing to cancel them, or to return them to the proper officer. The amount of his embezzlement is considerable.

Killed by Dynamite.

Thomas Prentice and Patrick Rooney, workmen engaged in blasting out stumps at the New Park, Wellsville, N. Y., were instantly killed by the premature explosion of a dynamite cartridge, and Henry Wilback was seriously hurt.

Body Exhumed.

The body of Margaret Lears, who died at Logansport, Ind., aged 20, and was buried, was exhumed for post-mortem examination. It having been ascerted that her death was caused by criminal malpractice.

George Wilson Hanged.

George Wilson was hanged in the Albion, Orleans County, N. Y.) Jail for the murder of his wife on the night of Jan. 17, 1887.

Iowa Roman Catholics.

The Roman Catholic Mutual Protection Association of Iowa has elected the following officers: President, the Rev. James Barom, of Lenane; Vice President, W. E. O'Brien, of Independence; and Louis H. Kurtz, of Des Moines. It was decided to hold the next convention in Fort Dodge next June.

Fatal Explosion of Powder.

An explosion of powder in the warehouse of a fertilizing company at Louisville, Ky., burned Henry Burkhardt fatally, John Johnson dangerously, and John Willets severely.

WATERY GRAVES.

Fifteen Hundred Persons Lose Their Lives by High Water in Mexico.

The particulars of the terrible disaster on the line of the Mexican Central Railway, particularly at Leon and Silao, Mexico, are made known. During ten days the tableland between the City of Mexico and Zacatecas were visited by unprecedented rains. Every mountain rivulet along the Central Railway for more than two hundred miles was converted into a destructive torrent, and the valleys presented the appearance of lakes. Many cities and towns were inundated, and Leon and Silao were partially destroyed. The rain raised the Silao river out of its banks, the water passing through the streets with irresistible force and volume. About 525 houses were destroyed. The station buildings were occupied by homeless people, who were unable to obtain anything to eat except watermelons and fruit found floating on the water. The flood was more destructive in Leon than in Silao. The scene as the water rose beggared description. People believing themselves secure from the flood went to bed. The steady downfall of rain, with the extensive water-shed of the outlying country, increased the flow of the river and rapidly extended its channel until over half of Leon was under water. Houses tumbled in rapidly, having been worn away by the scour of the road, inflicting a fatal wound. He then turned his pistol upon himself, killing himself instantly. He then fired four shots into his body, and fell mortally wounded.

DISASTROUS FIRE IN NEW YORK.

Flames in Gotham Cause a Loss of Nearly Half a Million Dollars.

Fire in New York partially destroyed the Grand Union hotel and its building extending from Thirty-eighth to Thirty-ninth street on First avenue. It was occupied as a cigar factory by Lichtenstein Brothers, Brown & Earle, and Foster & Hilson. The estimated loss on the building, owned by George Ehret, is $100,000; on the stock of Lichtenstein Brothers $100,000, and on the stock of Foster, Hilson & Co., $250,000.

PLAYED THEIR VICTIM ALIVE.

A Band of Masked Fiends Butcher Charles Gross in Missouri.

A telegram from Pulaski County, Missouri, says a bold outrage was committed there by an organized band of men. About midnight a party of masked night-riders rode up to the house of Charles Gross, a wealthy farmer, and dragging him from the house carried him a mile away, and there whipped him to death. The alleged cause is the divulging of secrets of the Knights of Honor.

DEATH IN AWFUL FORM.

William Patterson, While Being Slowly Strangled by the Sheriff, Calls Upon the Almighty for Mercy.

William Patterson, tried and condemned at Louisville, Ky., as the accomplice of Albert Turner in the murder of Jennie Bowman, April 3l, a year ago, suffered an awful death on the gallows. When he ascended the scaffold he made a short speech, asserting that he was innocent of the crime. When the drop fell probably the most horrible scene ever witnessed on a scaffold ensued. The body dropped four feet and then sprung upward. For two minutes it quivered silently at the end of the rope. Then occurred something unprecedented in the history of hangings. In a deep guttural tone from beneath the black cap came distinctly the words: "I curse them." Suddenly the hanging man's hands, which had been left untied, the arms being pinioned behind his back at the elbows only, came together in a position as if for prayer. The legs drew up until they almost touched his breast, and while his body writhed and twisted he uttered in a voice that could be distinctly heard, "Lord have mercy upon me." The rope had slipped completely around and rested on the point of his chin. He had hung by the back of his neck until choked from the rear. His sufferings were awful.

CROP CONDITION AND PROSPECTS.

Rains Having Good Effect in the Northwest—Harvesting in the South.

The weather during the past week in the grain regions of the Northwest has been generally favorable to growing crops, and prospects have improved in the Upper Mississippi and Missouri valleys and in Michigan, although heavy local rains in Missouri are reported to have injured winter and delayed harvesting. An excess of rain is reported at Washington, from Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi, which has been unfavorable to the cotton crop. In the west portion of the cotton region less rain and clear weather would, doubtless, benefit the growing crops, while in the east portion, including Alabama, North Carolina, and South Carolina, the weather has been favorable to crops. In Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, moisture is needed, while generally throughout the Middle Atlantic and New England States the weather of the past week has improved the crop conditions. Harvesting is in progress in Tennessee and Kentucky, where the weather conditions have been favorable for wheat and corn, but unfavorable for grass.

VICTIMS OF THE WAVES.

A Steam Yacht Runs Aground and Upsets, and Six Passengers Are Drowned.

A party of sixteen ladies and gentlemen of Newark, N. J., hired the steam yacht Gilmette and left that city for a pleasure excursion. It being flood tide the jetty at the mouth of the bay was covered with water. The pilot had scarcely got his bearings when he heard a sharp, grating sound, and realizing that he was on the jetty, stopped the engine. Several of male passengers jumped over on the jetty and in doing so the boat lurched and slid off into deep water. The girls then made a rush for the side of the boat. This caused her to keel over suddenly and in a second she turned bottom side up. Rescuers hurried to the scene, but were unable to save all. Louis Graff, Gussie Lutz, Lizzie Celius, Minnie Burg, Gussie Webber and Amelia Fricke were drowned.

CELEBRATED 100 YEARS OF LIFE.

Daniel Bartlett of Ohio Advances to the Age of His Brothers.

Daniel Bartlett, who is, so far as can be discovered, the oldest inhabitant in Crawford County, Ohio, has celebrated his 100th birthday. Mr. Bartlett is now living where he has lived for the last sixty-four years. He is quite supple and lively for one of his years. He does a few chores, feeds two pigs and one cow, and bids fair to attain the advanced years of some of his ancestry, who died at the age of 110 and 114. Two of Mr. Bartlett's brothers died at the advanced ages of 105 and 108, and a sister in Maryland, if living, is near 102. Mr. Bartlett is in good health.

A DISASTROUS FIRE.

The Albuquerque Indian School Destroyed for the Second Time.

The main building of the Albuquerque, New Mexico, Indian School, which was nearing completion, has been totally destroyed by fire. There were ten employes and 170 sick pupils in the building at the time the fire broke out, all of whom escaped. The school was conducted by the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, and the loss, which amounts to nearly $25,000, will be severely felt, especially as last August the institution sustained a loss by fire of $30,000. The Board will at once rebuild. The insurance is only $5,000.

STRUNG THE NEGRO UP.

William Moore, Who Assaulted a German Girl, Taken from Jail at Charleston, Ill., and Strung Up.

William Moore, the negro who committed a criminal assault on a young German girl near Mattoon, Ill., was taken from the jail at Charleston by a mob and rushed down near the railroad war-rank and hanged to a beam. The assaulted girl, Mary A. Baumgardner, aged 16 years, and not very bright, went to Mattoon from her home in Effingham. Moore was arrested and bound over in $1,000, but met summary justice at the hands of indignant citizens.

SALED HIMSELF WITH MURDER.

A Worthless Drunkard Shoots His Wife, Her Friend, and Himself.

A bloody triple tragedy is reported by telegraph from Minneapolis, Minn.:

Silas Robbeson is a big, six-foot teamster, on account of whose drunkenness and general worthlessness he was petsed by his wife two years ago, mondest, and, Mrs. Robinson lived with her mother, Mrs. Bowen, and in a cottage near Lake Nokomis. Mrs. Bowen is a young man of 22, employed as a clerk, and had long been intimately acquainted with Mrs. Robinson, though nothing of an improper character had been noticed by the family. Last the case, Robbeson walking in to Mrs. Bowen "You have been going with my wife too much," he said, and then pulled a revolver and shot at the road, inflicting a fatal wound. He then turned his pistol upon his wife, killing her instantly. He then fired four shots into his body, and fell mortally wounded.

GROVER ACCEPTS.

Officially Notified that He Has Been Named for a Second Term.

He Accepts, and Says He Will Be Heard From Formally in Due Time.

WASHINGTON, June 27.

The committee appointed by the St. Louis convention to inform President Cleveland of his renomination, together with the members of the National Democratic Committee, called upon the President at the White House yesterday afternoon, and formally notified him of his renomination. Mrs. Cleveland and nearly all the members of the Cabinet and their wives were present.

Senator Patrick A. Collins, Chairman of the Notification Committee, addressed the President as follows:

"Mr. President, we come as a committee authorized and instructed by the National Democratic Convention, recently held at St. Louis, to notify you that it is the action in making you its nominee for President, that the Democratic party of this great Republic, assembled in the exercise of your prerogative to express a preference for a President, has selected you as its standard-bearer of the Democratic hosts in the great contest which will be waged for the principles and purposes which we have long cherished and which we believe to be essential to the well-being, if not the existence, of our free institutions. Your nomination was made by acclamation, and the unanimity of your selection, if any, was due to the recognition of your wise, just, and patriotic administration of the office.

Mr. Charles B. Jacobs of Kentucky read the following as the Democratic platform:

"Resolved, That we, the Democrats of New York, in the delegates to the National Democratic convention assembled, in the city of St. Louis, do hereby declare our adhesion to the principles and the policy of the Democratic party, and pledge our support to the nominees of the National Democratic convention, Grover Cleveland, for President, and Allan G. Thurman, for Vice President of the United States, it has been our duty to inform the President, through the committee to formally announce to you that, in the judgment of the Democratic party, you have been the standard-bearer of the Democratic hosts in the great contest which will be waged for the principles and purposes which we have long cherished and which we believe to be essential to the well-being, if not the existence, of our free institutions. Your nomination was made by acclamation, and the unanimity of your selection, if any, was due to the recognition of your wise, just, and patriotic administration of the office.

DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS.

For President of the United States—
GROVER CLEVELAND, of New York.

For Vice President of the United States—
ALLEN G. THURMAN, of Ohio.

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in State Convention in the Detroit Opera House, at Detroit,

ON THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1888,

At 11 o'clock a. m., to nominate candidates for state officers and for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

According to the rule adopted by the state convention held at Detroit in 1886, every county is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes, but any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the counties they represent.

The delegates from each congressional district will meet in caucus at 10 o'clock a. m., on the day of the convention

I. M. WESTON Chairman.
WM. J. MCGEE, Assistant Secretary.

Under the above call Charlevoix County is entitled to four delegates.

Committee Meeting.

There will be a meeting of the democratic county committee, at the office of A. D. Cruickshank, chairman, in Charlevoix, on Thursday, July 12th, at one o'clock p. m., for the purpose of issuing four delegates to the State Convention to be held at Detroit, July 19th, and for the transaction of such other business as may come before the meeting.

A. D. CRUICKSHANK, Chairman.
J. MILO EATON, Secretary.

CADILLAC has organized a young men's tariff reform club.

THE laboring men of the Saginaw Valley are solid for W. R. Burt for governor.

EAST JORDAN has organized a Cleveland and Thurman club, with forty-two names the first night. Good for East Jordan.

WASHINGTON dispatches say that senator Sherman is mad at the result of the Chicago convention and proposes to expose the methods of Alger and Foraker.

THE Chinese of this country are enthusiastic in their support of Harrison for president, because of his efforts, while in the senate to further Chinese immigration.

EVERY American boy and girl should know how to make the American flag in its proper proportions. The rule in the ...vy is this: "The flag is thirteen stripes wide and twenty-one stripes long. The union (blue) is seven stripes square. There is one star for each state in the union."

Is a canvass by the Grand Rapids Democrat as to first choice for governor on the democratic ticket, 180 responses call for Geo. L. Yaple, 153 for W. R. Burt, 20 for S. O. Fisher, others scattered. For second choice 82 call for Geo. L. Yaple, 70 for W. R. Burt, 52 for S. O. Fisher, 48 for Peter White, 36 for Henry Chamberlin, others scattering.

FOR 20 years the proposition to free from taxation alcohol used for art purposes has been urged, but always met with the objection that no taxing system could be devised that would distinguish between the alcohol used in the arts and manufactures and that which went down with boy drinkers' throats. How can such a distinction be made unless the government has officers to watch every print of alcohol and report how it is used?

In 1876 Samuel J. Tilden, a civilian ran against Rutherford B. Hayes, a soldier, and fairly mopped the earth with him. The soldier racket was worked for all it was worth in that remarkable campaign, and the memories of the war were fresher than they are to-day. The presidential contest of the present year will be fought on the lines of principle, and the united hosts of democracy will knock out its high tariff and free whiskey opponent in elegant shape. —Lansing Journal.

THE republican platform, adopted at Chicago, may be found on our inside pages. It is a queer make up and is "in direct contradiction of the history, of the principles, of the teachings, and the oft-recited promises of the party in whose name a conspiracy of unscrupulous politicans has put...t forth. Lincoln would have repudiated it with disgust and loathing because it antagonizes individual liberty and the rights of the people in the interest of a favored and would be aristocratic class. Henry Wilson would never have assented to it. Salmon P. Chase would have scanned it. Garfield, Grant, Arthur, McCulloch and Folger left words on record which condemn its most vital parts, and we mistake the character and temper of intelligent republicans of to-day if many thousand of them do not condemn it with their ballots, as their representative newspapers have through many many months condemed its suggestions in advance."

THE money now lying idle in the federal treasury resulting from superfluous taxation amounts to more than $125,000,000, and the surplus collected reaches the sum of more than $60,000,000 annually. Debauched by this immense temptation, the remedy of the republican party is to meet and exhaust by extravagant appropriations and expenses, whether constitutional or not, the accumulation of extravagant taxations. The democratic policy is to enforce frugality in public expense and to abolish unnecessary taxation.—National Democratic Platform.

Wages—Syllogisms.

I do not affect elaborate tables They are so common as hardly to be read, especially when they refer to wages under the tariff. A table may show a low scale of wages for England and a high scale for the United States But what does it prove? Let me reproduce here, in syllogistic form, these logical sleights of hand or mouth.

Thus argues the protectionist

England has free trade. England has low wages Ergo, free trade produces low wages

Again The United States has protection. the United States has high wages. Therefore protection produces high wages. [laughter.]

Now, one may very easily parody such chop logic, thus

England has a house of lords; England has low wages Conclusion, the lords make wages low [Laughter.

Or, the United States is infested with tramps The United States has high wages Therefore, tramps make wages high. [laughter.]

Ireland has no stakes. Ireland has low wages Argal. Stakes make wages high. [laughter.]

Apply the same argument to Russia. Russia has high protection. Russia has low wages Therefore, protection makes wages low

Turkey—will the gentlemen excuse me for this reference? [laughter.] Well, Turkey has a low tariff—8 per cent. Turkey has the Koran. Therefore, the Koran makes wages low [laughter.]

The truth is, as has been frequently stated on this floor and proven, that wages are a matter entirely irrelevant to the discussion of tariff, depending upon the law of supply and demand, and the circumstances, situation and resources of the country. [Applause.]

I have discussed. Mr Chairman, very often here the relation between the tariff and wages I will not enter upon that further now, except to say that by the reports of our consuls and notably the one issued at Birmingham, Mr. Schoenhof and by a comparison of tariffs and wages in other countries, it is safe to conclude that the tariff does not affect wages in the sense in which the Republicans claim it. No man is a large, however, from these relations between wages and prices and tariffs, as to the beneficial results to the people.

A country like ours, which has 250,000 inventions protected by the patent law, 916 families had $.957,812 income as well recognized, and with her artisans and laborers replete with intelligence and ability, need not fear competition from nations which have withdrawn, at great cost, millions of their productive citizens for standing armies The nations we compete with we have one man for every twenty-four of the population in the military in the United States we have but one man in 1,610 of the population.—Hon. S. S. Cox in House Debate.

Free Wool Hurts No One.

"If Mr. Burrows desires information he can find it in the tariff debates of 1857 preceding the adoption of the Republican act which placed nearly all kinds of wool on the free list. A few benighted compromisers predicted blue ruin, and "being found hard and fast by foreigners," as gibly or as basely as Mr Burrows does now, but the result was that during the four years following the free listing of wool that product commanded the best maintained prices for any consecutive four years in the history of the country

How does Burrows get around that fact? A slight wool duty was imposed in 1861, a stronger one in 1862, and so on until the high protective duties of 1867 were reached Under the latter wool has sagged down in price, and the number of sheep in the states between New York and Nebraska has decreased nearly one half Mr Burrows own state of Michigan, had in 1867, when the high wool duty was imposed, 4,028,767 sheep, while in 1886, after thirteen years of high protection, only 1,930,655 remained alive. How does Mr Burrows explain that?

Mr Burrows ought to know that the United States is the only civilized country that now thinks of levying an import tax on such product as wool. No country produces all the varieties of wool needed for mixing in making fine woolen goods, and hence when the import is free woolen manufacturing has a great advantage and the demand even for the home product is strengthened The lack of wool duties has not "ruined" sheep husbandry in England, France or Germany, and did not in this country when, under virtual free trade in wool, prices were better than at present and better maintained through terms of years than they ever were under high protection.—Chicago Tribune.

Will Be Answered Later On.

While the Republicans were adopting the bloody shirt plank of their platform at Chicago Senator Sherman, by a coincidence not severely singular, was making a bloody shirt speech in the United States senate. Vest, of Missouri, answered him there, and the people will answer his party in November.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

ASTOUNDING STATISTICS.

How Tariff, Trusts and Monopoly Have Made Millions Homeless.

In 1850 there were 2,598,207 families in this country who had 3,362,337 dwellings to live in. at that time only 235,903 families were separately with their separate homes for themselves In 1860 there were 3,216,954 families, and they lived in 4,969,692 houses or dwellings Thus 241,249 families were without separate homes in all the land. The families had increased 1,612,692 in numbers, and all of them had new homes but 5,839 Glory allelujah! The millennium is at hand, and the protective tariff has done this surely One million six hundred and twelve thousand six hundred and ninety four new families in the past decade, and all but 5,839 possessed of new homes. All hail and glory to a protective tariff! But hold on. This period from 1850 to 1860 was the period of lowest tariffs this country ever knew or had.

From Sept. 14, 1851, to March 3, 1857, it had enacted four tariff laws, the duties running lower and lower until the last only ranged from 4 to 30 per cent., averaging 18 per cent., instead of from 10 to 300 per cent and averaging 45 per cent., as does our present tariff What comfort in the land is expressed in the figures 1,612,694 new families in ten years, and all living in new homes except 5,839! Surely it must be a low or revenue tariff that did it. No discontent abroad in the land then! Tramps unknown, the word is not yet coined

Now let us look at the decade from 1873 to 1880, a decade under the highest tariff this country has ever known; one claimed by its friends to be a d ntirely protective tariff. In 1873 there were 7,579,363 families living in 7,042,883 dwellings During the decade from 1873 to 1879 the number of families without dwellings had increased to 828,515, as in 1850, out of 5 per cent., or 5,839 out of 100 per cent.—yes, of 123 per cent.

But, observe, this is under a era of a high protective tariff imposed between 1860 and 1870 Yet what misery is revolved in the figures 295,328 families unable to find a separate house or dwelling, either to buy, build, or rent to live in, as against 5,839 families in the decade from 1850 to 1860 But the opposition will say this is a consequence of the war period. Be patient and let us see what was in the war.

We will now look to the decade from 1870 to 1880 for the story In 1880, 9,945,916 families had 8,955,812 dwellings to live in. In this decade the families increased 2,366,553 in number, but the dwellings only increased 1,912,079, leaving a total of 995,108 families in the land without separate homes or dwellings

Thus in this decade the 828,515 unhoused families of 1870 had increased to 168, an increase of 482,596 in ten years, an increase of almost 58 per cent. In this decade, as against 123 per cent from 1860 to 1870, as against 5 per cent from 1850 to 1860, of homeless and houseless families for Democratic times and a low tariff, as against 123 per cent. and nearly 100 per cent. for Republican rule and a protective tariff running through two decades.

Poor men of the land, choose ye whom you like the best, and then, in November, 1888, do your duty at the polls like free men, who, knowing your power, dare assert it.—Mr. Maguire, of Missouri, in House Debate.

"All Wool and a Yard Wide."

Congressman John E. Russell, of Massachusetts, put the whole question regarding free wool and the tariff as concisely and plainly as any man who has yet spoken on the subject. In the course of conversation he said

"The protectionists are constantly talking of the great injury that will be done to the millions of people who are dependent on the sheep raising industry, and that if the tariff is taken off they will be in a worse condition than the pauper shepherds of Europe. It is to be regretted that The annual value of all the wool raised in the country is $70,000,000 and about 2,000,000 persons are said to be engaged in the industry That means that each of those persons receives exactly $35 a year under the beneficent provisions of a high tariff Think of it, $35 a year! It seems to me they ought to welcome any change that would alter this state of things, and the advocates of protection should consider the wages paid to these shepherds when they talk about the pauper labor of Europe."

Why They Stick.

Many Republicans are sticking to Blaine because they hesitate to choose between Sieva Lockwood, Billy Wo and John Sherman.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Republicans Favor Millionaires.

The minority report of the ways and means committee signed by William D Kelley Thomas M Browne, T B Reed, William McKinley, Jr., and J. A. Gorfield, claims that the Republicans during twenty years of their control of the house of representatives reduced the revenues $262,000,000 in round numbers

Assuming this statement to be true, which it is not in some respects, let us see how these so called reductions were made, for whose special benefit, and for whose injury The expenses are to be found in Mr Mills speech The Republicans begin their "reduction" by raising the tariff rates from 18 to more than 40 per cent. average. They created the internal revenue system

Among the items of the value of the tax on home manufactures, which in 1865 brought in a revenue of $127,000,000 That was now clean in price with the value of the manufactured products of that year, which had an increased production of 22 per cent. as against the former tariff

There was also an income tax which produced $72,000,000 in the year 1866.

The official reports show that in a population of more than 45,000,000 at this time only 451,777 persons had incomes above the exemption, and they represented the enormous average income of $797,000,000. The remaining thirty-four and a half millions of "plain people," as Mr. Lincoln called them, had only sufficient resources from their different forms of labor for a decent and too often a very pinched support.

Now these two internal taxes operating directly on prosperous manufacturers, then enriched by exorbitant gains, and a class with great incomes, yielded together $200,000,000 every year to the treasury, in round numbers. Had these taxes, falling on a wealthy class most able to bear them without the least strain, been continued for ten years, the public debt would have been extinguished.

Then there were the 5 per cent. taxes on railroad companies, insurance companies and express companies, taxes on bank capital, deposits and bank checks to swell the aggregate of so called "reductions of revenue" in the minority report.

All these taxes, which only touched wealth and prosperity, were wisely established by Republican congresses, while not a tax was preserved from the burdens that bore hardest on the poor and affected the industry That remained and were forced to carry the load And in this way what the tariff was revised by a bill which originated in the house of territory to the constitution, the Republicans reduced the tax on playing cards and put 50 per cent tax on the Bible.—Washington Sentinel.

One Thing He Knows Well.

Mr Ingalls may indeed be placed upon the expressive adjective-day, and it might be well to put him there as early as possible. It would not be amiss to have one day in each week devoted to the world's grasp understandingly the great chicken pecas that are sent up from Kansas.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

No, Indeed.

Some enterprising gentlemen in the west are hunting up Mr. Ingalls' records Although we have no absolute knowledge of the matter, we venture the opinion that it will not be a great way ahead of the record of either ex-Hancock or McClellan.—New York Graphic.

The Real Issue of the Campaign.

We are upon the verge of the most important political contest of the century The privileged classes will employ every possible artifice to mislead, and will strain every nerve to the utmost extent to wrest victory from the common people that they may continue to live at public expense and exact tribute from the hard hand of honest toil What the result may be man can tell

The pending bill is a moderate measure. If it should pass the tax remaining would average fifty per cent Violent or radical changes should not be suddenly made. For twenty years the business of the country has been adjusted on the basis of protection The Democratic party does not propose any radical disturbance of existing conditions There is no reason for any uneasiness We simply propose to assert the right of the people who pay the taxes to levy them, and then gradually to make such modifications of the tariff as will be just to all interests and reduce the volume of taxation to the needs of the government.

Against this reasonable demand the Republican party makes war in the interest of the protected class The president, speaking for the tax payers, has challenged the issue, and the coming fall will see the battle upon this issue His message was the heaviest single blast that has been blown for many years It rang out like the insistent call of a bugle to those upon whom liberty is peril Already there is terror bordering on the panic. A month hence the storm will break and will grow increasing fury until truth and right shall triumph or Slovenism or its beaten down by the victorious arms of an aristocracy more omnipotent by the power of money —Mr Stone, Missouri, in House Debate.

Golden Rule in Politics.

A New York paper presents each morning at the head of its editorial column a text of Scripture. The text seems to be selected without any reference to the appropriateness, but still the plan is a good one If the Republican papers would read the Bible more they would not have the nerve to advocate the impudent and high tax which is now their favorite theme.—Omaha Herald.

In his message of 1853, President Pierce said the cost of the pension roll was $2,365,447 for the year. This was in excess of all ordinary expenses, and along that the country was prosperous, according to the argument of those who think it treasonable for the Mills bill.—St. Louis Republican.

"Tariff Did It All"

An old farmer near Coldwaville, Ills., has made the same discovery and writes it to The Chicago Inter Ocean, that the products of his farm will buy a great deal more of the necessities of life now in 1889—therefore, he concludes, burn up the benefacent tariff! And this is a fair specimen of the "arguments" advanced by the votaries of war taxation. That money sinks more expensive and rapid progress in a new country, resulting half a million immigrants a year, inventing and perfecting machinery and building railroads without pauses, should have improved the condition of a land owner, is indeed a wonderful discovery—for a war tariffite. Is there any other money under heaven or beneath any man that requires such far fetched stuff to support it?

And after all the records show that the old farmer is wrong, for the lowest price of wheat in New York in 1850 was $1.40 and the highest $1.60, against 85 cents and $1 at present, while corn then averaged 75 cents, oats 42 cents and four $5.10 per barrel, and unless the cost of freight was four times what it is now the farmer was certainly cheated And what did the farmer have to pay for his sugar then? Well, first grade Bio coffee retailed at from 10 to 13 cents a pound, leather at 30 to 36 cents, molasses $1 per barrel and pig iron at $22 to $23 per ton; and if this old farmer gets that things much cheaper now, he is in error. Indeed, the figures indicate that the monopolists have "bogged" all the gains from the improvements of twenty-nine years and left the old farmer about where he was in 1853

The funeral of Bernard Burns took place last Saturday in his own grove. The immense crowd and the many floral offerings gave evidence of the great esteem in which he was held by men by Rev. B. H. Whitman, and remarks by Mr. Adams, Master of the Orangemen, of which order Mr. Burns has so long been leader in northern Michigan, were both touching and appropriate.

Our Barnard correspondent having stated last week that the Smithson lecture at the Barnard school house was not very well attended, we are requested to state that the audience by tickets amounted to $10.50, the lecture was very interesting and instructive and at the close, over $35.00 was pledged for the organ fund; so that any person, who is interested in music will be pleased to hear that necessary instrument—cash.

Up in the northern lakes lies the fairy Isle of Mackinac, which, on account of its great natural beauties and remarkable summer climate, has been reserved by the United States government as a National Park. It lies in the midst of some of the most charming scenery and some of the finest fishing grounds, anywhere found in the country. The Michigan Central which is the best route to this delightful isle, has just published a profusely illustrated book descriptive of this region, which will be sent to any address upon receipt of ten cents, by O. W. Ruggles, G. P. & T. A., Chicago, Illinois.

Fire at Smithson's Camp.

Last Sunday afternoon it was reported that fire was uncomfortably near to Smithson's camp and that the mill, store, and other property was in danger. The fire department was on hand to the camp, and was taken on a scow, with 100 or more of our best men. They fought the flames all night, and until Monday afternoon, before it was considered safe to return to Charlevoix. All household goods and movable property was taken to the dock, and the whole attention was devoted to saving the buildings, lumber and shingles. About three hundred acres were burned over, the value of which cannot easily be estimated. The fire is supposed to have been started by Indians.

THE GLORIOUS FOURTH.

A Fine Day, a Big Crowd, and Everybody Happy.

The rain of Tuesday evening cooled the air, laid the dust, and put every body in a mental and physical condition to enjoy the exercises of our national anniversary. All the early boats on Wednesday morning were literally crowded with people coming to Charlevoix. From Petoskey, the Friant, Cyclone, and Lou A. Cummings brought all the law would permit, and the Pine Lake boats did the same from Boyne and intermediate landings.

Very early in the morning, the streets were full of people, and the crowds surged to and fro all day long, and till late into the night, receiving large additions from the afternoon boats.

Booths and boweries grew like mushrooms, and numerous catch-penny traps did a flourishing business.

The parade at 9.00 o'clock included the Petoskey band, Charlevoix fire department, G. A. R., Sons of Veterans and other societies and citizens. The Charlevoix Cigar Mfg. Co. took a leading part by putting up an elegant display of all their brands of cigars and the employes taking part in a body.

Maj. E. H. Green was to present the sons of veterans an elegant banner, but for some unavoidable cause it did not arrive.

After dinner the "Wild West" occupied the attention a few minutes,—laughable while it lasted.

In the boat race there were seven entries three in the men's race, and four in the boys, Frank Wrisley secured the men's prize, and Joe Meanvials Jr. the boys.

In the horse race Chas. Tobey took first prize, and Wm. Bolton second.

In the foot race there were seven contestants, and B. B. Forbes of Harbor Springs took the prize.

In the jumping contest there were three participants. R. A. Emrey and Tom McGuire were a tie and divided the prize.

During the afternoon the Petoskey and Charlevoix base ball clubs played a friendly game, resulting in 20 for Petoskey to 9 for Charlevoix, Jas. Gish, umpire.

Two dances were in progress all day and evening.

An unfortunate spark spoiled the display of fire works by burning a large proportion of them at once.

The revelries continued until past midnight.

The committee of arrangements can congratulate themselves on having drawn to Charlevoix the largest crowd of people ever within our limits, and so far as we have heard everything was pleasant and satisfactory.

Orangemen's Day

District 17, of the American Orangemen, will celebrate the eighteenth anniversary of the Battle of Boyne, at Charlevoix, July 12th. There will be a parade, plenty of good music, and addresses by several prominent speakers. All lovers of Protestantism are cordially invited to be present and enjoy the exercises. Excursion rates on all boats. The steamer Lou A. Cummings will give an excursion from Cross Village and intermediate ports.

The Farming Interests.

It is easily shown that not more than 5 per cent of the labor of the country is affected by our present tariff in the way of protection. Other members known to the relation which the agriculturist bears to the protective tariff have seem to be not protected at all. But the other must be as well protected of other countries, with their cheap forms of labor. We must sell his crops at prices fixed by the paper labor, not only of Europe, but of Asia and Africa, since the price of wheat in this country is regulated by the price of the European markets The whole world contributes its supplies to those markets, and the peasants of Russia, Hungary and India, with their cheaper labor, are rivals of our farmers. Therefore, our farmers are in direct competition with the cheapest labor in the world.—Hon. S S Cox in House Debate.

Sherman's Little Boom.

Visitor at residence on h street, Washington, D C (in great alarm)—What frightful noise is that? Is it a cyclone? Host (reassuringly)—That noise? It's nothing, my friend. We are used to it. We hear it every morning about this hour. John Sherman lives next door. He is winding up his boom and it sends groans—that's all.—Chicago Tribune.

The Latest Outrage.

The latest crime of the Mills tariff is dwelt upon with an indignant sense of its strange duty by our esteemed contemporary The Journal. By placing the article of borax in the free list it has been the chance of bringing

THE PLATFORM.

Declaration of Principles by the National Republican Convention.

The Third Day Largely Consumed in Nominating Candidates.

Alger, Allison, Gresham, Harrison, Depew, Sherman, and Others Named.

The Convention Overwhelmed by a Flood of Oratory—How the Speeches Were Received.

CHICAGO, June 22, 1888.

Chairman Estes called the third day's session of the National Republican Convention to order at 10:05 o'clock yesterday morning, and Rev. Thomas E. Green of Chicago invoked the divine blessing. The first order of business was the calling of the States for hanging memorials of the National Committee.

The roll was called by the band, Chairman McKinley of the Committee on Resolutions stepped upon the platform and was greeted with loud applause. I am instructed by the Committee on Resolutions," said Mr. McKinley, "to report the following declaration of principles:"

The Republicans of the United States, assembled by their delegates in national convention, make for that purpose to harass innocent citizens with spies and prosecutions, under the false pretense of exposing fraud and enforcing the law.

The governments by Congress of the Territories is based upon necessity only, for the end that they may become States in the Union; therefore, whenever the conditions of population, material resources, public intelligence, and morality are such in any Territory as to warrant the belief that upon the people of such Territories should be permitted as a right inherent in them to form for themselves constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union, upon terms of equality with the other States, such privilege should be accorded them in the usual form and manner. We hold that the bona fide residents and citizens of the Territory wherein they are were, South Dakota should of right be immediately admitted as a State in the Union under the Territorial formal and simple form of government, and we heartily unite with the people of Dakota in their present pressing bills for her admission. The refusal of the Democratic House of Representatives, for partisan purposes, to favorably consider these bills is a willful violation of the sacred Democratic pledge to the people of the Territories, and merits the condemnation of all just men. The pending bills in the Senate for acts to enable the people of Washington, North Dakota and Montana Territories to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union without unnecessary delay. The Republican party pledges itself to do all in its power to facilitate the admission of the Territories of New Mexico, Wyoming, Idaho, and Arizona to the enjoyment of self-government as States, such of them as are now qualified as soon as possible, and the others as soon as they may become qualified.

The political power of the Mormon church in the Territories, as exercised in the past, is a menace to free institutions too dangerous to be long suffered. Therefore we pledge the Republican party to appropriate legislation asserting and maintaining the supremacy of the laws over those who assume to disregard them, and in furtherance of that end to place upon the statute books legislation stringent enough to divorce the political from the ecclesiastical power, and bless civilization with the extinction of polygamy. The Republican party is in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money, and condemns the policy of the Democratic administration in its efforts to demonetize silver.

We demand the reduction of letter postage to a uniform rate of two cents.

In a republic like ours, where the citizen is the sovereign and the official the servant, where the power is exercised simply by the will of the people, it is important that the sovereign—the people—should intelligently exercise the franchise in the selection of that intelligence which is to govern them. We therefore demand that a high standard of intelligence, coupled, should support free institutions of learning sufficient to secure to every citizen a fair and equal opportunity of a good common-school education. The Republican party favors such legislation as may be taken by Congress to the end that such legislation as will best secure the rehabilitation of our American merchant marine, and we protest against the passage by Congress of a free-ship bill, as calculated to work injustice to labor by lessening the wages of those engaged in producing the material to be transported in the proposed free ships. We demand appropriations for the early rebuilding of our navy for the construction of coast fortifications and modern ordnance, and other approved modern implements of war, in order that our country may be secure from the insult and the outrage of foreign invasion and capture; and for the State of Lincoln, Grant, and Logan, I nominate as a candidate for President of the United States the son of Illinois by adoption, Walter Q. Gresham." (Great applause.)

Senator Dolph of Oregon, in a speech in second, Mr. Davis of Minnesota came forward to the platform and seconded Gresham in behalf of Judge Gresham in a pretty little speech of ten minutes.

Messrs. Lynch of Mississippi, McCall of Massachusetts, and Lewis of Montana, then seconded the nomination of Judge Gresham, on behalf of their respective States.

"I speak for a State of Indiana," when every one interested in Harrison set up a howl, and Col. John Dunlap, ex-Senator Jones, and Judge Taylor, of Indiana, tried to get him from the stand, but the man refused to be budged from his place. "I speak not to make a nominating speech," said he. "The Republican party of Indiana has entered a remnant of the Confederate Army, Albert G. Porter, to present their candidate for President of the United States, Benjamin Harrison!" (Applause.) In October, Indiana's Republicans will be in the battle, and we will go to Republican victory. Indiana's Republicans will go to Chicago, and New York and the nation will hear of Indiana's protection at home and fellowship and protect him abroad in whatever land he may be in in a lawful errand.

The man who abandoned the Republican party because it was controlled by the Democratic party have deserted not only the cause of honest government, of sound finance, of freedom, and of the rights of the people, but especially have deserted the cause of reform in the civil service. We will not do so. We will not desert our principles, we will not desert our party, we will not desert our candidates, we will not desert our cause, we will therefore repeat our declaration of principles in this regard, viz:

We reaffirm the policy of appropriating the public lands of the United States to actual settlers, not speculators, in such quantities and upon such terms as will best secure the permanent occupation of the land by the people of the United States, and which has brought our people to Washington into such magnificent development. The restoration of unearned land grants to the public domain, which have been made in violation of the intention of Congress and the administrative policy of the Government. We deny that the Democratic party has at any time or in any way served the people, but declare that by the joint action of Republicans and Democrats about fifty millions of acres of the unearned land grants only granted for the construction of railroads have been restored to the public domain, in pursuance of the policy declared by the Republican party in the original grants. We charge that Democratic administration with failure to execute the laws securing to settlers titles to their homesteads, and with using appropriations intended for the support of their proceedings to favor the memory of their first leader, the martyrs of the cause of liberty and the heroes of the Union, who, with unparalleled generosity, brave and gratitude the heroic names of our later leaders, who have been more recently called away from our companionship by the angel of death and the long, May time between the fallen leaders and the living. We pledge ourselves to the support of our living heroes whose memory will be treasured in the history both of the nation and of the world, and we declare that to the soldier and his family we owe a debt of care and gratitude.

In the spirit of those dead leaders, and of our own devotion to human liberty, and with that hostility to all forms of despotism and oppression, which is the fundamental idea of the Republican party, we extend our sympathy and assistance to our fellow Americans of Brazil upon their great act of emancipation, which completed the abolition of slavery throughout the two American continents. We earnestly hope that by peaceful means the political security of peoples of Irish birth and the peaceful security of peoples of Irish birth and the peaceful security of peoples of Irish birth and the peaceful

FARM AND GARDEN.

TOPICS INSTRUCTIVE ALIKE TO FARMERS AND DAIRYMEN.

An Apron Designed Especially for Dairymen, but Which, with Slight Alteration, Becomes an Admirable Protection in the Milking Shed and Stable.

In the annexed cuts are illustrated a new dairy apron and pattern for making the same, which are described and recommended by W. H. Lyndl in his manual on "Dairy Practice."

FIG. 1.—A CONVENIENT DAIRY APRON.

In Fig. 1 is shown the apron as it appears when worn for general dairy work. Fig. 2 presents the pattern of said apron. This pattern will also serve as a guide to making a very convenient milking apron.

PATTERN FOR DAIRY AND MILKING APRON.

The pattern shows one-half the apron. When a milking or stable apron is desired the front is divided across the middle, say near the dotted lines. For the lower part a wider piece of cloth may be used, which may be gathered into folds. This will give it a larger skirt, so that it will cover the knees while the milking pail is held between them. For a dairy apron the front is made in a single piece. Two buttons are sewed on the front of the apron, to which a clean towel may be fastened for use in wiping the hands—a frequent necessity in doing dairy work. (See Fig. 1.) The strings for tying the apron are attached one at each point at the back (A). In tying cross the strings at the back, bring them to the front and there tie them. If preferred they may be made of sufficient length to reach again around the person and be tied behind.

The peculiar merit of this style of apron is the complete manner in which it protects the body and arms of the person and the ease with which it is put on and off. There are no buttons to be buttoned. It can be made in an hour or two by almost any body who can use a needle, and will cost for material from thirty to sixty cents for cheap calico or heavy cotton.

If farmers, as well as dairymen, will have some of these aprons made for themselves, they will soon become favorite articles of use. On special days, when the farmer has on his Sunday clothes, such an apron would be especially useful, for it would prevent spilling his clothes when it happens not to make a complete change of dress. In any case by its use the ordinary clothes of stable workers will be saved and be kept cleaner for wear throughout the day at general work, and especially for carrying milk into the dairy. It is one of those simple expedients which may be adopted by the farmer as a practical and easy means of securing, in a manner, a labor result to that attained, at the expense of greater pains, by the makers of fancy brands of butter.

Feeding Young Chickens.

For the first twenty-four hours after hatching no feeding is necessary, the chief want of the little brood being material heat, and the mere quiet and less jostling of the hen can be kept the stronger the chicks will become and the less danger there will be to them in their weak state from the feet of the mother.

In about thirty-six hours after the first chirping is heard, some of them will make their appearance on the outside of the nest, as if curious to learn into what kind of a world they have entered and how they are to make a living in it.

As soon as the hen is removed from the nest the box can give a little food, consisting of fine oatmeal, or bread soaked in milk, which is continued three or four days, with an occasional hard boiled egg, which is then gradually changed to any variety suitable to their age, until they are able to eat cracked corn, wheat and other whole grains, when the labor of feeding will be greatly reduced. A little meal and finely chopped vegetables will be useful occasionally, especially as long as they are kept in limited quarters.

Several Valuable Insecticides.

Among the best insecticides is pyrethrum, which does not require to be eaten, but kills by coming in contact with the insects and is safely and easily applied in all cases where it may be useful, for it is quite harmless except to insect life. For fowls it can be sprinkled with vermin dust it into the feathers. It is very useful in killing cabbage worms and the slugs and insect pests that infest rose and currant bushes. Kerosene emulsions may be made with one quart of soft soap to eight quarts of boiling hot water, well stirred together, when for safety the kettle should be taken away from the fire and one pint of kerosene and one pint of sour milk be added, and all well mixed up while hot by churning or using a small hand pump. This makes a quite useful wash for trees infested with borers and any kind of insects. Powdered white hellebore is also specially effective on currant worms and rose slugs. Unlike pyrethrum, it is poisonous, and care should be taken not to sprinkle it on fruits that are to be eaten. Paris green is the standard remedy for the potato beetle.

RATS IN CELLARS.

A New York Farmer Tells How to Circumvent the Rodents.

Henry Ives, of Batavia, N. Y., in a letter to The New York World, tells what every farmer will be glad to learn, namely, how to keep rats out of cellars. He says:

When a cellar is infested with rats it is always found that they obtain their entrance under the cellar walls, or at least they must have holes or passageways there to retreat to, and places there to burrow. If not they very soon will abandon the premises. It is said that in making an entrance they first dig down just outside of the walls and under the bottom of it into the cellar, and whatever holes they dig in the cellar are always to make passages under these walls instead of into the earth or any other part of the cellar bottom. Knowing this habit of theirs, then, one can so build that they will not be able to get through under these walls, and then they will be most effectually excluded from the cellar.

This is easily done by following what is also a most excellent practice in forming the foundations for these walls. After the cellar is dug and the lines marked where the wall is to stand, then dig a trench twenty inches or two feet deep and a little broader than the wall is to be, directly under where it is to stand. Fill this with small broken stone, say small as for a macadamized road, or, what is better, break up these lines, shelly flint-stones in the trench, enough to fill it. Either of these will make a good abutment to construct the wall on, will act as a drain for the cellar, if it is needed, and above all will prove impenetrable to the entrance of rats. They might dig down from the outside, as their custom is, but, finding at the bottom of the walls this loose, broken stone, which they are unable to make a passage through, they will be obliged to stay outside, and the cellar will be practically "rat proof."

But if the walls to the buildings one has were not made as above and the cellars are already infested with rats, they may be made nearly "rat proof" in the following manner: Dig a trench fifteen inches wide and eight or ten inches deep just inside, at the bottom of the walls. Fill this two-thirds full of the pounded stones, and then with water lime cement, enough to be even with the cellar bottom and plastered a little way up from the bottom of the walls. This will prove as much of a barrier to the rats in trying to get a passage under the walls again that they will doubtless abandon the premises.

Shipping Poultry to Market.

To meet the demands of the New York market, the crops of turkeys and chickens must be free from food or other substance, hence poultry designed for that market must be kept from food about twenty-four hours before killing. It is generally conceded that all poultry is best killed by cutting through the roof of the mouth to the brain with a sharp pointed knife. For this market leave the head and legs on, and do not "draw" the entrails.

The advice has been given many times not to pack poultry until it is entirely relieved of all animal heat. This is an important point, for birds packed before they are cold are almost sure to spoil. For packing material clean dry wheat or rye straw will be found preferable.

A Useful Device.

The useful device shown in the cut here presented was originally described and illustrated in Rural New Yorker. This device has been used with success in driving planks into the ground.

DEVICE FOR DRIVING PLANKS.

A little wooden box or trough cut out of a solid piece of wood was placed at the top of the plank, as shown in the cut, and the mallet was pounded upon this. Thus the plank was driven securely to its place and the top was comparatively uninjured. Had the attempt been made to drive the planks with the ordinary mallet, the tops would have been mashed and defaced.

Things Farmers Tell One Another.

Secretary E. Williams of the New Jersey Horticultural society, tells that a member of this society had a plum tree trained against the side of his house, which he inclosed in a mosquito netting, and the result was twenty-two quarts of plums in perfection.

Mr. Speckels is credited with having imported twenty-five tons of beet seed to be planted by 150 California farmers on 2,000 acres of land. A factory is being erected at Watsonville, Cal., to work the product.

A North Carolina authority declares that bagged grapes rotted in his vineyard almost as badly as those exposed and the bags made the skin tender.

W. D. Philbrick, a Massachusetts market gardener, says that in preparing the land for deep growing root crops like parsnips and horseradish, it is necessary to run the plow very deep and take a narrow slice and after harrowing, plow again and rake fine. Quick growing crops, like radishes and lettuce, spinach, etc., do not require so deep working of the land, but will usually well repay the extra expense of two plowings and often of two manurings.

Says Professor Cook, of Michigan: Kerosene emulsion if used early enough and persistently enough will prove successful as an exterminator to the onion maggot. It will kill all it touches. But as they hatch every few days you must use the remedy as often, and as the worms soon burrow into the substance of the onion or the radish the application must be made before they have got in out of reach.

Mr. Manning, who is authority on floriculture, says well rotted cow manure is the best fertilizer that can be used, but the manure can be put on green in the fall if desired.

A Conseling Barber.

"I dunno what's got into me today," said the Dakota barber, as he stropped his razor. "My hand is so unsteady I can't hardly do nothing."

"Is that so?" anxiously inquired the customer from the chair, as he peered over his lower eyelids.

"Yes, sir," and a tremble. Cut the last gentleman in the throat," he continued, as he swept the steel down one side of his victim's face. "Steady customer; hated to lose him, too."

"You didn't kill him, I hope" asked the subject.

"Don't know yet—friends took him home. Very uncomfortable, though, to turn to reach for the lather brush an' have the blood squirt out of a customer's jugyler vein into a fellier's boot leg," went on the operator as he rounded the chin and took a swath down the throat. "I hate to go round with my boot full of blood—liable to catch cold when it cools off."

The human sacrifice only gasped, but could not speak. The executioner continued:

"It looks bad, too, for a first class shop like this un to see blood a-squirting all over everything. Apt to discourage other customers, too," he continued, as he stepped around behind, pulled the victim's little higher up on the rack, and executed some rapid up strokes on his throat. "You probably wouldn't a got in the cheer if you'd a seen how that man's neck looked. Besides, I hate to have my towels and razor get bloody, an' it makes the floor sloppy," he went on as he rubbed the sufferer's head this way and that and laid the cold flat side of the razor on his throat, "an' it a'ways gives me such a start when the stream strikes me to turn round an' find the customer a-laying in his cheer tryin' to holler an' his windpipe cut off short. It a'ways makes me more tremby than I was afore—I ain't what I was fore I cut that last man. I do it steady down pretty quick I'm going to lay off. You don't know how it breaks me up to see a man rollin' round in the cheer scatterin' blood all over the other customers as are layin' still. Close shave, sir? Not all right, sir. To-morrow for the bald place, sir! You're bald as a lamp shade, sir—some like it this way, some like it that way, sir—fifteen cents, please—don't step where you'd ought to wipe off the blood in the cheer an' laid an' bleed!—Fred Caruthers in Chicago Tribune.

The Household.

Dyspepsia, Indigestion and Headache seem to take the place of the thing graces in many households. How sad is the condition of such a family. The Kidneys and Liver often get deranged and perhaps the parents or even children may be suffering from Diabetes, Bright's Disease or some kindred disease. As a preventive and also a cure for all the diseased conditions of the human family no preparation equals Parmelee's Vegetable Pills for the Liver, Kidneys and Entire Core. Only $1.00 for large bottles. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Electric Bitters.

This remedy is becoming so well known and so popular as to need no special mention. All who have used Electric Bitters sing the same song of praise—A trial once produces a trial and it is guaranteed to do all that is claimed. Electric Bitters will cure all diseases of the Liver and Kidneys, will remove Pimples, Boils, Salt Rheum and other effects caused by impure blood. —Will drive malaria from the system and prevent as well as cure all malarial fevers.—For cure of Headache, Constipation and Indigestion try Electric Bitters.—Entire satisfaction guaranteed, or money refunded.—price 50 cts and 1.00 per bottle at Dr. Crosier's Drug Store.

Nature Cleanses.

The system, if given an opportunity but very few persons find time to give nature a chance and so the blood which is filled with impurities, which, if not away impurities, becomes so clogged with disease that unless some help is given it, the person will be afflicted by blood poisoning and suffer with Pimples, Boils, Carbuncles, Cancers, Sores, Tetter, &c., and often die without help. Save yourself from all this suffering and loss of time by using Parmelee's Blood Purifier which prevents all diseases in the system. Large bottles $1.00. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Is Consumption Incurable.

Read the following: Mr. C. H. Morris, Newark, Ark., says: "To a man who has been given up by his friends and physicians pronounced not an incurable consumptive. Began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and now on my third bottle, and able to exercise the work on my farm. It is the finest medicine ever made."

Jessie Middlewart, Decatur, Ohio, says: "Had it not been for Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption I would have died of Lung Trouble. Was given up by the doctors. am now in best of health." Try it. Sample bottles free at Dr. Crosier's drug store.

Health Will Follow.

The use of Parmelee's Hop, Iron and Bucha Bitters. They promote sleep and allay nervousness. They tone up and strengthen the system, without exciting the brain as do most other stimulants. They soothe to rest the jarring nerves, and calm the irritable and jaded system. They are prepared from the purest materials and are the best medicines you can use for restoring health and strength. Try them. 50 cents per bottle. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

We Are Anxious.

That every young lady should know what a delicate and harmless beautifier is to be found in Hamilton's Oriental Balm. It is absolutely harmless, and it makes the complexion so soft and brilliant, so surely removes all tan and freckles, that one needs only to give it a trial to be convinced of its merits. Only 50 cents per bottle. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Beckine's Arnica Salve.

The Best Salve in the world for cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. PUBLIC CREDIT IN 1860.

HOW REPUBLICANS PERVERT THE EVIDENCE.

Some Facts That Will Be Interesting and Instructive—The Truth About Matters the Republicans Are Now Distorting Good Democratic Doctrine.

In almost every speech of the war tariffites during the weary debate in congress just closed, they repeated in almost every form these statements: That the Polk Walker tariff of 1846 "ruined the industries" of the country, lowered wages, checked development and, above all, depressed the credit of the government. So often have these things been repeated that thousands believe them, just as men will believe anything persistently dinned into their ears, when they lack time or inclination to examine the evidence. And yet nothing is more clearly proved, and by the high official evidence, than the exact opposite of what they assert. A few of them are very enough to put the date of depressed credit in the doings of Polk's administration, and coat the key fact that this was at the beginning of the period when the national Republican organ had said that the revenue statutes had allowed to go to peace. They dishonestly omit the fact that down to November, 1860, 5 per cent. bonds of the United States sold at par, or above in gold.

Now we assert positively, and will prove it by the testimony of Horace Greeley, Abraham Lincoln, Salmon P. Chase, Bishop's "Impending Crisis" and all the leading authorities, that during the period from 1846 to 1860 was one of the most uninterrupted advancing improvement, that wages through the Union as a whole advanced over 40 per cent., that exports grew with astonishing rapidity, that the national wealth increased 195 per cent., and that on the day Abraham Lincoln was elected the price of government bonds in gold was higher than ever before, with two exceptions, and higher than it ever was again till 1873. The Republicans have a little trick of publishing the premium on the bonds soon after the war and omitting the fact that that premium was in currency on gold bonds, and less at that than the premium on gold; but this is such a cheap and simple trick that it deceives no one. If the reader cares to examine the Republican evidence of great prosperity from 1850 to 1860, let him read the "Impending Crisis," a book indorsed by Republican congressmen, which is simply a long glorification of the "record of Congress of the free states" and the good wages paid. Or the discussion on the finances in 1877-78, in which James A. Garfield proved that 1860 was a year of wonderful prosperity. Or the argument of Lincoln that the great prosperity which he admitted, was not due to the party in power. Or the same argument, amplified by Blaine in his "Twenty Years in Congress." We content ourselves with giving a little of the testimony of Horace Greeley.

In the summer of 1860 the papers advocating the election of Douglas charged that the campaign of Lincoln was injuring the public credit; and Greeley replied with a series of defiant articles to the effect that the credit of government was first class and improving. Here is the specimen from The New York Tribune of Oct. 24, 1860:

"BONDS AND BUGABOOS.

"It is instructive to compare the bids for the United States loan of Monday with those made in February last. The highest price then paid was 102 50-100; the highest price paid on Monday was 101 45-100, or nearly 1 per cent. higher! The Long heeded bankers give 1½ per cent. for the privilege of loaning the government money at 5 per cent. interest. 'Is not the conclusion irresistible? No one heeds the shaved braggadocio of the brazenest southern agitators, and no one believes the pretended fears of northern public makers who, like pickpockets in a crowd, hope to gain something in a scramble.

And this is a journal which is now the worst screaming "public measures," and asserts almost daily that the Democrats of 1850-60 lowered government credit. Two days later, Oct. 26, Greeley denounced The Herald for actually selling government bonds, closing his article with this precious sermon:

"Unlawfully for the plot, every number of The Herald also set forth our greatness and prosperity and the inevitable future grandeur and growth of the country, with which we, not often agreeing with The Herald, do most heartily agree."

Yet there was "greatness and prosperity" in 1860, though The Tribune now denies it. On Oct. 29, noticing a decline in the value of stocks, The Tribune announces that it is a political trick to check the high tide of "good times," adding that if the conspiracy succeed

"From a condition of high, palmy and general prosperity, with a bright bow of promise spanning the horizon, we shall be precipitated into pressure and distrust. (This appears to be a quotation from another paper, but it is in The Tribune business column with approving editorial remarks.) A few days later The Tribune announced the election of Lincoln and continued prosperity in spite of the Democratic prophecies of ruin. 14 it repeated in a surplus of gold, closing with this testimony:

"We have grown $100,000,000 worth more in 1860 than in any previous year; our exports are large and our imports not excessively so. If we must have a political jubilee, it could not come at a better time than the present.

Then came November. The Tribune grew quite hilarious over the attempt of some men to depress prices, saying

"The country was never before so rich and prosperous. It is now—full of cattle, full of grain and swine, full of specie, full of everything. Our exports are large by good proceedings. Specie has ceased to flow from us, and will soon begin to draw to us. Our mines, our herds, our farms, our factories are all doing well; a panic may frighten some timid souls, but it is easy for anyone to make $5 and upwards per day who is willing to work. Either set, young or old; capital not needed; we start you, everything you need. No special ability required; you can live at home and do the work. Write to us at once for full particulars, which we will mail free. Address Stinson & Co., Portland, Maine.

ALL THIS WAS IN 1860.

HERE IT IS, IN BRIEF!

A VERY SHORT AND PITHY HISTORY OF THE TARIFF.

It May Not Be a Wildly Exciting Subject, but You Will Never Get It in Less Compass Than As It Is Here Presented.

Honesty Above All Things.

The St. Louis convention presents to the people a candidate and a principle. Of the candidate they have already once recorded a favorable judgment. The principle is now first put before them as the dominant issue of a national contest. Against the renomination of President Cleveland no dissenting voice has been raised at St. Louis. In its form and its bearing it is made without a call of states, by a shout of acclamation, amid a scene of extraordinary enthusiasm, and in response to a demand in which the Democracy of all the states have joined, this renomination of Mr. Cleveland, with no dissent, proceeded in the history of the country. He is called to the battle by his party synchronously with a single voice, and not only his own conspicuous merits and proved strength, but the traditions of presidential nominations, and coat the key fact that this was a foregone conclusion, and that the national Republican organ had said that the revenue statutes had allowed to go to peace. They dishonestly omit the fact that down to November, 1860, 5 per cent. bonds of the United States sold at par, or above in gold.

Now we assert positively, and will prove it by the testimony of Horace Greeley, Abraham Lincoln, Salmon P. Chase, Bishop's "Impending Crisis" and all the leading authorities, that during the period from 1846 to 1860 was one of the most uninterrupted advancing improvement, that wages through the Union as a whole advanced over 40 per cent., that exports grew with astonishing rapidity, that the national wealth increased 195 per cent., and that on the day Abraham Lincoln was elected the price of government bonds in gold was higher than ever before, with two exceptions, and higher than it ever was again till 1873. WHAT CONGRESS IS DOING.

A BILL to make the manufacture, preparation, or sale of adulterated articles of food, drink, or medicine a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment, was introduced in the Senate on the 5th inst. by Mr. Wilson of Iowa. The Senate Naval Committee has decided to report on the bill to authorize the appointment of an Assistant Secretary of the Navy. The session of the House was mainly taken up with a discussion of the land-grant forfeiture bill. The Senate did not meet on Monday last, owing to the funeral on account of the absence of a quorum. The President sent both houses a message vetoing a bill granting a pension to Mary Anne Doherty.

DYNAMITERS UNDER ARREST.

Three Ex-Employes of the Burlington Road Arrested for Carrying Explosives on Passenger Trains.

The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railway Company procured the arrest of three of its former employes at Chicago on Thursday, upon what is thought to be a conspiracy to blow up its property with dynamite. The men arrested are Thomas Broderick and J. A. Bowles, two former engineers, and Frank Q. Wilson. The arrests were made upon one of the company's passenger trains bound for Chicago, while it stopped at Aurora. Dynamite cartridges prepared for explosion are said to have been found in the possession of the prisoners, wrapped up in a newspaper. It was found to contain four dynamite cartridges, each about ten inches long and an inch and a quarter square. Each contained about a pound of dynamite. In Broderick's pocket in a purse were found stowed small dynamite fulminating caps. The parties were held in $5,000 bail each. While the captive were being handcuffed Broderick snatched a letter from his pocket and threw it out of the window. The train was stopped and this letter recovered. It is said to furnish damaging evidence against the conspirators, involving the Brotherhood.

TEXAS AND ARKANSAS POLITICS.

The Texas Union-Laborites and Arkansas Prohibitionists—Resolution Affirming the Savior's Supremacy.

The Texas State Convention of the Union Labor party met at Ft. Worth. A committee of conference, one from each Congressional district, was appointed to confer with a similar committee appointed by the nonpartisan convention. The committee's report advised that the platform of the nonpartisan convention be adopted as the State platform of the Union Labor party; that the State ticket of the nonpartisans be indorsed; that the National Union Labor party candidate be recommended to the Independent voters of Texas, and that the national platform of the Union Labor party, except the tenth plank, in regard to woman suffrage, be indorsed.

The Arkansas State Prohibition Convention met at Little Rock. The features of the session were the platform, the nomination of candidates for Presidential Electors, and the debate on a resolution declaring that Jesus Christ is the governor, and his word should be the law of nations. The resolution was tabled. The platform reaffirms the principles of the Prohibition party as expressed in the Indianapolis Convention. May 30 congratulates the people on the fact that thirty-three counties in the State are ranged on the side of local option. The estimate of the probable number of votes which will be cast next November for Fisk and Brooks ranged from 50,000 to 60,000.

Widespread Damage.

The late storms throughout Iowa proved much more serious than was at first supposed. Great damage was done to all the growing grain, many houses were struck by lightning, railroad tracks were washed away, and telegraph communication impeded with. Only one death has been reported. Alvin Cox attempted to cross a freshet with his vehicle near Rock Island, Ill., and was drowned. Many horses and cattle were killed. At Cedar Falls the opera house and a large canning factory were unroofed. Eighteen houses and barns were destroyed between Cedar Falls and Junction City, covering an area of a mile and a half. At Waterloo considerable stock was killed by lightning. In Scott County bridges were swept away and in Iowa City many buildings were blown down. Near Martins the Burlington and Northern track was washed out, and near Charlotte the Midland tracks are under water. A bailstorm in the southern part of Wapello County injured the apple crop.

Manitoba for the Government.

A Winnipeg (Manitoba) telegram states that the Government is jubilant over the result of the nominations throughout the province. There are thirty-eight seats, and eleven won by acclamation for the Government. Premier Greenway says that he expected the Opposition would have only eight seats out of the entire number, and probably not that many. Nearly all will return three supporters of the Government.

THE CASE OF MR. FULLER.

A Report Agreed Upon by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The nomination of Melville W. Fuller to be Chief Justice will be reported to the Senate in a few days, says a Washington special to the Chicago Tribune.

The Judiciary Committee will simply report the nomination without any recommendation. The committee was divided on the question whether it should report favorably or not. It was agreed to report the nomination to the Senate. The discussion was mainly confined to the question of the qualifications of Mr. Fuller for the position, precedents growing out of the war, judging partly by his record in the Legislature of 1862 the Republicans generally seemed to doubt whether he was thoroughly in accord with the Northern sentiment on those questions which led to the war. The main charge made by Mr. Jackson was given little weight, and the opposition was almost solely confined to his record in regard to the war while a member of the Illinois Legislature. Senators who were political members of the committee were unwilling to vote for a favorable recommendation. The Democrats insisted upon some sort of an expression, and finally asked that the case be reported back without any recommendation. The majority of the committee felt that to do so would be to carry into effect a partisan caucus, and will vote solidly for confirmation, and it is said Senators Farwell and Cullom will do the same.

CINCINNATUS PRIDE.

The Centennial Exhibition Opened on the Fourth Under Flattering Circumstances.

The formal opening exercises of the Exposition building at Cincinnati were held July 4th, in Music Hall, which was reserved for a public resting place and amusement hall. The stage was filled with the May festival chorus and the Cincinnati orchestra. The entrance of Gov. Foraker, Gov. Thayer of Nebraska, Governor Gray of Indiana, ex-Gov. Bryan of Kentucky, Gov. Beaver of Pennsylvania, with their brilliant staffs, the Hon. John Sherman, and the Hon. Benj. Butterworth, Mer. engineers, and Adam Q. Wilson. The arrests were made upon one of the company's passenger trains bound for Chicago, while it stopped at Aurora. THE CAMPAIGN.

It Is Opened in Lively Fashion in the National House of Representatives.

Chairman Mills Attacks and Mr. Kelley Defends the Republican Platform.

[Associated Press Report.]

The House was in committee of the whole on the tariff bill on Thursday, and was discussing a motion to strike out the proviso that all vegetable dyestuffs, including logwood, fustic, etc., shall be free, as recommended by Messrs. Brewer (Mich.), Bryan (Va.), and Mills (N. Y.), who contended that the admission of vegetable dyes free would enable China dishes to undersell American farmers on the Pacific Coast. Mr. Mills (Tex.) called attention to the fact that potatoes were specifically provided for in another part of the bill. The clause, he contended was in the interest of the consuming classes, and he queried where the Republicans would be willing to reduce taxation. Mr. Brewer (Mich.) urged that they were ready to reduce taxation on the products of the farm.

Mr. Bryan said: Why don't you do it? Why do you not say in your platform that you want to reduce the duties on farm products? The convention has overruled what you have contended for. Your party convention has gone for free whisky. We go with you to the country on that issue. We go with you to reduction on the things which enter into consumption as necessaries. We believe that taxes shall remain on whisky as they are to-day.

Mr. J. H. Taylor, of Ohio, challenged the statement that the Republican party had declared for free whisky. He (Taylor) desired to be heard for a few minutes in favor of abolishing internal revenue taxation. There were about fifty delegates present. Hon. A. J. Streeter, of Illinois, chairman of the Republican National Committee, presided over the convention. Four party caucuses in Chicago

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in State Convention in the Detroit Opera House, at Detroit,

ON THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1888,

At 11 o'clock a. m., to nominate candidates for state officers and for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

According to the rule adopted by the state convention held at Detroit in 1885, every county is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes, but any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the counties they represent.

The delegates from each congressional district will meet in caucus at 10 o'clock a. m., on the day of the convention

L. M. WESTON, Chairman.
WM. J. MCGEE, Assistant Secretary.

Under the above call Charlevoix County is entitled to four delegates.

Committee Meeting.

There will be a meeting of the democratic county committee, at the office of A. D. Cruickshank, chairman, in Charlevoix, on Thursday, July 12th, at one o'clock p. m., for the purpose of naming four delegates to the State Convention to be held at Detroit, July 19th, and for the transaction of such other business as may come before the meeting.

A. D. CRUICKSHANK, Chairman.
J. MILO EATON, Secretary.

National County Convention.

There will be a mass convention of the National Party held at Boyne on the 15th of July, 1888, at 1 o. m., for the purpose of choosing delegates to attend the state convention to be held at Grand Rapids on the 19th inst. This will be the most important meeting held by the party this year, as the committee is to be reorganized, a new chairman elected, and a course determined upon for the action of the party in the coming campaign. All independent voters who are opposed to monopoly oligarchs, are invited to take part in this convention. By order of Committee.

Boyne City, July 9, 1888.

T. J. HILL, Chairman.
F. H. SHEPARD, Secretary Co. Com.

FIVE YEARS.

This number closes the fifth year of the JOURNAL. How well it has fulfilled the expectations of its promoters we leave each to say for himself.

As a business venture, we have made a living, and a little besides.

As a political organ, it has not met the desires of a few who demand redhot abuse of everything not in strict harmony with their own views. While the county has not been changed from a republican to a democratic county, it has been brought so near that two of the most important offices were carried by the democrats at the last election.

Because of the conservative course of the JOURNAL, it is to-day in the families of scores of republicans who would not tolerate an abusive partisan paper, and we believe it is making converts to the cause of democracy. Yet notwithstanding this conservatism, the paper has been sufficiently partisan to alienate a large amount of republican advertising; and the patronage has been refused with the assertion that they would not support a paper which worked as the JOURNAL was working to defeat the republican party.

During those years we have tried to be fair and truthful, and to admit nothing to our columns that we would not read aloud in our own family.

We have no promises for the future beyond a continued effort to make a clean, respectable, thoroughly local newspaper, which shall give an honest, hearty support to democratic principles as we understand them.

L. M. WESTON, chairman, has secured half rate for all who desire to attend the democratic state convention at Detroit, tickets to be on sale on July 18, and good to return the 20th.

THE republican platform is not protection to industry, but prohibition of commerce. The cheapest labor on earth and the highest prices under the sun form the republican prescription for producers and consumers.

JAMES G. BLAINE stated a truism when he recently declared that "manufacturing centers will buy their bread stuffs where they can get them the cheapest." It would only be fair play to give the agriculturists an opportunity to buy their manufactures where they can get them the cheapest.—Lansing Journal.

WHILE carefully guarding the interests of the taxpayers and conforming strictly to the principles of justice and equity, this democratic administration has paid out more for pensions and bounties to soldiers and sailors of the republic than has ever been paid before during an equal period.—National democratic platform.

UNDER the present war tariff, which our republican friends tell us is levied for the sole purpose of "protecting" the American workingmen, the "pauper" laborers of Italy are coming into this country at the rate of nearly 80,000 a year! American workingmen, do you propose to vote for the perpetuation of republican sham protection?—Lansing Journal.

IN conversation with a prominent citizen and leading busines man of Petoskey the other day, a man of pronounced republican views heretofore, he said, "that as long as the offscourings of foreign nations were permitted to land in this country unrestrained, the cry of protection to American labor was a farce and a delusion, no matter by what party it was made. Protective tariffs were of no avail to the laboring classes while this flood of immigration was permitted to continue." The above is good sound common sense.—Democrat.

THE NewaygoTribune presents the name of Hiram B. Hudson, of Manistee, Antrim county, as a candidate for congress for this (ninth) district. Mr. Hudson was a republican until 1877, and since that time a greenbacker. He is a fluent, ready speaker, and is very popular in his own county, where he has been elected to the office of prosecuting attorney against a republican majority of over 250. He is thoroughly posted on matters pertaining to the welfare of the nation, and will be always in the front of the work. He served through the war and has an honorable record, and if nominated and elected will look after the interests of his comrades.

The Thread Tariff.

The tax on thread is 60 per cent. The census for 1880 shows that there were in 50 principal cities of the United States 208,829 men and women working as tailors, milliners and dressmakers. The tariff tax on the thread consumed by a needle-woman in a day's work is equal to the pay she receives for 15 minutes' work. Divide the number of tailors and sewing women, 208,829 by 4, and you have 52,207 hours of work which go to the monopolist each day. Divide this by 10, the number of hours in a days' work, and you have 5,220 days' work which has to be performed by these laborers each day to pay the tariff on thread. In other words, 5,220 sewing women are required to work 10 hours every day in the year to pay this tax. And yet these 208,829 are not a tithe of the people who consume thread.

But when tariff reformers insist that this is not fair, and that the hundreds of thousands of weak-eyed, pale-faced women who are stitching away with this thread in attics, garrets and tenement houses are entitled to some relief, honorable congressmen talk wisely about the necessity of protecting home industry (this thread industry has in some years reached a profit of 100 per cent), and propose to take the tax off whiskey and tobacco. American women as a general thing neither drink, smoke, nor chew, but they do use thread. The question naturally comes, aren't the women entitled to any consideration at all? It is in order for some brilliant economist of the McKinley school to suggest free chewing gum.

A Comparison.

"Necessity makes strange bed fellows," and it must have been a dire necessity which forced the Bonnville temperance plank and the McKinley free whiskey plank under the crowsfoot of the republican platform. Compare them:

Temperance plank: "The first concern of good government is the virtue and sobriety of the people and the purity of the homes. The republican party cordially sympathizes with all wise and well directed efforts for the promotion of temperance and morality."

Free whiskey plank: "If there should still remain a larger revenue than is requisite for the wants of the government, we favor the entire repeal of the internal taxes [whiskey and tobacco] rather than the surrender of any part of our protective system at the joint behest of the whiskey trusts and the agents of foreign manufacturers."

Sol Smith Russell in Bewitched.

Sol Smith Russel begins an engagement at the opera house on July 21, in a new play by Ed. E. Kidder, called Bewitched which is said to run in a just now popular vein of fiction, and is to afford Russel ample and natural opportunities for the introduction of his peculiar specialties. Sol is one of the best fellows in the world as well as one of the funniest comedians. He is the very embodiment of comedy from head to foot, and refined, intelligent comedy at that. It is questionable if the stage has ever produced an actor who was capable of such wonderful facial transformation without apparent effort. Sol Smith Russell's acting is not confined to his face, and to such gestures as those with which an ordinary comedian is apt to be contented. His body, arms, feet, legs and even his clothes seem to act, there is comedy in everything about him, and one cannot help laughing every time he looks at him. And all this is accomplished by methods that are so quiet and artistic that one is puzzled to understand where the secret of all the fun lies.

The Spy of Shiloh.

Frank Howard is preparing to give this national drama at Bartholomew's opera house, three nights, commencing July 23d. Of the author and the play the Hudson Post says: "Mr. Frank Howard, a young man, but an old soldier, well be proud of his grand national military war drama, "TheSpy of Shiloh." No words of ours can add to the fame that grows yearly out of all war dramas. Mr. Howard served in that hell. Andersonville, with our fellow comrades, Sergt. Farney, and to say that their meeting was friendly, does not express it. The tableaus connected with the drama, of which there are eighteen, are beautifully grand, we cannot describe them, they must be seen to be appreciated. The increased crowds on each of the four evening attested the wide-spread and deep interest of our citizens, in fact it was an era in our history."

"Little Nugget" at the Opera House.

Grand Rapids theatre-goers have been captured completely by "Little Nugget." Redmond's Grand was well filled last evening by an audience which laughed, applauded and encored nearly every line in the play. It is an extremely funny production in dialogue and situations, and under the able handling by the "Little Nugget" Comedy Company, comes all who see it to hold their sides and give themselves over to unrestrained laughter for the evening. It is rare nowadays that anything really new is put on the stage, but in "Little Nugget" there are a score of new points introduced, and they are not only new, but they are good.—Daily Democrat, Tuesday, Oct. 4, 1887. At Bartholomew's opera house, July 16. Tickets at Cochran's drug store.

Holding Them Back.

The Republican party is nervously at work on its Stanforis and Depews to induce them to make themselves a little less conspicuous as candidates for the Republican nomination.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The hot house economists are advising farmers to quit raising wheat. As wheat is the natural product of more than one half the farms of the country, this is a sad state of affairs brought about by their pet theory. The next thing will be to advise them to quit raising corn and hunt around for some unnatural product, which if it only could be made grow, would make the farmers all rich.—Rockville (Ind.) Tribune.

The Minnesota Republicans declare for free lumber, salt and sugar. If this is not rebellious rebellionness, what is rebellion?—Louisville Courier Journal.

Close on the heels of the blotter man comes an advertising clock man. The clock has three revolving cylinders each bearing four advertising cards, which change positions at intervals of five minutes. The clock is about five feet high, and is an ornament as well as an accurate time keeper.

The "Little Nugget" company played a week's engagement to full houses in Detroit last Christmas time. The Free Press of Dec. 21, said: "Little Nugget" is packing Whitney's house delight, and it is quite likely to go on crowding the theatre all the week.

The popular G. R. & I. and D. L. & N. road began Monday to run their regular excursion through trains to Petoskey and the neighboring resorts with the most flattering results. The early Tuesday morning train consisted of three regular coaches with four sleepers loaded with human freight. The baggage car was filled up at Grand Rapids, necessitating the laying over of that baggage which should have been transferred at Howard City until a later train. Forty-seven pieces of baggage were checked to Charlevoix.—Petoskey Democrat.

An impromptu and informal reception was given M. J. Morgan and family of Detroit, Mrs. J. T. Iddings, Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Parmelee, and Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Cochran at the residence of O. S. Washburn last Friday evening. Refreshments were served on the lawn, and all enjoyed a very pleasant evening.

At the Baptist Church, on Friday evening, July 13, a special sermon will be held in memory of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the establishment of Burman missions by Adoniram Judson. An interesting programme will be prepared and a general invitation is extended. Service at the regular hours next Sunday morning and evening. Sunday school at noon.

Ben Weaver resigned the office of deputy register last Friday. Had he continued in the office until to-morrow (July 13th) he would have held continuously for six years. This for a democrat, under republican administrations speaks well for his ability and efficiency in the office and we venture the assertion that no man in the county has had better knowledge of the affairs of that office than he.

Divine service and sermon at Odd Fellows hall, every Sunday at 10.30 o'clock, this summer. Rev J. W. Bancroft is expected for July and Rev. Greenleaf of Battle Creek for August. All members of the Sunday school and the class recently confirmed are especially requested to be present next Sunday. Rehearsal Saturday evening at the residence of W. P. Brown. The older children of the Sunday school will meet with the singers for practice in singing.

The people of Charlevoix are wide-awake and insisting on great things but they have not had their share of the resort business. There is not one summer boarder in the boarding houses at Charlevoix where there are a hundred in Petoskey. They should find preparation for other resorters pleasant boarding places and then should exert themselves to get a part of the people who stop at private houses in other places. If our Charlevoix neighbors will exert themselves this paper will cheerfully assist them.—Resorter.

☞"Every month shows a decided improvement in The American Magazine. The July issue is particularly interesting. While maintaining its high literary standing, preference is given to the class of matter which is appropriate for summer reading. Wilfred Patterson has a well-written and finely-illustrated article on the famous Walters Art Collections; Dr. Allen McLane Hamlinton, the eminent brain specialist, contributes an entertaining paper on "Spiritualism and Like Delusions," in which are many statements that spiritualists will not like to read, insomnia as the doctor evidently considers them of unsound minds. Among other things, this paper shows how chemicals may be used in producing spirit pictures.

Atwood, July 9.—The Fourth is past.

Atwood celebrated at home. A large crowd gathered at the hotel at an early hour and the band, playing a lively march, led the procession to the grove. Music by the choir, prayer by Rev. P. F. McClelland, music by the band, reading the declaration of independence. Hon. F. R. Williams, of Elk Rapids, the orator of the day, was introduced and for two hours held the attention of the crowd. After dinner the games and races were the order of the day. The wheelbarrow race was won by Will Byers. Four entered the potato race (George Blizzett the victor. Aeron clarwood won the sack race. Will Byers and Ell Coulter the three-legged race. Tilda Coon carried off the honors of the little girls. Little boys class one, Alfred Moblo; class two, Johnnie Parsons. David Blissett and John Smallegen were a tie on the lid men's race. Joseph LeClair by long odds, the fat man's race. Bob Rogers and Jack Jolliffe a tie on the hundred-yard race. The doughnut race was won by Will Kanagy. More music by the band. Mr. Williams paid the boys a handsome compliment on their playing. They received over forty dollars for their days work and went home happy.

Mail Carrier Missing.

On Tuesday evening Mr. W. H. Hunter, mail carrier for Geo. W. Cook, between Charlevoix and Petoskey, left the National hotel, Petoskey, saying he was going to see a friend at Bay View, and might not return till morning. At 6.20 Wednesday morning, he was at the National, attending to business apparently well as usual. At 11.00 o'clock the Petoskey postmaster telephoned that the mail has not been called for and a search failed to find Mr. Hunter the carrier, and at this writing has not been heard from. He is about 60 years old, of temperate habits, and no cause can be given for his strange disappearance. So far as known he had not to exceed $15.00 in money about him and his business transactions seem to have been all straight up to 6.30 on Wednesday morning.

BURGESS, July 10.—The shower of to-day dampened considerable cut hay in this vicinity.

Geo. Blythe returned last Friday from his trip to Canada.

Mrs. Jack Stanley is seriously ill with hemorrhage of the lungs.

Mrs. Hale has returned to Charlevoix after a pleasant week's visit among her many friends.

Mrs. Wilks has been visiting with her daughter Mrs. F. Kane, but owing to illness had to return to her home in Charlevoix for treatment.

We neglected to mention the close of Miss Alice Keat's school. The last day was devoted to literary exercises and a picnic and ramble on Lake Michigan shore. All seemed to enjoy themselves. Should Miss Keat conclude to return and teach the winter term she would receive a hearty welcome, for she made many warm friends while here.

Quite a call for haying hands in this vicinity.

Free Bridges and Free Trade.

Did the citizens and business men of Clinton and the farmers of Florida township ever stop to think that this bridge, the toll bridge, we mean, which connects, while it separates, Parke and Vermillion counties, stands in precisely the same relation to a big community, only on a smaller scale, that the so called protective tariff stands to our whole country? It protects our farmers and gardeners against the gardeners and farmers of Parke, for, rather than bring their produce over here and pay high toll tax, they go clear to Terre Haute to sell their stuff, and there they also buy a great deal of their goods. So you see that bridge is in a small way a protection to us for it tends to discourage the importation of goods into this town which we can produce or ought to produce ourselves. At least this is the protective theory in a nutshell, and as fully illustrated by the present institution which exacts toll from the purchaser and the producer. And yet there is not a person of ordinary sense living about here who is not honestly in favor of removing this restriction of our trade by having a free bridge.—Clinton (Ind.) Argus.

Borax is used in manufacture and in household life in many ways; yet the people of the country were astonished at the existence of a $2,000,000 corner on it until the monopolist operating it failed and had the assurance to complain that the Mills bill broke his corner and ruined him. This is a protective country, with room for all sorts of enterprises, from stage robbing to big deals in borax—but the best laid plans will fail occasionally.—St. Louis Republican.

We have heard a great deal from the Republican side of the house in opposition to the Mills bill, but we have not heard of any Republican tariff bill which Republicans would agree to pass.—Cleveland Plain Dealer

IRONTON, July 11.—Haying is the order of the day just now.

The strawberry crop is not nearly so good as it was last year, either in quality or quantity, owing to the wet, cold weather that has also been impaired but all other crops are looking well.

The company lost another 200 dollar horse Saturday. He ran away with a coal buggy, broke his hind leg and had to be shot.

The Helping Hand society held a strawberry and cream festival at the M. E. church Tuesday evening. A pleasant time was had and the proceeds amounting to nine dollars is to be applied on the parsonage debt.

J. M. Harris has purchased a horse and buggy and is riding around as comfortable as you please these days.

J. Peterson is tearing down his old barn in Ironton preparatory to building a new one.

We have always rather envied an editor his easy way of making money; but skirmishing around for a bit of news each week to assist him a little, has changed our mind wonderfully and we think that he well earns his money.

FREDERICK III—IN MEMORIAM.

BY EDGAR L. WAKEMAN.

A humbled peasant, as of humblest king,
Bares in little time his sceptered sway,
Takes chief place among the dead and lay
Breaks the dim way with Death as with a friend.
And God of grace, Continents, he alone
Knows of what suffering loss he knows.
Say sunshine! Say the sunshine of a day,
Leads the wide earth, with hope of better day
Now, to be man in all that nobleness can,
And to be monarch in his loving man.

Up in what hop the nations' fates shall forge—
Past shall be the bitterness of change;
Garman eagle breaks its sabled wing,
Wrown fresh glories for a kingdom weak;
Half wave above the Seine and Loire
Lowerded flags shall shriek in pain or fear;
Modern crowns shall totter in the throes
Of labor; the stainless barrier trod
To the loving heart of all mankind.

THE MAIDEN'S PAREWELL.

The time has come and we must part;
The leap-drop dims mine eyes
How oft I've clasped thee to my heart
With joy in days gone by.

When first I saw thee I was sure
Thou came at to me to stay;
But nothing mundane doth endure—
All things must pass away.

Slow oft in days forever past
My form thou hast caressed;
Another takes thy place at last
And clasps me round the waist.

But such is life—we meet to part;
In midst of change and dread,
Another clasps to-day my heart—
Oh sweet, fare thee well!

JESSIE'S ANSWER.

BY JEFFIE FORBUSH HANAFORD.

"Will you marry me now, Jessie?"

The tone was sincere and the speaker, a handsome man of five and twenty, with a wary mass of brown curls clustering around a broad forehead, turned from the window and confronted his pretty listener.

Jessie Southern lifted her bewildering dark eyes to his face and smiled gaudily.

"Not now, Chester; I am too young; and besides, I never want to marry and settle in this dull place.

"But, Jessie," interposed Chester Culver, his handsome face flushing, "I am in business here and doing well, and so this must be our future home, at least for the next few years."

"Must?" echoed Jessie, a faint smile playing around the sweet mouth and coaling the bewitching little dimples into view. "Why do you say must, Chester? Can't you go into business somewhere else? Anywhere in the wide world will suit me, excepting this place."

Chester looked troubled, but what could he do. He loved this willful little gipsy, with her dark eyes and winning ways, and knew his life would be a blank without her.

"Jessie, I beg of you, be reasonable, "tell me, dear, and go somewhere, get settled in business, and then——"

"Then what, sweet one?" exclaimed Chester, as Jessie hesitated, and a pretty flush suffused her cheeks, tipping the pretty ears a glowing shell pink. "Then, what pet? Do you mean that I may come for you, that you will be my wife, then?"

"Yes," answered Jessie very softly, and happy Chester clasped her in his arms and said:

"It is the one aim of my life to make you happy, so Jessie, darling, I will do as you desire.

Two months later Chester Culver had disposed of his business for cash and was prepared to start in search of a new place in which to settle.

"Jessie," he said, on the evening of his departure, "I am now going, at your request, to make a home for you, and as soon as I have succeeded I shall come for you. You can trust me, Jessie."

"Yes, Chester, we can trust each other."

Thus they parted.

Two months passed away, oh! so slowly and wearily to Jessie.

"Why did I send him away?" she asked herself over and over again.

His letters came regularly, full of undying love, and a hope that he would soon come for her.

At last a speculation he had counted a great deal by fell through, and Chester was almost discouraged. He went from one place to another, last losing all his money; he seemed to be unlucky in everything he undertook; he no sooner got into "a good thing" than it proved a failure; he put a thousand dollars of his money into a bank, but the bank failed, and he received only three hundred dollars out of that.

Poor Chester! It was now over a year since he had laid Jessie good-by, and his prospects of a home were fast diminishing.

Is it any wonder that his heart grew bitter, and life seemed a burden too heavy to bear?

Then he thought of Jessie waiting for him, and he with no prospects for the future.

Jessie's letters came regularly. Such pathetic, pleading letters; they made his heart sick.

How could he return? Chester was proud, and would never return with less money than he left with.

At last he started in business in the busy, active city of D——, but, being a complete stranger, without influential friends, he was obliged to give it up, for he lost more money than he made; so, after losing nearly all his capital, he got out of the business, a sadder if not a wiser man.

"I ask is against me," he murmured, "and have been ever since I left Clayville. Poor Jessie! I wish I could forget her; but that is impossible."

As for Jessie—pretty Jessie Southern—the last two years of her life had not been of the happiest.

After Chester's departure other young men tried hard to win her love, but in vain. Jessie's heart was far away, with Chester, and she gradually gave up attending parties and places of amusement, and settled down, as she told herself, to "wait for Chester."

Another year had passed away, and Chester was still unsettled.

A party of gentlemen were talking of going to Mexico and pressed Chester to become one of their number.

Chester knew not what to do. He disliked to go so far away from Jessie, yet he had not heard from her for a long time. Was she sick, or had she forgotten him?

He had written repeatedly, and it was now over two months since he had heard a word from her.

Finally he decided not to go, and with this determination he went to the Clayborne Hotel to see his friend, Ned Holbrooke, and tell him of his decision.

Arriving at the hotel, he found Mr. Holbrooke was away, but would be in presently, so he concluded to wait.

Seating himself, he took up a New York daily paper, to pass away the time.

Presently he started from his seat, his face very pale, and his eyes riveted on the printed page before him.

Under "Society Notes" he read the following:

"Married—Will L. Bernard, of the firm of Ferard & Lockwood, last evening, to Miss Southern, younger daughter of F. H. Southern, Clayville."

Chester looked at the date of the paper; it was over a month old.

Just that Ned Holbrooke came so.

"Ah, Culver, my boy, glad to see you. What's the matter—you look pale as a ghost?"

Chester managed to say something about "a headache—not feeling well," and that he came to say that he would go with the party as soon as they were ready.

"Glad to hear it, Culver, glad to hear that, a year since of making money. Don't be in a hurry," as Chester rose to go.

Once in the open air, Chester tried to collect his thoughts and realize what he had just read, and to his surprise he found he had the paper still in his hand.

There was no mistake; he read it over and over again. "Younger daughter!" Jessie was the younger. She had only one sister, Glyda, and she was two or three years older.

Never thinking for an instant there could be a mistake, he seated himself to write to Jessie.

What should he write? Tears, which were no disgrace to his manhood, filled his eyes.

At last it was finished, and read as follows:

"JESSIE—I know all, and you will never see me again. I start for Mexico to-morrow. May heaven bless you!

"HUGH CULVER."

The next day found Chester on his way to Mexico.

Let us now return to Jessie.

She has changed, we can see that at a glance, and instead of the willful, thoughtless girl of seventeen we see before us the blossoming woman.

The sweet mouth is a trifle sad, perhaps, and the dark eyes wear a troubled, far-away look; yet she is a the same warm-hearted, affectionate Jessie of old.

She had received Chester's last letter, but knew not where to direct a reply.

She wrote to his old address, asking for an explanation of his strange letter, and telling him of her sister's marriage, but the letter was uncalled for, and so returned to her.

"I shall never marry," she told her mother, "for I feel positive that Chester will return to me.

Mr. Southern felt very much worried about his daughter.

Another year passed, and during all this time she had not once heard from Chester.

"Take her away for a change. It has left her more good than all the medicine I could possibly give her," the family physician said, in his bluff, hearty way.

So Mr. Southern decided to take Jessie with him to New York. He felt very much afraid she would refuse to go, as nothing seemed to interest her of late.

The next morning at breakfast he ventured to remark that he had been called him to New York, and, turning to Jessie, he said:

"Jessie, dear, I am sorry I start so soon, for if you could get ready I would take you with me."

He watched her closely, half expecting a refusal, but Jessie quietly answered:

"I should like to go very much, papa."

And so it was settled.

Glyda had been very anxious for Jessie to come and stay with her awhile. Since her marriage to Will Bernard she had lived a short distance out of New York, in the lovely little suburban town of I——, but until now Jessie had not cared to go.

Mr. Southern thought if he only succeeded in getting Jessie there, her sister would insist upon her remaining for awhile.

And it all happened just as he expected, and he returned home leaving Jessie safely under her sister's care.

"I intend you shall have a gay time, this season, my dear," said little Mrs. Bernard, "and we will try and banish those blues and coax back the roses to these pale cheeks."

"Really, Glyda," said Jessie, seriously, "I had much rather remain quietly at home with you and Baby Bell! I don't care for society since——"

Tears filled the mournful dark eyes, and Jessie hastily caught up Baby Bell and buried her face in the soft golden curls that covered the little head, to hide the tears she could not control.

Baby Bell laughed and crowed with all a baby's glee, and soon Jessie was laughing at her funny little ways.

Mrs. Bernard felt positive Chester had forgotten Jessie, and would never return to her, and she felt sorry to have her sister give up all society and remain so secluded or his sake; "for," argued Glyda, "if he loves her why doesn't he write to her?"

So she devoted herself entirely to her sister and succeeded in all outward appearance she succeeded.

"Oh, if Jessie would only give up all thoughts of Chester Culver, and be content in the love of Walter Lawrence" said Mrs. Bernard to her husband, one evening, as they were seated on the veranda watching Jessie and Lawrence coming slowly up the path leading to the house.

"What a handsome couple they make," continued Glyda. "Jessie's black hair and dark complexion contrasts so nicely with Walter's blue eyes and golden hair. And in truth they did make a pretty picture.

Jessie had her arms full of apple-blossoms, and Walter had fastened a spray of the fragrant pink buds in her dark braids of hair, which lent an added color to the dusky cheeks.

Jessie came slowly up the steps and relieved herself of the flowers by tossing them all into her sister's lap.

"Well, Jessie, did you have a pleasant walk?" asked Will Bernard.

"Yes, very pleasant," answered Jessie.

Time passed on. Walter Lawrence spent a great deal of his time at Jessie's side, and, although she did not encourage his attentions, she always seemed pleased when he was with her.

One morning early Jessie came down in her riding-dress for a long riding habit, a dark-blue felt cap, with a long plume, set jaunty on her head, with gauntlets and riding whip in hand, evidently ready for a ride before breakfast.

Her dark eyes sparkled as Will Bernard brought "Black Gypsy" to the door.

"This is a lovely morning for a canter before breakfast, to give one an appetite," observed Jessie.

"Are you going alone, Jessie? asked her brother-in-law, anxiously.

"No, Will; Mr. Lawrence is going too," she answered, carelessly. "There he comes, now," as a horseman seated on a dark-bay horse came into view around a curve in the road.

In a few minutes they were riding slowly down the avenue, and Will went into the house.

After they had ridden some time in silence, Walter Lawrence said:

"Miss Southern—Jessie—may I call you Jessie? To me it is the sweetest name on earth—Jessie, Jessie, do you know I love you?"

Jessie grew pale under his gaze, and looked so pained and startled that he at once repented being so hasty.

"Forgive me, Jessie, for startling you so; but, oh! my darling, if you only knew——"

Jessie put up her daintily gloved hand as if to ward off a blow.

"Oh! Mr. Lawrence, I never dreamed of such a thing. I am so sorry." And her pained eyes filled with tears, and fell, unheeded, on the small gloved hand.

"Why, darling, why are you sorry?" said Walter, gently, trying hard to control his feelings.

"I—I am so unhappy," said Jessie.

"Walter Lawrence, you have done me a great honor, and I attempt I can never be your wife——

"Oh! Jessie, do not say so. I will wait, only give me one word of hope.

"I can never be, Walter," answered Jessie, sadly. "Had I met you first before——"

Here Jessie broke down completely.

"Before what, dear?" questioned Walter. "Is it true, then, that you are engaged? Jessie, I can not believe it."

"In justice to us both I will explain," said Jessie. "Three years ago I was engaged to a good and noble man, whose greatest fault was loving me too well. He was at that time established in business at Clayville. At that time I was a willful, thoughtless girl of seventeen, and one day when he spoke to me and asked me to marry Clayville I declared I'd never marry and live in such a dull place, and insisted on his starting in business somewhere else; so, for my sake, he sold out his prospects in business and went away. For the first year I heard from him regularly; but going into a new place as he did, without influential friends, he found it very discouraging, so he nearly as I could make out by his letters, had to spend a great deal of money and nearly two years ago he wrote me saying he was going to Mexico, and that is the last I have heard from him.

After Jessie finished speaking the latter was unbroken for several minutes; then Walter Lawrence took her hand gently in his and said:

"Jessie, I thank you for your confidence, and you shall never regret telling me. I love you more than ever now, for I know you to be a true, faithful woman. We can be at least friends, if no more, and I shall live only to see you happy."

Jessie thanked him through her tears, and they turned their horses heads toward home.

Three weeks later found Jessie safely at home in Clayville.

Somehow she felt she could not remain longer with her sister and mother Walter Lawrence daily; for, knowing his love for her, she felt sad when with him, although none knew the secret side he had not once mentioned the subject of their conversation, but with brotherly solicitude awaited her alighted at nothing.

Another year had fled on the wings of time, and Jessie was just entering a twenty-first year.

If she was pretty at seventeen, she was beautiful now, tall and stately, with her dark hair and eyes and coil upon her neck, her clear, soft complexion, her bewildering dark eyes and bewitching little dimples peeping into view, making the small, rosebud mouth appear smaller, if that could be possible; and as she stood in the arched door of the summer house, framed by overhanging honeysuckles and wild roses, swinging her wicker basket in one small hand, she made a pretty picture.

The scene before her was a beautiful one, but its picturesque beauty was entirely lost on Jessie.

She was in deep thought, trying to realize the possible truth of a remark she had heard so long ago, and on times that morning, ", hester Culver is coming home."

"Is it true?" she murmured over and over again; then she remarked that he must belong to her; that she had no right even to think of him.

Perhaps he was married, she told herself. Possibly his wife would come with him.

That last thought was a little too much.

Jessie put on her hat and hurried out of the summer house, down a winding path leading to her favorite nook, and throwing herself down, dashed the very tree where she had parted from Chester four years ago, and rested her head on her hands and burst into tears.

When, when her grief had exhausted itself, she lay perfectly quiet, wishing, with dim concern, a bright eyed little squirrel—happy and contented, carving a wild nut, and apparently much delighted with things in general.

"Even the squirrel is happier than I," said Jessie, aloud.

Her thoughts were suddenly interrupted by a hasty step, and the bushes were parted, revealing the handsome face of Chester Culver.

"Jessie, my own, have I found you at last, here where we parted four years ago?"

Jessie neither screamed nor fainted, but sat perfectly quiet.

Chester took her side, and said, softly:

"Jessie, have you no word of welcome? Have you forgotten me?"

"Forgotten? Oh, Chester!" Jessie had found her voice at last, and, forgetting for the time that he might be married, that years had passed and that four years ago—she lifted her tearful eyes to his face and said:

"Oh, Chester, why did you treat me so?"

Chester had her in his arms and was kissing the sweet lips, and thanking God for his great happiness.

"Jessie, let me explain. There was a great mistake, my darling, but we are happy now.

Then he told her all that had happened since they parted, of the mistake in the New York papers regarding the marriage of the younger Miss Southern.

"It was only a week ago that I found out my mistake, through a New York gentleman who is a friend of your sister's husband; and, darling, believe me, I started at once for Clayville."

"Did you go to Mexico?" asked Jessie.

"Yes, dear, I did, and in a financial point of view, my stay there was a success, and now I am prepared to settle down, and enjoy the remainder of my life, providing your answer to a question I am about to ask is a satisfactory one.

Then in a voice of tenderness Chester asked: "Will you marry me now, Jessie?"

And a world of love filled Jessie's eyes, as she softly answered: "Yes, Chester."

Men of Great Memories.

As an illustration of how the memory may be cultivated to retaining a long list of numbers, one has only to observe the freight conductors, and very often remarkable examples of retentive memories will be found.

I have been on the road as a freight conductor for fourteen years, and in that time my memory has had a certain amount of training in the line of retaining the numbers on the cars. I start from a yard where I know the number of all the cars with which the train is made up, and while some cars will be left at stations along the road, and other cars will be taken up, yet at the end of my run I can tell at a glance whether I have a car number so-and-so. I can generally tell him without referring to my book.

Now, when it is remembered that the brain may be made up of 100 cell for one number, the number run all the way from one to ten thousand, or perhaps, for thirty-thousands, and that a dozen cars may be taken off and another dozen taken on along the road, it is apparent that it is doubtedly seems incredible to those not familiarly acquainted with this particular department of railroading. But it is a fact, nevertheless, and I have known quite a number of freight conductors who have memories of equal retentiveness.

Noting the numbers on the cars daily for years a conductor becomes so familiar with the work that his memory holds these large numbers with but little difficulty. The style and peculiar finish of the cars from different roads are also a help to the memory, and at a glance can tell the road to which a car belongs as far as he can see it.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

CALIFORNIA papers report that a farmer near Los Angeles, Cal., is all swelled well, which at the depth of 300 feet struck a vein of water at the rate of 200 gallons a minute. The water, which is hot enough to cook an egg, flows for half a mile over the sandy desert, then forms a pool several feet in depth and miles in length. It is said that some tains hundreds of mountain trout from one to three inches long. Where they came from is a mystery, as all the water that flows into the pond is hot, there is no spring anywhere near the place, and no one has stocked its waters with small fry.

THE Jambine seed, or Eugenia Jambolana, is now recognized to have the property of arresting the transformation of starch into sugar, and hence its great value as a medicine. Specimens of this medicinal plant are now being cultivated in England.

Bill Nye and the Book Agent.

I had a personal conflict of a bitter and sanguinary character last night with known person on my grounds at Staten Island. I desire to speak of it myself rather than have the matter go into the papers in a garbled state.

I live in a quiet portion of the Island, just within sight of the Prodnee Exchange tower, but beyond the reach of the smoke of New York. Here we have civilization on one hand and the ocean on the other. Just near enough to make it exciting.

I did not think I would be annoyed here by peddlers, beggars and fakirs. Yesterday a man, who looked like a low-bell. He told my representative that he desired very much to see me, and presented his card. The name was not familiar to me, but I put on my best coat and invited him into the cold, cold parlor to which I invite people who do not come frequently indeed.

He was rather quiet and sad in spots. I sympathized with him, for I know what it is to be sad.

He had a letter of introduction, he said, from a well-known litterateur and conferee of mine, which he begged leave to read to me. I said I would discard the bearer in the usual form and begged me to treat him kindly, and that I would give him a chair in his world he gladly reciprocated. I then told the stranger that we had met in another room than that, and I would be glad to have him come in and sample my wit.

"Now," said I, touching an electric button, and ordering a servant to come, "what can I do for you? Would you like to visit the Women's Exchange, or would you prefer to come to dine in an afternoon with me at Vanderbilt's palace?

He said that he did not wish to take up my time. He had only come to see me on a business and would not detain me but a moment. He then drew from his capacious pocket a roll of his person the prospectus for a subscription book, and, as he began to step him, had said: "We purpose in this work to treat of everything that people want to know about. It has statistics in it, but they are so presented that you like them. You read along down the columns with the keenest enjoyment. There is a thread of interest running through these tabulated statements which makes you sit up till long after you ought to go to bed. The book is socked full of interest and thrill, and yet it would not harm any young man to read it. That is just all. It is reliable. Every remark in it is backed up by a thousand facts. It comes just at a time when every one is doubting the authorship of other books, and gives the lie to all the other books. Testimonies and assurance when faith is wavering and all is doubt, is a great comfort, and is for something tangible and stable. It is reasonable, it is cheap, it is. It tells how to break colts, how to treat cribbers, botts, and army worms, how to bring up children and put up huckleberries, how to treat a setting hen, how to construct a sewer, how to make a good, durable style of pork brine that will not smell like a delayed egg in dog days, how to make a hen lasses candy or speak a piece, how to fill by a pig's weight in the Midwest we are going to have an open winter or not, how to have a happy home, how to win the affection of the opposite sex, how to meet an emergency, how to make an home which will speak for itself, how to dye a dress black, how to make lavender pantaloons to match stains, how to sew up a man who has tried to run a colored german, hints on how to prune, how to cure a sore tire, hints on marriage, farming, reading and thinking in the line of a good, palatable poultice, what to do in case of drowning; how to make one dollar go as far as two, how to manicure for a gallon of bitters every spring for twenty years, how to dodge the Grand Jury; how to snare a grizzly bear. In fact, everything you want to know, and a thousand times more for $3.50."

Women as Hotel Guests.

"Just at present, madam, we have no room that would suit you. Our vacant rooms are almost all on one, the lower floors of the house, and our charges for them are much more than you say you care to pay. Thank you for favoring us with a call. Good afternoon."

That was the pretty speech delivered by a middle-aged gentleman to a sharp-featured lady of about forty-five years, who wore corkscrew curls and her other evil sense of being an old maid of determined disposition, who was endeavoring to secure a room in an uptown hotel.

As she walked away the smilling clerk turned with a weary sigh to a reporter and said:

"That's one of the lies which we have to keep in stock."

"What is the necessity for it? Just this, our hotel is patronized largely by men of means, who believe in getting all they can for the money, and it is tainted in a first-class hotel. They patronize theatre, the wine-cellar and the cigar stand. The hotel is a small one and we often have more than a few rooms vacant. If we should take this elderly female, whom you just saw talking to me, as a boarder we would not make any money on her, for single women of her age seldom spend any more money than is absolutely necessary. They don't go in for luxuries.

"Take Mrs. Bonifacio Tom Young or old, single or married, women are all alike, they measure their fair with tongues, or making a cap of fresh tea for themselves or their callers, and they are probably afraid of being alone in the dark.

"The poor, lonesome dears light each and every gas jet in their rooms, turn the gas on at full pressure and let it burn that way from sunk until dawn. They are constantly ringing the bell for ice, pail boys and asking more questions than can be answered by reference to the encyclopedias that have yet been published.

"Of course they mean well, but, my dear fellow, some of the most infernal nuisances hotel clerks have to deal with are people who mean well. No, sir, we don't want unmarried women of the severe age in our hotel."—New York Telegram.

FARM AND GARDEN.

PRACTICAL INFORMATION ABOUT EVERY DAY MATTERS.

Diversity of Practice in Corn Culture. How Some of the Big Yields Have Been Obtained—The Way the Roots of Corn Plants Grow.

The diversity of opinion that exists in regard to the cultivation of corn can, generally speaking, be explained by all who stop to consider the matter. Take the subject of harrowing corn; some farmers report absolute injury to their crops therefrom; others, equally trustworthy, consider it a cheap and at the same time effective way of cultivating their corn. As with other questions, so with this one, circumstances must be considered in determining it. Experiments to decide the benefits of harrowing corn make it appear that when the crop has been planted on land not well prepared, harrowing is likely to do more damage than benefit; while on soil thoroughly pulverized and in good condition, the harrow becomes a positive benefit, especially as it admits of earlier working of the young plants than does the cultivator.

NO. 1—ROOTS OF THE CORN PLANT.

In cultivating corn, it ought to be borne in mind that the roots of the corn plant run nearer the surface than those of many other plants, and while there are some advocates left for root pruning, the great majority disapprove of cutting and tearing corn roots. Some years ago Professor Roberts, in a lecture delivered before a New York farmers' club, explained the effects of ordinary cultivation by means of diagrams. He remarked that it was common to begin cultivating at a distance from the corn plants and to go nearer and deeper as the stalks were better able to withstand the breaking of the earth.

Fig. 1 shows by the vertical marks the young plant uninjured by the teeth; and Fig. 2 the longer roots cut by the operation.

NO. 2—ROOTS OF THE CORN PLANT.

A better way would be to begin nearer the row and cut shallow, and extend the distance as the plants become more growth. These different modes of cultivation, says Country Gentleman, exhibit the diverse results obtained in cultivating corn, some experimenters finding it frequent performance positively detrimental to the product, while others obtain a gain of from ten to twenty bushels an acre from continued working until the plants overtop the horse's back in passing the cultivator between the rows. The detrimental operation is performed so as to cut and tear the roots, and on heavy soils after heavy rains it tends to pack the surface, reducing it to a condition more nearly resembling mortar, changing to crust and clods as it becomes dry. On the other hand, a fine, clean, mellow surface, not deep enough to hurt the roots, is positively beneficial. Taking all these different influences into consideration, farmers may easily try the experiment in a different forms for themselves, the only care required being an accurate measurement of the crops.

Some of the largest yields of corn on record have been those to which, in addition to generous manuring of the soil previous to seeding, have been applied fertilizers during the growing season. One of the big corn yields grown on the experimental grounds of The Rural New Yorker received three or more applications of Mopes' corn manure during the season. The cultivation consisted in running a cultivator between the rows after every rain and after the application of the fertilizer. The result was a crop of 124 bushels of shelled corn to the acre.

Pot Grown Strawberry Plants.

For the amateur, the pot grown strawberry plant serves well. There is no more risk of losing the plants than in ordinary bedding plants. These plants are obtained, explains Prairie Farmer, as the runners grow in summer, by sinking two or three inch pots in the soil, on a level with the surface, and fastening, by a peg or stone, a single runner over each pot. The roots strike into this, and as soon as the plant has become well established, the runner is cut off, the pots lifted and placed by themselves, where they can have shade for a few days, and the plant is ready to be transplanted into the bed. It is ready to go on growing at once, and gives a good crop the following summer.

Every one who has a garden should grow a few strawberries. When fresh from the plant they are quite a different article from the very best that can be obtained in the market. The best way for a small garden is to make a new plantation for fifty or a hundred plants every year, and dig up an equal number of old ones, after gathering the crop. By beginning at one end of the lot new soil can be used for a number of years. For manure use is this method the rows need not be over two feet apart and the plants one foot. It is always best to depend upon such varieties as have proved suitable for the locality. We have heard good reports of the Sharpless from many sources. Although not an attractive berry in appearance it is fine in quality. One grower says: "Plant of strong, healthy growth, and, when heavily manured, prolific; and it requires but one thing beyond keeping the ground free from weeds to insure success, to wit, a liberal supply of fertilizers, with this it will succeed on all soils, and without it will fail on any. The earth must be rich and heavily fertilized also to have it do its best." The amateur will find no difficulty in supplying this.

Governor Hill has signed a bill authorizing the New York state dairy commissioner to appoint five expert butter and cheese makers to visit factories and agricultural fairs and conventions to impart information thereat of the best methods of making butter and cheese.

IN THE APIARY.

Suggestions on Hiving Two Swarms That Issued at Once.

If two or more swarms of bees issue at once, will these on returning separate and go to their different hives, or will they all go to one hive? If they all go to one hive how shall they be separated so that each queen can have her bees?

The above queries have recently been answered by prominent apiarists in different sections by American Bee Journal. Following are some of the replies: Mrs. L. Harrison and G. L. Tinker answered: "Each swarm will return to its own hive." A. J. Cook said: "Sometimes all will go into one hive, but usually they separate for me. Simply take the frames and shake the bees in front of another hive." C. C. Miller said: "They will often unite. When they do you cannot separate them, but you can give a share of the mixed bees to each queen." M. Mabin said: "Generally they will go back to their own hives. If they do not shake a part of the bees in front of the hive that is deficient. But caps both queens for a day or two. They will stay where they are put."

A. B. Mason replied: "Sometimes the bees will return to their own hives, and sometimes they will not. If they are made to fly before they are ready to break up the cluster, and the hives they come from are some distance apart, they will generally return to their own hives."

James Hedden said: "Usually the bees will not return to their own hives in perfect order."

O. W. Damaree answered: "They will generally separate and return to their own hives, but they sometimes make a great mass of it. You can divide the united swarm and give to each one of the queens, but it is the safest way to leave the queens caged for twenty-four hours, as the mixed swarms will often 'ball' the queen."

G. M. Doolittle said: "Frequently both ways; but with a sheet to spread over the hive that is getting the most bees, I have no trouble in getting them divided in each hive about as I desired. 2. You must not let them all go to one hive, but should they get the start of you and do so keep the queens caged, and after they get settled slip them up as you would wheat till you get them as you desire them."

R. L. Taylor said: "If the swarms unite in the air they will cluster together or return to one hive. If the swarms unite you cannot give each queen her own bees, but you can give each half of the united swarm, which is just as well. If swarms cluster together place each queen in a separate basket and shake into each basket the proper share of the bees. If they offer to return to one hive when that hive has its share of the bees, quickly remove it, substitute the other hive and attract the rest of the bees to it by placing the queen at the entrance. But circumstances and experience must often dictate the course to be pursued."

The editor of The Journal said: "The bees may separate and return them to their respective hives but quite often they will go to one of the hives. If they all go together, give the surplus bees to weaker colonies, carefully caging the queen before doing so."

Growing Cabbage.

First get the land in good order for the crop. A mellow, sandy loam, well manured, is the best of all. For field culture transplant in rows three feet apart, with plants about two feet apart in the rows. For early cabbage rick ground, early transplanting and early varieties are required. For winter use the flat Dutch and drumhead varieties are favorites, and may be set out about the 1st of July. Clean cultivation is necessary and the ravages of insects must be prevented. For the latter sprinkling with black pepper, soot, ashes and lime have all been used and recommended. At present pyrethrum insect powder, if fresh and genuine, is believed to be the most reliable, and may be mixed with ten parts of flour, and is blown or dusted on the plants.

Arsenical Poisons on Elm Trees.

The first brood of larvae of the elm leaf beetle appears in June. Timely applications of Paris green or London purple in water sprayed over and among the foliage of the trees will destroy this pest. But the spray will leave some poison on the grass. The poisoned trees need not be in a pasture lot nor around the dwelling house to be a source of danger. If there is the least possible chance of horses, cows, sheep or other animals grazing about them or of children playing there, the greatest caution should be observed in using arsenites.

To Keep Crows from Pulling Corn.

A correspondent in New York Tribune says: "The best of all ways to keep crows from pulling corn is to sow corn broad cast before the planted corn comes up. One quart to the acre will be enough until it is gone, then sow more. Some soak corn, but I never do. The crows will pick up enough to pay for the corn, and the labor of sowing. I have seen soda that would weigh a pound or more that the crows jerked over to get a worm."

A Home Made Garden Cultivator.

The cultivator illustrated in the screen paying cut was recently described in Prairie Farmer by the maker of it, who intends to have used it successfully in his garden for twelve years.

A GOOD GARDEN CULTIVATOR.

He says concerning it: "I got this cultivator up for cultivating onions, but have extended its use to everything raised in the garden. The peculiar shape of the knife or scraper admits of its being worked close up to young and small plants, without danger or injury by cutting, while it does its work exceedingly well in the more advanced stages of plant growth. The knife shows at A can be made from any old worn out cross cut saw blade. Any blacksmith will make it at a cost of about fifty cents. The dotted lines indicate where to bend it. The bend is to make the flange or protector shield not be turned square and sharp, but rather gradually, producing a rounded corner, so that while working very near the row it will not gouge into the plants, or cut off needed roots. The bend for the shank should be sufficient to set the knife at a proper working angle. At B the completed knife is shown. The wheel for the cultivator is 16 inches in diameter, and is made by halving two pieces of 2 by 2 inch hard wood, cut to fit a band iron 2 inches wide. A hole 1 inch in diameter should be bored through the center of the wheel for a bolt or axle.

FOR THE CAMPAIGN.

Every reader of the JOURNAL has one or more friends whom they can, with a little effort, persuade to become regular readers and patrons of the paper. As an inducement to use that effort and influence now, we offer the paper until November 8th for the small sum of 25 cents—the sooner you begin the more papers you get for the money.

Any person receiving the paper without having ordered it, may know that some friend has paid for it for them, if the address tag shows the figures SNov5 following the name.

Send us the names as soon as possible.

In consideration of this very low rate, and to avoid separate account, it is desired that campaign subscriptions be paid in advance.

The Household.

Dyspepsia, Indigestion and Headache seem to take the place of the three graces in many households. How sad is the condition of such a family. The Kidneys and Liver often get deranged and perhaps the parents or even children may be suffering from Diabetes, Bright's Disease or some kindred disease. As a preventive and also a cure for all the diseased conditions of the human family no preparation equals Parmelee's Dyspepsia, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Cure. Only $1.00 for large bottles. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Don't Experiment.

You cannot afford to experiment in experimenting when your lungs are in danger. Consumption always seems at first only a cold. Do not permit any dealer to impose upon you with some cheap imitation of Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds, but be sure you get the genuine. Because he can make more profit he may tell you he has something just as good or just the same. Don't be deceived but insist upon getting Dr. King's New Discovery which is guaranteed to give relief in all chest, lung, and chest affections. Trial Bottles free at Dr. G. W. Crouter's.

Nature Cleanses.

The system, if given an opportunity but very few persons find time to give nature a chance and so the blood which is the great drain for carrying away impurities, becomes so clogged with disease that unless some help is given it, the person will be afflicted by local poisonous deposits such as Skin Pimples, Boils, Carbuncles, Cancers, Scrofula, &c., and often die without helping yourself from all this suffering and loss of time by using Parmelee's Blood Purifier which prevents all diseases in the system. Large bottles $1.00. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

A Sound Legal Opinion.

E. Bainbridge Hensley, Jay County Atty., Clay Co., Texas, says: "Have used Electric Bitters with most happy results. My brother also was very low with malarial fever and jaundice, but was cured by timely use of this medicine. An satisfied Electric Bitters cured Lis life." Mr. D. I. wilcoxson, of Horse Cave, Ky., adds a like testimony, saying: He positively believes he would have died, had it not been for Electric Bitters.

This great remedy will ward off, as well as cure all malarial diseases, and for kidney, liver and stomach disorders stands unequaled. Price 50c. and $1 at Crouter's drug store.

Health Will Follow.

The use of Parmelee's Hop, Iron and Buchu Bitters. They promote sleep and allay pain, restore vigor, tone up and strengthen the system, without exciting the brain as do most other stimulants. They soothe to rest the jarring nerves, and calm the irritable and jaded system. They are prepared from the purest medicines and are the best medicines you can use for restoring health and strength. Try them. 50 cents per bottle. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Guard Against the Strike.

And always have a bottle of Acker's English Remedy in the house. You cannot tell how soon Croup may strike your little one, or a cold or cough may fasten itself upon you. One dose is a preventive and a few doses is a positive cure. All throat and lung troubles yield to its treatment. A sample bottle is given you free and the remedy guaranteed by G. W. Beaman, druggist. 1 1019

We Are Anxious

That every young lady should know what a delicate and harmless beautifier is to be found in Hamilton's Oriental Balm. It is absolutely harmless, and it makes the complexion so soft and brilliant, so surely removes all tan and freckles, that one needs only to give it a trial to be convinced of its merits. Only 50 cents per bottle. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

We Can and Do

Guarantee Acker's Blood Elixir for it has been fully demonstrated to the people of this country that it is superior to all other preparations for blood diseases. It is a positive cure for syphilitic poisoning, Ulcers, Eruptions and Pimples. It purifies the whole system and thoroughly builds up the constitution. Sold by G. W. Beaman, druggist. 2 1019

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

The Best Salve in the world for cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Dr. G. N. Crouter.

Happiness and Contentment

Cannot go hand in hand if we look on the dark side of every little obstacle. Nothing will so darken life and make it a burden as Dyspepsia. Acker's Dyspepsia Tablets will cure the worst form of Dyspepsia, Constipation and Biliousness and make life a happiness and pleasure. Sold at 25 and 50 cents by G. W. Beaman, druggist.

The bend is to make the flange or protector shield not be turned square and sharp, but rather gradually, producing a rounded corner, so that while working very near the row it will not gouge into the plants, or cut off needed roots. The bend for the shank should be sufficient to set the knife at a proper working angle. At B the completed knife is shown. The wheel for the cultivator is 16 inches in diameter, and is made by halving two pieces of 2 by 2 inch hard wood, cut to fit a band iron 2 inches wide. A hole 1 inch in diameter should be bored through the center of the wheel for a bolt or axle.

SLOW PROGRESS.

But Little Business Transacted in Either Senate or House.

THERE was an extended political debate in the Senate the 12th, over a motion to print extra copies of the Pension Committee's report on the revolution pending in the House upon the resolution providing for the appointment of an investigate alleged cruelties of the contractors. The debate in the House was rather more on the tariff bill was generally argued by Republican speakers would destroy the wool-growing industry of the country, while the Democrats argued that it would greatly cheaper clothes. After a long and rambling discussion, which touched upon almost everything except the tariff, including Southern elections, the consideration of the Senate took a recess till 8 o'clock. The House failed to accomplish anything at its evening session, and only passed bills naming up was a ineffectual roll-call the House adjourned.

DEATH IN THE DARKNESS.

A Virginia Midland Passenger Train Makes a Fearful Plunge. Near Orange Court House.

The through Southern train on the Virginia Midland Railroad that left Alexandria, Va., at night went through the trestle between Orange Court House and Barboursville, killing eight persons outright and wounding upward of twenty-five, some severely. The dead and some of the wounded were taken to Orange, while the more seriously hurt were taken to Charlottesville and placed in the Colored Hospital, hotels, and homes of friends. Colonel C. of Alexandria, of the Engineering Department of the Piedmont Air Line, was instantly killed. H. T. Whittington of Greensboro, N. C., lived ten minutes; F. C. Brightwell, of Prospect, Prince Edward County, Va., lived until he reached the hospital; W. D. Parrott, of Albemarle County, was badly injured; J. D. West and J. L. Walthall of Washington, D. C., were also badly injured. Louis Jenkins, of Lynchburg, Va., slightly injured. Pattie Field was seriously injured. Z. Jennings, of Lynchburg, suffered internal injuries, while Capt. T. C. Taylor, of Alexandria, who was in the car near the smoker when the accident occurred, was hurt about the head, and had one leg injured. In addition to the list of killed, three more persons were found dead in clearing away the debris. Two of them were men and one was a woman.

ON THE GALLOWS AT MIDNIGHT.

Ebenezer Stangard, Murderer, Executed in the Columbus (Ohio) Prison.

Ebenezer Stangard, the Mahoning County murderer, was executed in the Ohio Penitentiary annex at Columbus at 1:15 o'clock in the morning. The crime for which he suffered death was the killing of his sweetheart, Alice Hancock, of Youngstown, March 26, 1887, because she received attentions from a rival, Wilbert Knox. He had two trials, his defense in each case being insanity. He met death with a sort of reckless bravado, and left a statement proclaiming his innocence of the crime. Stangard was an ignorant man, and his demeanor on the scaffold was more in keeping with that of a brute than of an intelligent human being. He played a tune on his accordion before ascending the trap.

WHITE VS. BLACK.

Trouble Between Colored Officials and White Residents in Arkansas.

The principal county officers (all colored) at Marion, Ark., were escorted to trains by white men, given tickets, and warned never to return. The County Judge fled the previous night, and the County Clerk was given twenty-four hours to arrange his books. The dispatch avers that the county has been under pretty rule since 1876, and that as prominent white men had been warned to leave, the white citizens undertook to assume control of affairs. The negroes in the county outnumber the whites seven to one.

A CASE OF LEPROSY IN IOWA.

The Patient is a Young Norwegian Woman at Le Grand.

Report has been made to the Iowa State Board of Health of a case of leprosy at Le Grand, Marshall County, the first case, so far as known, in Iowa. The patient is a young Norwegian woman, Helena Halverson, who went to Iowa from Norway in June, 1886. The nature of the disease was not fully determined till a careful examination a few days ago. Every precaution has been taken to prevent the spread of the disease.

Good-By to America.

Advices from Honolulu state that Rev. Alfred Snelling and wife, of Chicago, have arrived at Honolulu, and will soon take passage on a missionary steamer to Ruk Islands, where they will devote the remainder of their lives to missionary work, never again expecting to set foot on American soil.

Husband and Wife Strangle Themselves.

David Clark and his wife were found hanging in a corn-crib on A. Gage's farm, near Sandwich, Ill. They left a paper signed by each saying that they died for each other. Clark was 30 years old and had been employed by Gage a few months. He went to Sandwich from Streator.

WOE IN WEST VIRGINIA.

Hundreds of Families Made Homeless by a Freshet Greater than Ever Before Known.

The freshet in the vicinity of Wheeling, W. Va., was the greatest ever known. The destruction to property is beyond computation, but enough is known to warrant the declaration that nearly every house and most of the lowlands between that point and Clarksburg on the west, and as far at least as Grafton on the Valley River, have been swept away. The Monongahela continued to rise for twelve hours, and during that time the channel was constantly filled with houses, fencing-timber, sawlogs, shocks of wheat, parts of bridges, and other debris. From reports received from the flooded districts of West Virginia it looks as if the money loss would reach nearly $2,000,000. At least three lives have been lost. The flood at Pittsburgh, Pa., and 100 miles north, was most disastrous, thousands of acres of farm land being inundated, and portions of towns swept away.

BRIGHT PROSPECTS FOR BUSINESS.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of the Trade Situation.

R. G. Dun & Co., of New York, in their weekly review of trade, say:

The commercial situation changes little, but only for the better. Crop prospects grow more favorable with every week, the weather improves, and the hopeful feeling, once overcome throughout the West and South is felt throughout the country. Business is still speculative, speculations are now here of weight at present, and there is no disposition to yield to the belief prevailing that the Treasury will prevent pressure or disturbance. Such is the confidence in everywhere controlling, and business depends largely upon sentiment that hopeful sentiment is now. Yet for more than two-thirds of the country the uncertainty usual at this season as to the outcome of the tariff discussion, and the hopes regarding the tariff, by wars of rates, by labor disturbances, or by unfavorable crops, has kept many from entering into better business in near at hand, and everywhere the business is larger than usual for seasonal activity. Better crop prospects account for much of the prevailing confidence. Even in winter-wheat regions, where the damage was greatest, the yield appears to be greater than formerly, and in the South and Southwest, where improves with every week of good weather. So of corn, which promises a large yield in spite of the bad turning in many sections.

HARVESTING PROSPECTS.

The Signal-Service Weather-Crop Bulletin for the Last Week.

The last weather-crop bulletin issued from Washington says that—

The season is about one week late in Northern New England, and from two to three weeks late in the Middle States and in the Upper Mississippi Valley. The vegetative conditions last week were generally favorable throughout the country, except all the agricultural regions east of the Rocky Mountains. A decided improvement is reported in the Atlantic and Gulf States, and in the central valleys. The high temperature in the central valleys, and the abundance of rain in the east, have greatly improved the condition of the cotton crop. Improvements are reported in the conditions of the tobacco and corn crops in the north, due to the favorable weather of the last ten days. Reports from Minnesota and Dakota show that the spring sowing, which was very backwards, is now progressing finely and promising an abundant harvest. Harvesting is now in full swing in Kentucky, Indiana, and Illinois. Harvest is about a week in progress as far north as New Jersey and Pennsylvania, and northern portions of Ohio and Southern Illinois. Wheat is reported in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, but reports from Michigan show that the weather has been favorable for all crops and the wheat harvest will commence next week.

HEAVY LOSS BY STORM.

Damage Amounting to Hundreds of Thousands of Dollars Occasioned in Illinois.

A disastrous flood prevailed through central Illinois the 9th, rain having fallen for thirty hours. There are probably twenty thousand acres of corn under water in Douglas County, while the east crop, which was almost ready to harvest, is damaged to such an extent that it will scarcely pay cutting. About fifteen families in the southern part of Tuscola were compelled to move to higher ground as the water was three feet deep in their homes. Several miles of track on the St. Louis branch of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad were submerged, and in places were being run over the Wabash to Westville Crossing. Hundreds of farms were submerged, bridges washed away, and the damage will reach 200,000.

ROASTED TO DEATH.

Terrific Explosion of Mineral Paint Tanks at Armstrong & Co.'s Paint Factory.

A terrific explosion, as of a hundred dynamite bombs, occurred in the vicinity of Hay-market Square, Chicago. The first report was followed by a second and a third one, which guided the excited thousands to the paint manufactory of D. R. Armstrong & Co., No. 105-7 Fulton street, a three-story frame building extending back to Lydia street. Every few minutes a dull explosion occurred and immediately after huge sheets of flame shot skyward. In the rear of the building, where the fires raged most fiercely, by the body of Alexander Johnson, roasted to a crisp. The explosion occurred in a tank containing twenty-three barrels of naphtha, benzine and mineral paint. The building was completely gutted, causing a loss of over $60,000.

SALOONS MUST BE CLOSED.

A New Decision that Aids the Iowa Prohibitory Law.

A decision "more than ordinary importance and involving a new point under the prohibitory liquor law of Iowa has been rendered by Judge Phelps, of the District Court at Burlington, the salient points being:

Two years ago a saloon-keeper whose place of business was enjoined as a nuisance, appealed to the Iowa Supreme Court, and after filing a supersedeas bond continued the traffic. The saloon-keeper sustained and carried his case to the Supreme court, where it is not likely to be reached for a year or two yet. Recently proceedings were brought to have him arrested and fined for contempt of court in continuing the illegal traffic while his case was in court. His defense was that, pending the decision of the Federal Court, the injunction did not apply, but the District Court now decides that the injunction must stand, and that the saloon must close. The saloon-keeper has now closed up, and others will follow suit, as they admit that further resistance to the law is useless.

KILLED HER HUSBAND.

A Petty Quarrel Leads to a Deadly Fight with Hoes.

A German named Bernard Krugg, living on a farm near the town of Chiown, Neb., got into a quarrel with his wife, with whom he had been working in the corn-field. The dispute ended in a pitched battle with hoes, in which Krugg was struck several times about the face and temple, and fell to the ground fatally wounded. Mrs. Krugg then returned to the house, leaving her husband lying in the field. She is now in jail.

CAPTURED THE CATTLE-THIEF.

A. L. Hunt, Arrested at McGregor, Iowa, Makes a Confession.

The cattle-thief, A. L. Hunt, alias John Hall, was arrested at McGregor, Iowa, and at the time of his arrest had in his possession a shipping bill of a car-load of cattle he had stolen from William Smith, of Rockwell. When questioned as to the theft he finally acknowledged the entire transaction, which led to the arrest of an entire gang of cattle-thieves which have been operating in the western part of Iowa, Northern Kansas, and Eastern Nebraska. He gave as his immediate accomplice in this transaction W. J. Wright, who for several years has circulated between Marshalltown, Creston, and Sheffield.

GEN. SHERIDAN AT NONQUIT.

He Is Removed to His Own Cottage Without Apparent Disorder.

General Sheridan has at last reached his cottage at Nonquit, Mass., where he is now pleasantly located. The trip was not particularly fatiguing, though he was somewhat exhausted. Mrs. Sheridan, who is at the General's side, is much rejoiced over the successful termination of the journey, and with the doctors hopes for the recovery of her husband. The cottage is pleasantly located, and was fittingly decorated in honor of the distinguished patient. Hundreds of people were present when the boat anchored, to welcome the General. General Sheridan's general condition is quite favorable.

DEACONS SENT TO ETERNITY.

The Murderer of Mrs. Ada Stone Executed at Rochester, N. Y.

Edward A. Deacons, murderer of Mrs. Ada Stone, was hanged at Rochester, N. Y. He showed no feeling, and protested his innocence, although he had confessed to the crime before his trial. The drop fell and Deacons was dead in ten minutes. Deacons was accompanied to the place of death by Ada Stone at East Rochester on the evening of Dec. 16, 1887. The husband of the victim, upon returning home found the body of his wife in the cellar, with a flour sack drawn tightly around her neck. She was then murdered because she would not give Deacons food.

A COLORED LYNCHING.

Wm. Smith, a Negro, Dies at the Hands of a Mob.

Some days ago a negro, William Smith, committed a felonious assault on a respectable lady of Pulaski County, Virginia, of which she has since died. The news got to the people in the neighborhood where the diabolical crime was committed, and soon a such a character that it was thought wise to take the fiend to Lynchburg for safe keeping. And night the Sheriff was overpowered and the prisoner taken to the woods, where they hanged him to a tree and riddled his body with bullets.

QUAY PUT AT THE HELM.

The Republican National Committee Chooses a Chairman.

The Republican National Committee has elected M. S. Quay of Pennsylvania Chairman, and J. S. Fassett of New York Secretary. They were also appointed to hold the offices on the Executive Committee, The Executive Committee also was made up as follows: M. H. De Young of California, Frank Hatton of Connecticut, Clarence Brown, R. Davis of Illinois, John C. New of Indiana, J. S. Clarkson of Iowa, W. C. Goodloe of Kentucky, J. Manning of New Hampshire, Garrett A. Hobart of New Jersey, A. L. Conger of Ohio.

The Dreaded Texas Fever.

Farmers along the line of the Lake Erie and Western Railway in Indiana are greatly alarmed over the appearance among their cattle of the dreaded Texas fever, a carload of Texas cattle passed over the road a few days since, and some of the animals died en route and were buried in Tipton County. The infection appears to have caught and is spreading rapidly. In one neighborhood near Tipton ten head of valuable cattle have since died, and a similar disease has made its appearance among the cows of Kokomo, fears fear that the scourge will become general.

Minor Mention.

An elevator with a capacity of 200,000 bushels will be erected by the Western Distillers' Association at Omaha, Neb.

At Alliance, Ohio, the first trial under the prohibition law resulted in a conviction and the closing of the last saloon.

George William Stoddart, the well-known actor, brother of J. H. Stoddart, died at his residence, in Mount Vernon, Westchester County, N. Y.

The name of an unknown man was found in the river near Louisville, Ky., the thread having been cut from ear to ear and weighted with a stone.

Frederick Fairbairn, of Plymouth, Pa., superintendent of gas and oil companies, has been missing since June 27 and is now in Canada. His shortage is figured at $5,000. He has a wife and two children.

A Strange Breed of Cattle.

A strange breed of wild cattle is found in the high hills skirting the Umpqua valley, Oregon, says a letter in the Boston Transcript. In the mountains, near Riddles and Rosebud, they are probably most plentiful, but they do not venture down in the valley much. They stay on the hills, and get water from the living springs which rise there. For the most part they are concealed in the dense growth of oak and fir in their mountains. They are heavy underbrush, too, so that it is a hard matter to get them. They go in bands of six or eight usually, but at night a herd of forty or fifty get together and lie down in the same yard—that is, they sleep in the same spot, which is usually a secluded place among the brush. A band of wild cattle have been known to get together on a cleared place like this every night for a couple of years. "When feeding, there are always a few of them to act as sentinels. While the cattle graze in bands of half a dozen or so, they are, nevertheless, close to other bands, so that an alarm from one of the bulls, which leisurely feed on higher ground, they all run away together. The cattle are all colors and wilder than deer. It is a hard matter to get a shot at them, for the reason that their rest is so keen. They can smell a man at a distance. One was got will in 1855, when the old man Riddles and his son-in-law, Rosebud, first settled came to the valley. Their cow was dried off, and could not be found. After two or three years, all the pioneers had to do when they wanted beef was to rig out a three-pack and mails and go up into the mountains and have had to be killed on sight, the same as bear or panther. It could no more be driven down than deer could. The Rosebud boy, a half-breed, packed on the horses, and carried it down. This occurred a good deal of late years, so that there are not so many as there used to be. A peculiarity about these cattle is, they are eyes and horns are jet black. The rest of the body is a pale apple of the eye are one mass of black. It is distinguish any difference in any part of the body, the color is as black as ink, are long and sharp. Brought to Lake Co. Oregon wild cattle are very wicked fighters.

The Pay-Rolls of Congress.

There is one bill which, when it is introduced into the Senate and House of Representatives, is always sure of prompt passage. It is the one which provides for the salaries of Congress.

There are just 401 members of the House and of the Senate, and to wait upon them and run errands, and look upon the doors as they pass in and out, and open the doors for them, and take care of the thousands of bills they put in, there have employed about 400 people, who are paid the sum total of $684,000 for doing so. Fact. Every member of Congress, for the service of the same there is paid an average of about $1,800 each. The sum little sum of $380,000 is required to pay the salaries of the Senators, and for the compensation of the members of the House $1,695,000 has to be provided, and this further brings the salaries of our national lawmakers up to over $2,000,000 per year.

It costs a little less than $150,000 per session to pay the mileage of the members, and the country pays $50,000 to purchase the stationery for the members and officers of the House alone in any one session. The Treasury spends $20,000 for reporting the debates, whether Congress sits for one month or for twelve, as the official reporter, like most of the clerks, are paid by the year, though they seldom do more than twenty-four work in the twenty-four months that the Congress sits here. Right here is where the political workers come in; over $150,000 is appropriated for clerks to committees, who have about the snuggest places in Washington. Many a lady's time was wasted in the fairness suffice for the performance of these duties, and that only when Congress is in session. When the government takes place the good clerks go home to their homes and spend most of their time in the Sergeant-at-Arms forwards a check for their salary due him, just the same as if he were engaged in the government service every working day in the year. It requires $50,000 to keep up the annual pay-roll of the officers, clerks, and messengers of the Capitol and the dome of the Capitol to do the business of our 401 working Congressmen.—New York Graphic.

The Great Wealth of Alaska.

A prominent further of New York recently said to a Mail and Express reporter: "No one will ever be able to tell the real wealth of Alaska. Its wealth of the abundance of its skinned animals. The Russians used to value the country for its furs, and it was mainly for the furs that this country acquired it from Russia. The trade has grown very much since its acquisition to this country. The shipments of sea otter and fur sealskins alone have more than doubled during the past two years, and now averages annually $1,500,000 in value. The fur of the fur seal is about that part of the country is a long one. The land furs comprise otter, beaver, brown bear, black bear, lynx, red fox, blue and white fox, mink, martin, polar bear, lynx, and muskrat. Rabbits, marmots, and wolverines are also common, but their skins are retained by the natives. The furs are tanned, and the furs, sea and land, now obtained from Alaska are sold for from average over $3,000,000, and there is no sign of decrease in the yield. The competition of the traders for skins has stimulated the natives to greater industry in hunting, and the prices paid to them by the hunters are from four to ten times more than were current during the Russian rule."

Thoughts for the Family.

NATIONAL LAWMAKERS.

What Is Being Done by the National Legislature.

THE President sent to the Senate, on the 6th inst., messages vetoing the bills granting pensions to Nathaniel D. Chase, Harriet Cooper, William M. Campbell, Jr., and Julia Weiss. In vetoing the Cooper bill, the President says: "The husband of this beneficiary served as Major in an Illinois regiment from Sept. 3, 1863, to April 1, 1865, when his resignation was accepted, it appearing that he contracted a disease of the ankle. It is admitted on all sides that Mrs. Cooper drank a good deal, but the evidence shows that their cause arose at the conclusion that death was attributable to that cause. The husband was medically examined in 1866 and then claimed was caused from rheumatism, but no physical disability was found to exist, and he was given four documentary and cheap absolutions. The physician who last attended the soldier testifies that the disease of which he died was alcoholism. This should be the most reliable of all the testimony, coming from the physician who treated the husband during the incompetent habits of the deceased, and the fact that the brain was involved, it satisfied me that the rejection of the widow's claim by the Pension Bureau, on the ground that her husband's death was mainly attributable to his habits, and the other acts are vetoed on the ground that the evidence in the case is insufficient to warrant a departure from the rules of the House and the remainder of the sections of the pension laws. The pension bills vetoed are those made by the Republicans being rejected affirmatively by the Democrats, and are those of Mrs. Weiss, the widow of a Mexican soldier, aged, poor, and sick, and those of Mrs. Campbell, the widow of a Mexican soldier, aged, poor, and sick.

THE House of Representatives spent the day in the consideration of the bill to amend the 7th and 8th sections of the internal revenue laws relating to the manufacture of and traffic in spirituous liquors, and to the manufacture of and traffic in oleomargarine, and to the adulteration of the same, and to the taxes on the manufacture of and traffic in tobacco and cigars, and fixing the duty on imported cigars, and for other purposes.

The Committee on Ways and Means, by a majority vote, reported the bill with a recommendation that it be passed, and Mr. Kelley announced himself in favor of the proposition to tax the adulterations of the liquors and to the alternative proposition to increase the tax on the manufacture of spirits, that the system of protection duties had developed a class of manufacturers who considered themselves essential to the maintenance of that position, and who, if the revenue should be reduced, would demand that the Chairman make an assault upon the protection system. He (Mr. Kelley) was not prepared to assent and opposed the bounty policy. He was in favor of the tariff, and was prepared to arrange the amendment and his speech was directed to the proposition to increase the tax on the manufacture of spirits. Mr. Morrison said he was not prepared to discuss the question of the tariff, and though they declare their purposes to be in favor of a tariff bill, yet they do not, of course, claim to speak for those who are opposed to the tariff. The Democratic friends are threatened. They advocate a measure which, if it should pass, will be a sweeping reform, and every Republican in the land—a system which bounts discontent, because it takes the money from the people and gives it to the reserve (an from the Empress. Again, it is declared that the Democrats are in favor of a tariff for revenue only, and that the taxes, and forced the metal use of the people, and which enhances the cost of the necessaries of life, and which enables the manufacturers to levy a tribute on the people. The Republicans are in favor of a tariff for revenue only, and that the opening of the larger and more profitable sources of revenue, and the reduction of the revenue, and the reduction of the revenue, and the reduction of the

DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS.

For President of the United States—
GROVER CLEVELAND, of New York.
For Vice President of the United States—
ALLEN G. THURMAN, of Ohio.

The republican party is in favor of protection to capital; the democratic party would rather protect the workingman, who is not so able to protect himself.—Congressman Ford.

"THE Gogebic Iron Spirit has a candidate for congress this fall in the person of W. S. Johnson, of Sutton's Bay. Johnson is a wealthy lumberman and is largely interested in Gogebic mining properties. It is claimed that he is quite popular in the lower counties of the districts, and is a most available candidate"—Menominee Democrat. Johnson is a hustler, and if the convention should select him, we can guarantee a lively canvass.

LOCAL political circles at Grand Rapids are somewhat agitated by the open declarations of Dr. C. S. Hazeltine, Wm. Widdicomb, G. M. Lemon and Joseph Martin that they will vote the Cleveland ticket. They have always been staunch republicans and have stood high in social and political circles and Widdicomb was six years ago the republican candidate for mayor. They say they cannot stand the republican platform and have great admiration for Cleveland's business administration.

The Beauties of Protection.

WHEN you are being talked to about the beauties of protection,
REMEMBER,
That the "protection" the republican party is advocating is not protection, but prohibition absolute.

That unprotected labor is better paid in this country than that employed in protected industries.

That Blaine says that American spinners get $7.07 per week while English spinners get $7.20; yet Americans make 2¾ yards of cloth to an Englishman's 2½;

That "protection" makes you buy goods at any price the American manufacturer may demand, yet he can import pauper labor from Hungary and Italy free.

That tramps were unknown before the present protective tariff;

That "protected" miners in Pennsylvania lost 128 days in 1884, 111 in 1885, and over a hundred each year since, so that coal trusts might control the output of coal and raise the price you pay for fuel;

That in protected Pennsylvania, laborers are working for 50 cents per day;

That the labor on a piece of ingrain carpet upon which the duty is 24¼ amounts to only $7.50;

That the labor cost of a pair of shoes in Lynn, where the wages are double that paid in England, is only 33 cents, while the English manufacturer has to pay 50 cents.

That under "protection only 17 per cent of our commerce is carried by American ships, while under low tariffs we carried 90 per cent;

That President Cleveland does not advocate free trade, but a reduction of tariff rates;

That the Mills bill only reduces the average rate of duty from 47 to 40 per cent;

In fact, that you will bear nothing but misrepresentation from the advocates of "protection," miscalled;

That they have no argument;

That the masses of the democratic party are wage-workers;

That the advocates of "protection" are monopolists who have been able by its help to fatten on their countrymen;

That "protection" has made more millionaires and more paupers in a shorter space of time that could have been possible under any other circumstances;

That the democratic platform means social equality.—Cadillac Democrat.

Spirit of the Political Press.

Protection means monopoly. Bear that in mind.—[New York Graphic.

Two battle cries. 1840—Log-cabin and hard cider. 1888—Chinese wall and free whiskey.—[Springfield Republican.

The more the workingmen look into Ben Harrison's Chinese record the more they don't like it.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The State of New York is not only democratic, but the most democratic of the states of the north, and furthermore, the chances of Harrison and Morton are to be regarded as hopeless if New York is to be relied upon to elect them.—[New York Sun.

It is not "free trade" Europe, but tariff-cursed and monopoly ridden Europe that is sending a half million of its pauper laborers to America every year. Free Trade England pays the labor more and contributes fewer immigrants to the United States than any other nation of Europe. These are solemn facts, and we challenge any protectionist paper to disprove them.—Lansing Journal.

The Hour and the Man.

The convention has nominated Grover Cleveland for a second term. It was done by acclamation. It was done with enthusiasm. It was done because the unanimous sentiment of the Democratic party demanded it. It was done because justice to the man who has given the country a capable, honest and efficient administration required this indorsement of his conduct at the hands of the Democratic party.

Well, it has been done and the announcement comes without surprise, because everybody knew it would be done. Everybody expected it. Perhaps it would not be too much to say that, excepting the Republican politicians, who naturally and for obvious reasons do not like it at all, everybody hoped it would be done.

It will be said, of course, because they who do not like Grover Cleveland and who fear his strength with the people must say something to break the force of their bitter disappointment, that the president compelled his renomination against the real sentiment of his party. It is said that Democrats do not like Cleveland, but they nominate him because they have to. This is the current Republican explanation of what has happened at St. Louis.

It is very weak folly. It may indeed be that there are some Democratic politicians of a certain sort who do not like Grover Cleveland and who would have prevented his renomination if they could have prevented it. No doubt they have reason for their enmity. They have made no stand against Cleveland, have arrayed no opposition, have put no effective obstacle in the way of his nomination, but have been swept out of the way like withered leaves before a mighty wind.

What compelled the renomination of President Cleveland? Not his own will nor the power of any combination or political machine as Republicans vainly pretend. It was not that, but it was the irresistible force of public sentiment called out by the invincible courage, the unflinching honesty, the earnestness and sincerity of the plain man who simply did his duty and did it well. It was that force that, sweeping before it the objections of the timid, the sophistry of the demagogue, the machinations of the corrupt and envious and malignant, has compelled the renomination of Grover Cleveland, the faithful official, the earnest patriot, the honest man.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Tribute to Thurman.

The candidacy of Mr. Thurman emphasizes the palpable fact that the face of Democracy is turned toward the sunrise. From conferring merited reward on the conservative, honest, straightforward administrator who occupies the White House, the party, with one accord, hastens to glad acclaim to bestow the highest remaining honor at its disposal on the veteran statesman who during nearly half a century has borne aloft its banner. The practical unanimity of the great national organization in support of the Ohio statesman is a spontaneous uprising of the party in obedience to the voice of the people. To stimulate enthusiasm for Thurman no artifical methods are needed. "One blast upon his bugle horn" rallies the Democratic millions from the lakes to the Gulf. One wave of the red bandanna inspires with courage, confidence and the elation of impending triumph every believer in the Democratic theory of individual behavior, partisan direction and governmental administration. What Democrat can hear the name of Thurman without feeling his pulses thrill, his heart beats quicken, his brow flush with honest pride? What independent can contemplate the spectacle of a united Democracy cheering to the echo the "old Roman" without appreciating the significance of a wise and noble action? What Republican of enlightened and liberal spirit will hesitate to yield to Democracy the admiration due to a gracious recognition of qualities that have adorned high public station and reflected credit, by Thurman's splendid services, on his country-n, irrespective of party?—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Strongest Yet.

On every hand it is asserted by Democrats and conceded by Republicans that the St. Louis ticket is the strongest one that could have been named. Such a belief makes an admirable starting point for the campaign that must follow. There are no jealousies or rivalries to be smoothed over. If the Democrats cannot win with Cleveland and Thurman, they cannot win at all. If the Republicans at Chicago should end their contentions by similar concord and agreement, it would be a matter of wonder as well as of congratulation.—Philadelphia Record.

State Teachers Institute.

The State Teachers' Institute for Charlevoix county will be held at Boyne City, commencing at 10 o'clock a. m. Monday, July 30, and closing at 4 p. m. Friday, Aug. 3.

Mr. R. L. Corbett, Boyne City, local committee.

The value of the instruction received at these institutes is being very generally recognized by teachers and school officers. As a rule, it has been the experience of county examiners and other examining officers, that the most successful teachers are those who have availed themselves of the normal instruction offered by these local institutes.

The daily sessions of the institutes for this year, will as heretofore be devoted exclusively to topics of special interest to teachers, presented by persons of extended practical experience as teachers, and who have made a special study of institute work. The evening lectures will be of a popular character.

The institute law allows teachers whose schools are in session at the time appointed for the county institute, held under the direction of the state superintendent, to close their schools during the continuance of such institute without forfeiting their wages for as many half-days as they are in attendance at the institute. This provision of the law, and the fact that there will be no tuition or enrollment fee exacted, should insure the attendance of every teacher in the county who possesses the true professional spirit.

Full particulars in regard to board etc, may be obtained upon application to the local committee.

More Railroad News.

Those gentlemen who agreed about June 1st for the immediate construction of the D., C. & E. R. R., having failed to return in compliance with the terms of the agreement, and the limit of time for the option having expired, the board of directors on Tuesday signed a contract with Mr. Geo. S. Frink, of Millerton, N. Y. whereby that gentleman furnishes the necessary capital to build and operate the road, conditioned upon the directors raising a bonus of $10,000 along the line of road. The survey is to be continued southward to Marion, Osceola county, on the line of the Toledo, Ann Arbor & Northern Michigan railroad, and the road is to be in operation before the close of next season.

While this appears to look very encouraging, our readers must not fail to observe that it means the raising by Charlevoix of at least one-fourth the entire amount asked for ($25,000) by bonds of the village, that being probably the only way in which that amount can be raised. Briefly it means, "No bonds; no road." Will any one for a minute believe that it would not be a good investment? The heaviest tax payers of the village are in favor of it. The survey party are expected to start next Monday.

Wide Awake for July.

An exquisite portrait of Helen Keller, the wonderful little deaf and dumb blind girl of Alabama, is the frontispiece of July Wide Awake, and Sallie Joy White, in an illustrated article, "The story of Helen Keller," gives details about this marvelous child that will interest old and young, school-children and metaphysicians. Another delightful piece of biography is the Monroe chapter in "The Children of the White House," the fourpresidential series which has been so long preparing for Wide Awake. Very little has ever been given to the public concerning President Monroe's two beautiful daughters, Eliza and Maria, but for this paper the most interesting matter has somehow been unearthed. Eliza was educated in Paris at Madame Campan's famous school where her intimate schoolmate was the future Queen of Holland, Hortense Beauharnais, the daughter of Josephine, and the school-life is the interesting reading; and as Mrs. Hay, in the White House this same Eliza started most of the vexing questions in Washington etiquette—the entire chapter is piquant reading for everybody. Susan Coolidge has a fine old-world story, entitled "Eloka's Choice." John Burroughs, in "How to Observe Nature," tells some of his charming secrets. Geraldine Butts has a beautiful illustrated four-page ballad, "The Little princess." Edward Everett Hale in "The Story of Boston Common" gives an account of "The Artillery Elections" when he was a boy. There is capital corn collector's story, "The Red, Red Copper." Mrs Humphrey tells "How Poems, Opinions and Parodies," which we hope to mention after a careful reading. Mr. Smiley is doing considerable literary work, and his book has reached the fourth edition. For sale by G. W. Beaman.

This is the kind of weather that induces the fishermen to visit the secluded places about our streams and lakes, which our county so amply affords, and is not a few that regale themselves of its pleasures.

The East Jordan Lumber Co., have put in another boiler and are now running a double crew. We understand that this company are to furnish the power for the water works that the town will have in the near future.

Teachers of Charlevoix county will be interested to learn that the State Teachers Institute will be held at Boyne City during the week beginning July 30th. It is a good time and a large attendance should be assured.

Chas. Gotham with the Charlevoix Mfg. Co., built for E. H. Green a fine hardwood mantle with brackets and frame for a mirror. It was a good piece of joiner work, and both design and workmanship will be admired by all who see it.

W. H. Healey, of East Jordan, has one kiln of fine brick—55 thousand—ready for shipment and another one ready to burn. Mr. H. furnished the brick for the new drug store of Harry Branch, at that place, which for quality is surely A1.

Mrs. John T. McElroy died at her home in Banks township last Friday, of apoplexy, age 57 years, and was buried on Tuesday. She was born in Antrim county, Ireland. Came to America in 1848. Has lived in this vicinity about 15 years.

To resorters and others who want to see the beauties and enjoy the fresh air of a ride on Pine Lake, the North Shore excursion rates of 50 cents per round trip,—to go and return same trip,— and in parties of eight or more, these tickets are good for the day.

The Central House, East Jordan, since it opened has in patronage far exceeded the expectations of Mr. Green, the proprietor. But this is just as it should be. Mr. Green has taken every pains with the house and surroundings, is very courteous and friendly, and well merits the patronage he is surely getting.

Twice during the past week the telephone line between Dr. Charlevoix and Smithson's camp has been cut with an axe,—evidently no accident but done on purpose. Dr. Crouter says he will give $25 for any information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of the perpetrator of the outrage.

The Friant will give an excursion to Petoskey next Sunday, leaving East Jordan at 7.30 a. m. and Charlevoix at 9.00 for the benefit of all who desire to attend the exercises at camp meeting at Bay View. Returning the boat will leave Petoskey at 5.00 o'clock. Round trip tickets: East Jordan $1.00, Ironton 75 cts., Charlevoix 50 cts.

The yacht Margnerite was fitted out this week, and made a trial trip on Pine Lake on Tuesday. She will go to Mackinac, to Duluth and other Lake Superior ports and afterward down the west shore of Lake Michigan, to Chicago. Two sailors from the Grand Haven life-saving station arrived last week to accompany the party.

☞"The Spy of Sibloh" is as well known as was ever Uncle Tom's Cabin, and we predict that it will never fail to draw crowded audiences as long as there is one old soldier left in our land. It is grand, and has the estimable feature of being realistic but not overdrawn.—Cincinnati Commercial.—At Bartholomew's opera house, three nights, commencing Monday, July 23d.

The "Little Nugget" company were greeted with a full house at the opera house Monday evening, and their performance in every respect sustains what they advertise. Their programme says, "In three acts and five thousand laughs," and their survey was five thousand laughs, for the audience was in continual laughter for three hours. The manager announced his intention to return here next season.

A great many resorters insist that Charlevoix does not need a railroad; that with our many boats we are better off without that a railroad would be a damage to us; and other like expressions. If those same resorters could be set down here some time in mid-winter, and have an urgent call to another part of the state, they would very soon change their minds about our need of a railroad, and instead of doing everything to discourage a road would use their influence in behalf of it. If the cars could be started today, the resort hotels would receive the first direct benefit. Our hotels would not accommodate one-half the people who would come here on the cars. But over-looking our hotel interests, our permanent, all-the-year business interests demand better facilities for travel and transportation in the season of closed navigation and those resorters who oppose or discourage these interests make enemies of our citizens.

The Doctor's mistake.

The novel of the season which is calculated to make everybody talk about it is "The Doctor's Mistake," by Charles Howard Montague and and Clement Milton Hammond. Mr Montague is well known as the author of "Two Strokes of the Bell," and even more widely as the "review" of Washington Irving Bishop in the mind-reading sensation of a year ago. "The Doctor's Mistake" is a weird and curious story. There are but four characters in it and they are whirled along in a most unexpected climax in which the wind of one passes into the body of the other. "The heroine," says the New York Sun "is one of the most unique and hideous characters to be found in fiction." The doctor, her guardian, is a scientist with the theological views of Robert G. Ingersol and the hero is a well-meaning man, strong in the faith of his ancestors. These are the two whose personality gives so strangely mixed in the end. It is a question whether the materialistic arguments advanced by Dr. Lewenthal in the course the work are intended to be overthrown, wholly or in part by unexpected ending. And that is just why discussion and argument follow in its wake wherever it is read It is certainly startling enough and novel enough to warrant a second reading. It is published by Thomas Bowmer, Jr. & Co., Globe Building, Boston, in cloth at $1. per copy.

Charlevoix Summer Resort.

At the annual meeting held on Thursday, the time for holding the annual meeting was changed from third Tuesday to third Thursday of July each year.

A committee was appointed to make a thorough revison of the bylaws and report next year.

The report of the treasurer showed a prosperous state of finances.

The outlook for the present season is most encouraging. There are more people at the hotel than at this time last year.

The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That in this annual meeting of our association we cannot refrain from expressing our sorrow that since we were last together, death has removed from among us three of our valued members Messrs Charles N. Holden, J. P. Woodbury and John H. King. While we bow in submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, we make grateful mention of the character and worth of these our associates; we cherish their memory with sincere and affectionate regard; and we extend to the surviving members of their several families our unfeigned sympathy, and invoke for them the comeoling support of the God of all peace.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year;

President—S. A. Gibson.
Vice President—D. B. Merrill.
Treasurer—Kendall Brooks.
Secretary—F. M. Hodges.
Directors—H. P. Parmelee, O. M. Allen, I. D. Bixby, J. L. Sebring, P. Ranney.

Wilson—Mills.

George A. Wilson and Miss Bertha Mills were married by Rev. W. H. McCartney, at the residence of L. E. Allen, on Wednesday evening.

At the close of the ceremony they took a carriage and were driven to their new home, corner of Clinton and Grant streets, where they were surprised to find the house already well filled and an excellent lunch of coffee, cake, ice cream and fruits, awaiting them. After lunch, the evening was devoted to a general good time until a late hour. The contracting parties are well-known young people of Charlevoix, Mr. Wilson having been for a number of years an assistant in Crouter's drug store, and at present with Geo. W. Beaman. Miss Mills' home is Aurora, Ohio, but she has lived so long with her sister, Mrs. L. E. Allen, that all have come to regard her as one of our own people,—as she now is. Unlike many young married couples their home was made comfortable in every respect in advance, and the reception of last evening was a sort of house-warming for them. "May they live long and prosper."

ON THE BEACH.

Our Correspondent Busy with His Camera and Pencil at Long Branch.

Feminine Bathers, Fashionable Lovers, Summer Courtships, and Umbrella Matches.

The Old Bran of the Turf, the Belle of the Beach, and Other Picturesque Characters.

LONG BRANCH, July, 1888.

It seemed to me your correspondent, as though an instantaneous camera with which to photograph some of the sights of this beach, might lend a pencil in the making of sketches for your paper, and so the idea was tried, but only with a kind of success in the first instance. The difficulty in the way to the inducements of beauty, one of the earliest of the belles at this great seaside resort was frowned without her knowing it. The accompanying drawing shows how she was caught in an agreeably graceful pose, as she sat gazing seaward, with one hand holding to her wind-blown hat. She was aware of the general fact, of course, that she was a handsome young woman, but she had no idea at that instant that a flash of light let into a detective camera was making a portrait of her. No complaint was made of the result. That why do I legally assertion that this first attempt in Long Branch photography was a success? Only because of the dialogue that ensued.

"Ah, how d'ye do," said an obtrusively jovial and forcedly vivacious voice, coming from a man whom I recognized as a theatrical agent. "You're photographing her, eh?"

"Yes," I admitted, "I was trying whether I could get a picture worth engraving."

"All right—alright—but if your shotgun of a camera missed the target just let me know, and I will shot you twenty-seven different photographs of her. Who is she? Who is she—eh?" And then he went on to name her as an actress whom he was promising to engage for a dramatic season, and as to whom he went into a quarter of an hour of extravagant laudation.

All of which seems to prove that the professional actress can subdue her fair sisters in private life in focusing the eye of admiration, even when she is off the stage, and pretending to be careless of her power.

There is one kind of person at Long Branch who doesn't alter with season after season's changes of fashion. He is the old bran of the turf, and I managed to fit my lens on a good specimen as he stood talking with a belle of the yearnda. Considered as a fashion plate, the girl was edited and amended right up to date, and the contrast between eye upon the first feminine bather in sight. As usual, the earliest of the season's sojourners of the surf are the most prominent in style. The first July proof of this fact is a shapely creature who exposes her face and arms to sun, water, and the gaze of spectators, and who will quickly be so scorched by the elements, if not by the criticisms of observers, that she would have to extend her sleeves to her wrists and cover her head with a wide-brimmed hat. Its only rival in audacity thus far is a young woman whose bathing costume is of conventionally modest sightliness, but who wears its seemingly scant material so adjusted as to reach to her ankles, but at that point a pair of bangles jingle as she walks, and a ring of gold is a finger ring. Now I say that such eccentricity is the rare exception, and that generally Long Branch bathers are much more decorous in garb and conduct than the average at seaside resorts.

Even in a business way, however, it seems to be at this summer capital of frivolity the thing to practice the very latest fads. One of the secondhand hotels is filling up faster than usual, and with a higher grade of society. Mirrors, chairs, three or four such fashions have already arrived, and the landlord tells me that more are to come.

"Why, I can't imagine," said the caper. "His clerk caught on to the fact that the newest notion in stationery was an envelope with a flap so arranged that it lastened just under the corner upon which the postage stamp was placed, and thus it closed the letter without any gumming or sealing. The use of these envelopes had extended before Fifth avenue, where they had only been in vogue a month or so. The clerk suggested that the season's circulars for the ensuing ward, "and I was awfully glad that it hadn't been a thousand."

"And why?" was asked.

"Oh, because I would have lost nothing, and a thousand would surely have made him pier is one of the unfortunate constructions, so far as keeping up the tone of the place is concerned, and excursion boats bring down multitudes of casual and miscellaneous visitors. These invaders are kept out of the first-class hotels, unless they are willing to pay for such shelter by registering for dinner. Otherwise, the more economical take their luncheon baskets to certain booths on the bluff, where they are allowed to eat under shade, provided they quench their thirst, to a reasonable extent, with beer bought on the premises. The Shrewsbury and Navesink rivers, which are in the way to the ocean, and the shore invites excursionists, who come from New York in small steamboats, and who can there find a great variety of diversion, ranging from the pleasure of a clam-bake to the wickedness of a secluded gambling hall. As people from the hotels go to the Shrewsbury, also for amusement, various conglomerates of folks are to be seen. One extensive sort of young matron discovered, aboard a Shrewsbury steamer, a suit of her own clothes on the person of her maid, who was taking an afternoon off. The mistress did not notice herself at the time, but she discovered the resemblance when she saw the young and worn to have her another slipping that this one should be at least three sizes bigger or smaller than herself, so that her wardrobe should in future be safe. But she had to sacrifice the particular costume that had been misused because she learned that the girl's sweetheart companion on this occasion, although he had looked genteel enough in a white flannel suit, was a threadyard monte man, awaiting the opening of the rare season for business, and she declared that she couldn't think of ever again putting on a dress that had been contaminated by such low companionship. She was trusting, is my information.

I judge that there is a fine opening at hotel be sent out in such envelopes. That was done, and it is a positive fact that no less than eight or ten rich families, who were undecided which hotel to go to, were brought to a decision by that trivial device."

It is a fair estimate that of all the marriages in wealthy circles seventy-five per cent. are the result of summer courtship. A saunter through the parlors, verandas and grounds of any Long Branch hotel will yield evidence enough to support these figures. If the offering be restricted to the matrimonial resort it may be added that not less than twenty-five per cent. of the matches made on the bluff overlooking the sea, and the sands below, are the result of mutual understandings arrived at under umbrellas. There must be something in the shade, and the fashionable lover, for he seems to imagine that an umbrella held pretty well down in front of the faces of the cooing pair will hide them from observation; but he forgets that the eyes of curious spectators may make an attack from the rear, and so the camera was able to make the negative from which this sketch of positive courtship is drawn. And this couple may be safely accepted, by the way, as exhibits of neat things in summer young folks. The dandy in coat of the beau, along with his soft, black hat, and the belle, who hands is in the extreme of July styles. To the strap across his shoulders he carries a pair of small but powerful field glass, with which to study the ocean for distant crafts. The sailor hat of the belle and her flannel gown are also in obedience to the latest commands of fashion.

But all who come to Long Branch do not belong to the ranks of swelldom. An iron man, and the many-seasoned fellow was therefore green. His bald head, with its remnant of hair brushed straight forward from the back, parting nearly at the corners of his eyebrows, was uncovered by his polite salute to the young woman who had spoken to him. He carried a cane, and his patent leather shoes were topped by white canvas overgaiters. But his chief characteristic, and one which he had maintained annually, according to my recollection, for not less than fifteen years, was a frock coat of so bright a drab that it was almost white. This garment was buttoned closely from his wide, loose to below the level of his hips, and it set off his tall, straight figure admirably. He was an early arrival from the exterior of sportsmen who keep the Monmouth Park horse races going from the Fourth of July to the end of the season, and who augment the attractiveness of the place by the presence of their belongings in the gorgeous club houses of the Branch. The two palaces of chance hitherto famous for their splendors at this resort have now a rival in a third and equally pretentious concern, and so Long Branch becomes more than ever before the Monte Carlo of America. The ancient bean has just had his first go at faro in one of these respondent dens, and his luck had been pretty good.

"It told me that he had won five hundred dollars," said the belle a few minutes after camera was making a portrait of her. No complaint was made of the result. That why do I legally assertion that this first attempt in Long Branch photography was a success? Only because of the dialogue that ensued.

"Ah, how d'ye do," said an obtrusively jovial and forcedly vivacious voice, coming from a man whom I recognized as a theatrical agent. "You're photographing her, eh?"

"Yes," I admitted, "I was trying whether I could get a picture worth engraving."

"All right—alright—but if your shotgun of a camera missed the target just let me know, and I will shot you twenty-seven different photographs of her. Who is she? Who is she—eh?" And then he went on to name her as an actress whom he was promising to engage for a dramatic season, and as to whom he went into a quarter of an hour of extravagant laudation.

The Art of Kissing.

At the start the average man makes a botch of kissing, writes a New York correspondent. The beauty of a kiss lies in its impulsiveness and its impressibility, nor is it possible to make the first one too brief. There is danger in the attempt to make the initial kiss complete. The girl won't have it. There is too much audacious avarice about it. The thing to do is to go at the fair creature's lips slowly, so as not to frighten her. It is to be expected that she will draw them away from the point of attack; but instead of retracting the thing for heroism to do is to kiss her on some place—on the cheek, the temple, behind the ear or on the hair. A woman's fancies are as branching as the trees of a forest, and, however unsatisfactory to the swain the misplaced kiss may have been, if well if left to itself, make the recipient wonderfully indignant next time. She will caress the spot where your lips have been, look at the place through a handmirror and dream of the one who placed it there. When sufficient progress has been made in the lover-making to warrant the ideal kiss, take it methodically, with both hands, and the "gentle touch that love is made of." Let the left arm go about—not her neck, to wrinkle a crape-like ruche and mess a 72-cent coiffure, dressed for your special benefit, no doubt—but about her shoulders. Take her chin in the right hand, allowing the three fingers to touch the throat, and lift her face to yours. Look with the thumb and forefinger, which issue skyward, three or four such quiet. Move her head to one side and a little backward, and approaching so that the quarter of lips describe the diameters of an imaginary square, kiss her twice—the second double the length of its very short predecessor. This double kiss is a clew to a man's culture. Only the uncouth, ill-bred lover kisses as he learned to count—by ones. The gentleman who has had the good fortune to be born in an atmosphere of refinement makes a duet of his first and final salutation, whatever may be the numerical value of the intermediates. The well-bred girl wants short sharp, snapping kisses, that pop imaginably, but still that pop. A kiss on the hair is the kiss of a poet; tenderness is implied when the lips press the eyelids; reverence is spoken when the brow is caressed, and protecting love when the cheek is embraced.

Nothing can sanctify a kiss but love, without which the sweetest lips are unsavory and unwholesome.

Invisible Reins.

All our readers may have power if they seek it. But what sort of power? Not the public office which makes conspicuous both their good deeds and their bad ones; not the great wealth which causes the world afoot to doff its caps while the millionaire rolls past and then curse him behind his back. Nay, but they may hold either invisible reins of influence by which people of all conditions may be turned hither and thither, restrained, urged forward, or controlled.

Would you find these invisible reins? There are many to be had; let only two of them be mentioned: One is gentleness. "The power of gentleness," said Henry Martyn, "is irresistible." Is it not true? Look around your group of acquaintances. Whose word has most weight? Whose approval is most valued? Not the blusterer's, not the bold, loud-voiced wrangler's, not the positive, unreasoning dogmatist's, but that of the gentle man, whose opinion of self, quiet manner, willingness to stand back, all point out true wisdom.

But gentleness alone will not do; it is a strong influence, but it needs a counterpoise, lest it degenerate into weakness. Let the right hand of gentleness be united with the flame-driven steel wire of firmness, and you hold in your grasp power which crowned heads might envy.

This is no fancy sketch. We have in mind one who from boyhood has ever exercised the strongest influence in whatever community his lot was cast, and all thoughtful people agree that he owes his position mainly to these two well-adjusted reins, gentleness and firmness; to the fact that, while his speech and behavior to all are gentle and kind and considerate as a tender woman, by his principles in matters great and small are as fixed as is the mountain chain of his native land.

A Modest Doctor.

A physician who had put his professional cap into his pocket and discussed the editor to give him a notice.

"Just sit down there at the desk, Doc, and write out what you want," said the editor.

"Oh, dear, no! I can't write about myself."

"I think you can. Just give me the points if you are too modest to say what you want, and I will do the necessary strength."

The Doctor sat down, and after much spluttering produced the following modest piece of work:

"Dr. Ale Collier, whose card we print to-day, is without doubt the finest physician in our city. He is a perfect gentleman, and is one of the best surgeons in our city, if not the best. His charges are reasonable for all, even for those who never loses a case, and we are glad to know that he has refused a lucrative practice in another town in order to remain in our city, where he is so highly esteemed for his skill and gentlemanly qualities. He is not an old man, but he is thoroughly experienced and rarely loses a case. We congratulate the people of our enterprising and beautiful city that he will remain in our city. His office hours are from morning until night when not engaged, and this of itself is an accommodation to the people of our city."—Ark. Traveler.

WHAT JANE ANN SAID.

A right smart lass was the maid, Jane Ann,
And she had wooers, the land round.
For a baker boy and a lawyer lad
Both sighed for the lovely Jane.
But Jane Ann liked the lawyer lad,
And he was the man for Jane Ann said.
"The baker boy is honest, to wise
And the baker boy I'll wed.

O, the baker boy makes cakes and pies,
And the lawyer lad makes laws,
"The baker boy is honest to wise
Just like his lovely brown."

So Jane Ann married the baker boy,
And the lawyer lad married Jane,
And glad was she, for he never knew
What it was to want for bread.
And Jane Ann lived in plenty,
And this is what Jane Ann said;
"It's a pinch for the lawyer lad
When a baker boy they wed.

The fee-er was the lawyer lad,
And his practice didn't pay;
But the baker boy kept his purse,
So the lad he ran away.
"Then Jane Ann said to her voice,
And this is what Jane Ann said:
"If I had married the lawyer lad,
I'd have died for the want of bread."

O, the baker boy makes cakes and pies,
And this is what Jane Ann said,
"The baker boy is bound to rise
Just like his lovely bread."

A NARROW ESCAPE.

Well, gentlemen, if you wish it, I'll tell you the story. When I was a youth of 19, and lived with my parents in a Pennsylvania town, I had a taste for railroading and a boyish ambition to become a driver, although I had been educated for a totter pro suits.

During my college vacation I lounged about the station almost constantly, chatting with the firemen and trainmen, and especially with a driver named Silas Markley. I became much attached to this man, notwithstanding he was 72-cent coiffure, dressed for your special benefit, no doubt—but about her shoulders. Take her chin in the right hand, allowing the three fingers to touch the throat, and lift her face to yours. Look with the thumb and forefinger, which issue skyward, three or four such quiet. Fast Telegraphing.

When the first electric telegraph was established the speed of transmission was from four to five words a minute, with the fire-needle instrument. In 1849 the average rate for newspaper messages was seventeen words a minute. The present pace of telegraphy is about time for maternal interference, cried out: "Marma, Johnnie kicks Jessie into the sandbox." Jessie's little sis was the fisher's bait, and Johnnie's foot was the fish that bit the bait. Jessie's little sis was the fisher's bait, and Johnnie's foot was the fish that bit the bait. The little town approached. As the first house came into view, the engine sent its shrieks of warning; it grew louder—louder.

We dashed into the street, up to the station, where a group of passengers waited, and passed it without the halt of an instant, catching a glimpse of the appalled faces and the waiting crowd. Then we were in the fields again. The speed now became literally breathless, the furnace glared red hot. The heat, the velocity, the terrible nervous strain of the man beside me seemed to weight the air. I found myself drawing long stertorous breaths like one drowning.

I heaped in the coal at intervals as he bade me. I did it because I was oppressed by an odd sense of duty, which I never had in my ordinary brain work. Since then I have understood how it is that dull, ignorant men, without a spark of enthusiasm, show such heroism as soldiers, firemen, and captains of wrecked vessels. It is this overpowering sense of routine duty. It's a finer thing than sheer bravery, in my idea. However, I began to think that Markley was mad—laboring under some frenzy from drink, though I had never seen him touch liquor.

He did not speak a word or look, except in the mechanical control of his engine, his eyes going from the gauge to the timepiece, with a steadiness that was more terrible and threatening than any gleam of insanity would have been. Once he glared back at the long train sweeping after him as though with a headlong speed that rocked it from side to side.

One could imagine he saw hundreds of men and women in the carriages, talking, laughing, smoking, unconscious that their lives were all in the hold of one man, whom I now suspected or pected to be mad. I knew by his look that he remembered their lives were in his hand. He groaned out to me:

"Twenty miles, he muttered. "Three more coal, Jack," he cried in a tone of command.

I did it. Yes, I did it. There was something in the face of that man I could not resist. Then I climbed forward and shook him by the shoulder. "Markley," I shouted, "you are running this train into the jaws of death."

"I know it," he replied, quietly.

"Your mother is aboard this train."

"Heaven!" he exclaimed, staggered to his feet. But even then he did not remove his eyes from the gauge.

"Make up the fire, he commanded, and pushed in the throttle valve.

"I will not."

"Make up the fire, Jack," very quiet.

"I will not. You may murder yourself and mother, but you will not murder me."

He looked at me. His kindly gray eyes glared like those of a wild beast. But he controlled himself a moment.

"I could throw you off this engine and make short work of you," he said. "But look here; do you see the station yonder?"

I saw a faint streak against the sky about five miles ahead.

"I was told to reach that station by 6 o'clock," he continued. "The express train meeting us is due now. I ought to have laid by for it at Dufreme. I was late on the road. The track is a single one. Unless I can make the siding at the station in three minutes, we shall meet it in yonder hollow."

"Somebody's blunder!" I said.

"Yes, I think so."

I said nothing. I threw on coal; if I had had petroleum I should have thrown it on. But I never was calmer in my life. When death actually stares a man in the face it often frightens him into the most perfect composure. Markley pushed the valve still further. The engine began to give a strange panting sound. Far off to the south I could see the bituminous black smoke of a train. I looked at Markley inquiring. He nodded. It was the express! I stooped to the fire.

"No more," he said.

I looked across the clear summer sky at the gray smoke of the peaceful village, which lay beyond that at a black line coming closer, closer across the fields. The train was black. In one minute more—well, I confess I felt down and buried my face in my hands. I don't think I fainted. I hope I had a confused thought of mangled, dying men and women—children and their babies.

It was a terrific shriek from the engine against which I leaned. Another in my face. A hot, hissing tempest swept past me. I looked up. We were on the siding, and the express had gone by. It grazed our end carriage in passing. In a sort of delirious joy I sprang up and shouted to Markley. He did not speak. He sat there immovable and cold as a stone. I went to the train and brought his mother to him, and when he opened his eyes and took the old lady's hand in his I turned away.

Yes, gentlemen, I have been in many a railway accident, but I have always considered that the second shave I ever had

"What was the blunder?"

I don't know. Markley made light of it ever afterward and kept it a secret, and I was too much in love with the life to make the start as it were to make the quarrel of lips describe the diameters of an imaginary square, kiss her twice—the second double the length of its very short predecessor. This double kiss is a clew to a man's culture. Only the uncouth, ill-bred lover kisses as he learned to count—by ones. The gentleman who has had the good fortune to be born in an atmosphere of refinement makes a duet of his first and final salutation, whatever may be the numerical value of the intermediates. The well-bred girl wants short sharp, snapping kisses, that pop imaginably, but still that pop. A kiss on the hair is the kiss of a poet; tenderness is implied when the lips press the eyelids; reverence is spoken when the brow is caressed, and protecting love when the cheek is embraced.

Nothing can sanctify a kiss but love, without which the sweetest lips are unsavory and unwholesome.

Invisible Reins.

All our readers may have power if they seek it. But what sort of power? Not the public office which makes conspicuous both their good deeds and their bad ones; not the great wealth which causes the world afoot to doff its caps while the millionaire rolls past and then curse him behind his back. Nay, but they may hold either invisible reins of influence by which people of all conditions may be turned hither and thither, restrained, urged forward, or controlled

Would you find these invisible reins? There are many to be had; let only two of them be mentioned: One is gentleness. "The power of gentleness," said Henry Martyn, "is irresistible." Is it not true? Look around your group of acquaintances. Whose word has most weight? Whose approval is most valued? Not the blusterer's, not the bold, loud-voiced wrangler's, not the positive, unreasoning dogmatist's, but that of the gentle man, whose opinion of self, quiet manner, willingness to stand back, all point out true wisdom.

But gentleness alone will not do; it is a strong influence, but it needs a counterpoise, lest it degenerate into weakness. Let the right hand of gentleness be united with the flame-driven steel wire of firmness, and you hold in your grasp power which crowned heads might envy.

This is no fancy sketch. We have in mind one who from boyhood has ever exercised the strongest influence in whatever community his lot was cast, and all thoughtful people agree that he owes his position mainly to these two well-adjusted reins, gentleness and firmness; to the fact that, while his speech and behavior to all are gentle and kind and considerate as a tender woman, by his principles in matters great and small are as fixed as is the mountain chain of his native land.

A Modest Doctor.

A physician who had put his professional cap into his pocket and discussed the editor to give him a notice.

"Just sit down there at the desk, Doc, and write out what you want," said the editor.

"Oh, dear, no! I can't write about myself."

"I think you can. Just give me the points if you are too modest to say what you want, and I will do the necessary strength."

The Doctor sat down, and after much spluttering produced the following modest piece of work:

"Dr. Ale Collier, whose card we print to-day, is without doubt the finest physician in our city. He is a perfect gentleman, and is one of the best surgeons in our city, if not the best. His charges are reasonable for all, even for those who never loses a case, and we are glad to know that he has refused a lucrative practice in another town in order to remain in our city, where he is so highly esteemed for his skill and gentlemanly qualities. He is not an old man, but he is thoroughly experienced and rarely loses a case. We congratulate the people of our enterprising and beautiful city that he will remain in our city. His office hours are from morning until night when not engaged, and this of itself is an accommodation to the people of our city."—Ark. Traveler.

AMONG THE CHILDREN.

[From the Boston Globe.]

STARTLING A CLERGYMAN.

Harold V., who is three and a half, has quite a number of little verses which he is fond of reciting to visitors. He also very learned in the terms and expressions of card-players, as he sits and watches the games of his parents and friends with much interest. It chanced about this time that a Baptist clergyman, an old friend of the family, and who viewed all cards with holy horror, came to a short visit. Of course, Harold was eager to show off his accomplishments in recitation, and needed but little coaxing to start off on "Happy Land." He proceeded well, and the manifest pleasure of the clergyman, till he finished the verses:

Lonely all the angels sing
Worthy is our Savior king.

Then at once a new idea seemed to strike him, and in louder tones and with great impressiveness, he said, addressing the astonished audience: "Save your king, Mr. M——; not the low, per the jack, but the king; save your king."

Mr. O. was sufficiently worldly to understand the point, and for a time Harold was the only remembrance person in the room.

GOT OVER BEING TWINS.

Henry, short in stature, met one Sunday morning to show his new winter coat. He walked alongside with his. I asked him about two of his sons. I said, "Henry, are Lily and Kitty twins?" "No," said Henry, "not now they were when they were babies."

"How do you mean?" I said.

"Oh, how perfectly awful!"

"But I hadn't begun to tell you the story. Lily was born first, but it was only a week after our marriage, while we lay down Woodward avenue, arm in arm, he so far forgot himself as to imagine he had an extremely handsome bundle under his arm, and called a newsboy a quarter to carry it for him.

"But sav'e you listen, Jack, the little fellow inquired. And, will you believe it, my Benedict deliberately looked me over to the middle boy, and I was so mortified——"

Mr. Benton and the Cattle-Dealer.

Thomas Benton once lived in Williamson County, Tennessee, at Hillsborough, which at one time was called Boston," and practiced his profession in the town of Franklin. I remember an incident of his professional career that took place. It seems that one Bryan of Benton's had circulated a story to the effect that Benton had appropriated a five-shilling note belonging to a schoolfellow and hid it in his cravat. While the story was not believed, Mr. Benton, then a thriving practitioner, was somewhat sensitive on the subject. He was at one time engaged in the trial of a lawsuit in which a shrewd and unscrupulous cattle-trader was a witness. The latter had become somewhat familiar with the

FARM AND GARDEN.

SUBJECTS OF INTEREST TO FARMERS IN ALL SECTIONS.

The Operation of Dehorning Cattle Described and Illustrated by One Who Has Practiced the Method with a View of Deciding Its Advisability.

In a recent issue of Prairie Farmer appears a long article, with illustrations, on "Dehorning Cattle," by T. F. Hunt, of Champaign. The method of dehorning therein described is pronounced as simple, efficient and expeditious. Following are in brief this description, with two of the cuts.

FIG. 1.—ROPE AND METHOD OF TYING.

To perform the operation are required a rope, a stanchion and a saw. Procure twenty-five feet of one-half inch rope and fasten two three inch rings to one end by passing the end of the rope through the rings and braiding it into the rope again, in a similar manner to splicing.

A kitchen saw answers the purpose fairly well, provided it is sharp, strong and moderately fine. A regular dehorning saw differs from a kitchen one in having a stronger back and a thicker and narrower blade. It is thus less liable to break. The blade being narrower the direction is more easily changed while sawing. The blade can also be reversed, so as to saw while pulling toward you in case of pushing from you, as is the case with an ordinary saw.

If a strong stanchion is not at hand, set two strong posts eight and one-half feet long, four feet apart and three feet in the ground. Set the posts securely. The stanchion must be strong. Fig. 2, drawn to the scale of one-half inch to the foot, will assist in making one. The timber used is two by six inches, and may be hard pine or equally strong material. The lower edge of the top piece is five feet from the ground. This piece is five the stanchion this height so as to be able to raise the head of the animal well up, as it is thus more powerless. The side of the stanchion next the animal is planked up two feet from the ground. This helps to prevent the animal from running through the stanchion while attempting to catch hay and holds it back, as if he throws himself, as animals are very apt to do.

FIG. 2.—A STANCHION FOR DEHORNING

Keep the animals out of sight of those just dehorned, so that when their turn comes they will not be frantic with the sight or smell of blood. Having secured an animal in the stanchion, pass the rope around his neck and doubling it pass the loops through one of the rings and slip the loop thus formed over the nose of the animal. Next pass the free end of the rope over one end of the cross piece at the top of the stanchion (which has been left projecting a foot or so for the purpose), draw the head up as close as possible, wrap the rope once around the cross piece, pass it through the free ring and over the cross piece again, and have it held by an attendant. The extra ring is simply a convenience. After passing the rope over the cross piece the first time it is difficult to get the rope through the ring already in use. It is important to bring the rope back to the head a second time in the manner described, otherwise it will slack and allow the animal to move his head about too freely.

Then secured to one side, saw off the opposite horn. Then unfasten and refasten on the other side in similar manner and remove the remaining horn. No exact rule can be given as to the place to saw. The best rule probably that can be given is to saw so as to leave from one fourth to three fourths of the hair bearing skin remaining on the horn. Animals vary in regard to the extent of the skin at the base of the horn. The thinner skinned animals naturally have the least, and the thicker skinned the most. The main object is to saw off the horn even with the head, so that no projecting stub remains. No application to the wounds is needed and ordinarily is not advisable.

Not only does the animal suffer but the operation is not a pleasant one to a man of sensitive nerves. It hurts different animals differently, and the younger more than the older usually. In Mr. Hunt's opinion. Every one must decide for himself the advisability of dehorning. It has not been decided yet to the entire satisfaction of the public generally that dehorning is desirable.

Harvesting of Grain.

It is a matter of familiar observation with regard to the phenomena which determine the times of harvesting grain crops that the standing crop ceases to grow soon after the ears have fully formed. It is evident enough that from this time forward the grain ripens at the expense of the leaves or stalks. Hence the common custom of farmers to cut grain before fully ripe and leave it to ripen in sheaves and stooks in order to avoid loss by shaking.

After the heads have fairly formed it is little matter whether the plants remain connected by their roots or not. In either event it can be seen that the stalks gradually dry up and change to straw from below upwards.

A new brand of fowls—the Orpington—is just coming into notice among English poultrymen. It is claimed that they are good layers and table fowls.

Don't let insect pests get the start of you. Much trouble is saved by beginning to fight them as soon as they appear.

FRUITS AND VEGETABLES.

Trials of New Varieties—Interesting Results from Experimental Plots.

W. J. Green, horticulturist at the Ohio Agricultural station at Columbus, in a report on experiments made on small fruits and vegetables, summarizes the results published as follows:

Of the newer varieties of strawberries thus far tested at this station, the following have given the most promising results, viz. Bubach, Gold, Jessie and Ohio.

The following seem worthy of further trial, viz. Itasca, Jewell, Ontario, Sumnail and Warfield.

The following are classed as doubtful, or not sufficiently tested to justify an opinion, viz. Belmont, Bomba, Car michael, Covell, Crimson Cluster, Gandy Henderson and Lida.

Of the newer raspberries, the following are classed as promising, viz. Cuman, Earhart, Golden Queen, Hilborn and Johnson's Sweet.

The following are classed as doubtful, or not yet fully tested, viz. Hansman, Nemaha and Springfield.

Crimson Beauty and Hansell are found unsuited to the soil and climate of this station.

Of the newer potatoes the largest yield obtained at this station over a period of three seasons (256.5 bushels per acre) has been from Lee's Favorite. Empire State and Early Ohio come next, ranking above Early Rose, which has yielded 223.4 bushels per acre for the same period.

Larger yields of potatoes have invariably been obtained from planting whole than cut potatoes, but a portion at least of this increase has been offset by the greater cost of the seed and the larger per cent of small potatoes in the produce.

Complete fertilizers have given the largest increase in yield on potatoes. The application of phosphoric acid (in superphosphate and bone meal) appears to have been attended with profit, while that of nitrogen alone (in nitrate of soda and ammonia) has resulted in loss, as has also that of potash alone.

The importance of careful selection of seed is forcibly shown in the experiments with tomatoes in which the farms selected with a view to earliness, for several seasons has outstripped other strains of that variety by about ten days.

Insects That Attack Foliage.

The two principal classes of insects which attack the foliage of the apple tree are plant lice and leaf eating caterpillars. The lice hatch in spring, as soon as the leaf buds begin to expand, and increase so rapidly that, almost as fast as the leaves develop, there are colonies of pints lice ready to occupy them.

The best applications, according to several good authorities, are kerosene emulsion and tobacco decoction. One formula for the emulsion is as follows: Add two parts of kerosene to one part of a solution made by dissolving half a pound of hard soap in one gallon of boiling water, and churning the mixture in the manner commonly directed for this emulsion, until the whole forms a creamy mass. The solution must be hot and removed from the fire when the kerosene is added. This emulsion must be diluted with nine parts of cold water before being used.

Tobacco decoction is made by soaking refuse tobacco in hot water and then draining off the liquid. When the plant lice are so numerous early in the season as to make it necessary, these remedies should be applied by means of hand force pump and spray nozzle, which may be attached to a tank or barrel containing the insecticide solution that can be driven in a wagon along beside the trees.

Fortunately, where it is not actually necessary that the remedies should be used early in the season, nearly or quite all of the leaf devouring insects, including the caterpillar, may be destroyed at the same time and with the same application of London purple and Paris green that is required in May or June to protect the newly formed apples from the codling moth, by which one spraying is made to destroy the two classes of insects and thus answers a double purpose.

Items on Tomato Culture.

In experiments in training tomatoes, conducted last year at the farm of the Michigan Agricultural college, the method that gave greatest satisfaction consisted of a simple rack that was continuous throughout the row. About every six or eight feet a stout stake was driven on either side of the row and 15 inch inches from the plant, the stakes when firmly driven standing something over a foot in height. A strip of old bands was nailed near the tops of the posts along either side of the row. Then edgings were tacked across from one side to the other, four about each plant and a foot apart. The plant now found itself growing up between horizontal edgings, and as it began to lop the rack held it above the ground. Upon this simple rack the tomatoes needed no tying nor training, and they spread themselves freely to the sunlight. The circulation of the air under the racks was so free that there was no unusual danger from rot. This is decidedly the best rack tried. It was noticed also that the fruit ripened more uniformly than on the plants which were tied to stakes.

On the same grounds some observations were made in tomato rot, which makes its first appearance as a slight, spotty discoloration about the apex of the tomato, gradually extending and becoming darker until the whole top of the fruit sinks in. This disease attacks the fruit at any time after it is a third or a quarter grown. Tomato rot is of fungus origin. Abundant use of stable manure appears to augment the disease.

A Convenient Trellis.

A correspondent in Orchard and Garden furnishes the description of the adjustable trellis shown in the cut.

AN ADJUSTABLE TRELLIS.

A A are posts, eighteen inches above the surface of ground; B B the upright or trellis; C C slats which support the arms of the vines; D D iron rods. By removing either the top or bottom set of bolts the frame and vine may be laid down upon the ground for winter protection.

In spring it is simply lifted up again and the bolt relaunched.

FOR THE CAMPAIGN.

Every reader of the JOURNAL has one or more friends whom they can, with a little effort, persuade to become regular readers and patrons of the paper. As an inducement to use that effort and influence now, we offer the paper until November 8th for the small sum of 25 cents—the sooner you begin the more papers you get for the money.

Any person receiving the paper without having ordered it, may know that some friend has paid it for them, if the address tag shows the figures S8JUN following the name.

Send in the names as soon as possible.

In consideration of this very low rate, and the special urgent object, it is desired that campaign subscriptions be paid in advance.

The Household.

Dyspepsia, Indigestion and Headache seem to take the place of the three graces in many households. How sad is the condition of such a family. The Kidneys and Liver often get deranged and perhaps the parents or even children may be suffering from Diabetes, Bright's Disease or some other disease. As a preventive and also a cure for all the diseased conditions of the human family no preparation equals Parmelee's Dyspepsia, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Cure. Only $1.00 for large bottles. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Personal.

MT. H. N. Frollichstein, of Mobile, Ala., writes: I take great pleasure in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, having used it for a severe attack of Bronchitis and Catarrh. It gave me instant relief and entirely cured me, and I have not been afflicted since. I feel it to my duty to make my friends and neighbors aware of the fact. Have also used Electric Bitters and Dr. King's New Life Pills, both of which I can recommend.

Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs, and Colds, is sold on a positive guarantee. Trial bottles free at Dr. G. W. Crouter's drug store.

Nature Cleanses.

The system, if given an opportunity but very few persons find time to give nature a chance and so the blood which is the great drain for carrying away impurities, becomes so clogged with disease that unless some help is given it, the person will be afflicted by blood poisoning and suffer with Pimples, Boils, Carbuncles, Cancers, Scrofula, &c., and often die without help. Save yourself from all this suffering and loss of time by using Parmelee's Blood Purifier which prevents all diseases in the system. Large bottles $1.00. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Wonderful Cures

Dr. G. W. Crouter, retail druggist of Charlevoix, Mich., says: "We have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery Electric Bitters, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve for a year, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or give such universal satisfaction. There have been some wonderful cures effected by these medicines in this city. Several cases of pronounced consumption have been entirely cured by use of a few bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery, taken in connection with Electric Bitters. We guarantee them always. Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter. 1

Health Will Follow.

The use of Parmelee's Hop, Iron and Buchu Bitters. They promote sleep and allay nervousness. They tone up and strengthen the system, without exciting the brain as do most other stimulants. They soothe to rest the jarring nerves, and calm the irritable and jaded system. They are prepared from the purest materials and contain the best medicinal properties for restoring health and strength. Try them. 50 cents per bottle. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

DOINGS OF THE SENATE.

The Long Debate on the Mills Bill Closed and the Measure Favorably Reported by the House.

The nomination of Samuel J. Bigelow for District Attorney of New Jersey was rejected by the Senate the 19th. Senator Blair introduced a bill declaring that hereafter no alien shall be admitted to naturalization until after he shall have lived a resident of the United States during the period of five consecutive years, nor until he shall establish to the satisfaction of the court that during those five years he has behaved as a person of good moral character, and shall also, in the English language, speak, read, and write the ordinary business language of ordinary citizens, and shall have resided for the space of one year after receiving his first papers. Judges are forbidden to try more than twenty naturalization cases per day, and criminal cases in which the offense is declared to be a felony. The forfeiture of the person's right to suffrage is declared to be a felony, and punishable by the penitentiary. The Senate bill amendatory of the act of June 18, 1885, as to contract crimes, declaring non-mailable all matter in any part of which, exterior or interior, indicates, shows, or purports to show a contract, obligation, or language in written or printed. The House bill supplementary to the interstate railroad act, with amendments. This is the bill passed by the House on the 3d of March regulating railroad telegraph companies in Territories, and to allow and operate telegraph lines and to afford equal facilities to all companies for telegraph lines. The amendments merely strike out the word "construct" where it occurs. The House disposed of a little minor business, and then went into committee of the whole on the Mills tariff bill. The pending amendment was that offered by Mr. Mills restoring the present rate of duty on wool of class 3 (a) was agreed to without division. On motion the present rate of duty was restored on yipes, braids, and manufactures of straw, not plaited or made up for consideration. The next paragraph taken up was that relating to manufactures of wool at 20 per cent, ad valorem on bonnets, hats, and hoods composed of hair, whalebone, or any vegetable material. After considerable discussion the bill went to committee of the whole. The House resumed at 8 o'clock and spent the evening in a general debate on pensions. The evening session was devoted to the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

POLITICAL POINTERS.

The Kansas Prohibitionists Nominate a State Ticket.

The Prohibition State Convention of Kansas has nominated the following ticket:

For Governor—Hy. Ber. J. D. Botkin of Wichita.

For Lieutenant-Governor—R. J. Fredy of Abilene.

For Secretary of State—L. V. McIntyre of Dodge City.

For State Treasurer—R. M. Slonaker of Anderson County.

For Auditor—The Rev. Gabriel Burdett colored, Marshall County.

For Attorney-General—Stanton A. Hyer of McPherson County.

For Superintendent of Public Instruction—Miss S. A. Brown of Lawrence.

For Associate Justice Supreme Court—J. O. Pickering of Olathe.

The platform, which was read by John P. St. John, advocates woman suffrage, government control of the telegraphs and railroads, reduction of the surplus, repeal of tariff laws, and absolute prohibition of the liquor traffic.

A TERRIBLE CLOUD-BURST.

Twenty Lives Lost in the Flood at Wheeling, W. Va.

Heavy rain caused a flood at Wheeling, W. Va., the debris from the hillsides rendering some streets impassable. One of the B. and O. bridges collapsed, and it is feared that twenty persons were drowned. At Caldwell's Run four dwellings were swept away, eleven persons being drowned. The Western Union office and other buildings at Wheeling had a foot of water on the main floors. Sewers were burst and streets washed out. Many bridges are gone. Railroad tracks have been torn up, and it is even reported that trains and coal cars have been carried away. The damage in Wheeling is placed at $50,000, while the loss to crops in the surrounding country can not be estimated.

A COALITION TICKET.

Michigan Greenbackers and Democrats Nominate a State Ticket.

The Democrats and Greenbackers of Michigan have held their convention, the former at Detroit and the latter at Grand Rapids. A coalition ticket was nominated, the Greenbackers securing the Attorney General, the Auditor General, the Commissioner of the State Land Office, and the Electors for the Second, Eighth, and Eleventh Districts. The Democrats secured the rest of the ticket, nominating Wellington R. Burt, of Saginaw, for Governor. The platform indorses the President and his administration, and also the declarations of the St. Louis Convention.

Foreign Paupers.

Catherine McCarthy, an insane pauper recently shipped from Ireland, has been returned to New York from Pittsburg. At the latter place the systematic unloading of alien paupers is complained of. Last week a family that had been in the country but forty-eight hours were sent to the poor-house.

Murdered by a Mexican.

George Stevenson, who was postmaster, express agent, telegraph operator, and station agent at St. Gloans, Ala., Atticus was murdered. Pedero Jones, a Mexican youth, aged about 15, has confessed to the crime.

The deed was committed for the purpose of robbery.

THE FIELD OF HONOR.

M. Floquet and Gen. Boulanger Fight a Duel with Swords—The Latter Wounded.

The insult offered to M. Floquet by Gen. Boulanger resulted in a duel, in which the latter was seriously wounded. The two men met at Count Dillon's estate at Neuilly-Sur-Seine, not far from Paris, at 10 o'clock in the morning. The weapons used were swords, and the duel was fiercely fought. Gen. Boulanger tried hard to kill M. Floquet, and threw himself upon the minister again and again. At the second encounter both men were slightly wounded.

PRIME MINISTER FLOQUET.

but refused to stop. When the fighting was renewed for the third time, Gen. Boulanger made a lunge at M. Floquet's left breast, but only slightly touched the mark. Gen. Boulanger then received a wound in the throat which put an end to the encounter. The wound is a severe one, but on account of hemorrhage the doctors are unable to decide whether it is likely to prove serious. M. Floquet received scratches on his head, chest, and foot. M. Floquet in the evening presided at the unveiling of a statue to Gambetta. In his speech he extolled the patriotic firmness which Gambetta had shown during the war with Germany, and the invincible energy with which he afterward fulled the reactionary coalition against the republic.

RIDER HANGS.

The Slayer of R. P. Tallant Hung at Marshall, Mo.

George M. Rider was hanged at Marshall, Mo., for the murder of R. P. Tallant. He exhibited a wonderful amount of courage and nerve to the last moment. The drop fell at 11:58 a. m., and Rider was pronounced dead in twenty-four minutes.

The crime for which Rider was executed occurred on the night of July 25, 1885, about ten miles north of Marshall, Mo., near the house of Tallant. It was about 9 o'clock at at Tallant's house, returning home and was met by Rider and killed with a shotgun. Rider was arrested the following day on the charge of robbery, Tallant was returning with him to escaped, remaining in a cornfield until the evening of the next day, when he goes himself up to the authorities. There were no witnesses to the killing. Rider claimed that Tallant had borrowed money of Rider's wife; that when upbraided about it Tallant rushed at him with an uplifted ax, and the killing was done in self-defense. The case was tried twice, Rider was 44 years old. He engaged in the guerrilla warfare in the war, and participated in a cousiderable battle in Missouri and Arkansas. He served three years in Company Shelby and Marmaduke. He married a widow named Woolsey at Springfield, Mo. They separated about six years ago he married a Mrs. Hood. Rider is credited with killing a man named Jack Hood, a brother of his wife, in 1882. Both Rider and Tallant were among the most prominent farmers of southwest Missouri. On Tuesday last Rider professed conversion to religion, and since then has prayed and sung every day with leading church people. He protested to the last that he killed Tallant in self-defense.

NEGOTIATING WITH INDIANS.

A Commission Appointed to Confer with Them to Modify Their Treaty.

The Secretary of the Interior has appointed the Hon. T. S. Childs of Washington, D. C., Maj. R. B. Weaver of Arkansas and J. Montgomery Smith of Wisconsin as a commission to negotiate with the band of Ute Indians in Southern Colorado for such modification of their treaty and other rights and such exchange of their reservation as may be deemed advisable by the Indians and the Secretary of the Interior. The Commission is authorized, if the result of the negotiations shall make it necessary, to negotiate with any other tribe of Indians for such portion of their reservation as may be necessary for the Utes if they shall determine to remove from their present location. The Commission will leave for the West in a few days.

A GREAT LOCKOUT ENDED.

The Association of Iron Manufacturers Dissolved.

The Western Iron Association has dissolved. The Conference Committee of the association met at Pittsburg, Pa., and after a long sitting came to the conclusion that it was better to dissolve. The withdrawal of several firms which had vowed allegiance to the association caused the disruption of the organization. The committee adopted the following:

Resolved, That the conference committee of manufacturers be dissolved and that all members of the Association of Manufacturers of Iron and Steel Nails who have not signed the Amalgamated scale will be absolved from all pledges, written or otherwise, and are authorized to act in their individual capacity regarding the starting of their works.

A general resumption is now looked for in a few days. Up to date thirty-eight firms employing 25,000 men have signed the scale.

THE OBITUARY RECORD.

Death of John Henry Brand, President of the Orange Free State.

A London telegram says Sir John Henry Brand, President of the Orange Free State, is dead.

Sir John Henry Brand was born at Cape Town, in 1823, being a son of Sir C. Brand, Speaker of the House of Commons, and a cousin of Lord Hope who died in 1870. He received his education at the South African College under Dr. N. E. Changnion and Dr. J. R. Jones. He continued his studies at the University of Leyden, where he proceeded to the degree of D. C. L. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, the Inner Temple in 1845 and practiced as an advocate in the Supreme Court at the Cape of Good Hope from that year until 1863. In 1850 he was appointed Professor of Law in the South African College, and in 1854 he was elected to the Orange Free State in 1863, and subsequently re-elected for periods of five years in 1869, 1874, 1879, and 1884. SHATTERED BY A STORM.

A Church and Twenty Frame Structures at Henkleman, Neb., Blown to Pieces.

A terrible wind-storm struck Henkleman, Neb. Twenty frame buildings were destroyed. The Presbyterian Church was torn from its foundation. No loss of life is reported. The buildings destroyed were of cheap frontier character, hence the loss was small.

GAS TANKS EXPLODE.

Four Men Killed and a Dozen Seriously Wounded.

A battery of eight gas tanks in Ludlow, Ky., exploded and injured twelve men, four of them fatally. The gas was generated from naphtha for lighting the railroad shops and for use in the Mann boudoir cars. The escape of a small quantity from one tank caused an explosion which exploded the other tanks. The brick room of the Mann Boudoir Company was wrecked. The fatally injured are: Frank Collins, Michael Welch, George Medlon, David Harris. The others injured were James Sullivan, Peter Lickenbrill, Charles Gould, ex-base-ball player, Richard Curran, George Goodwin, —— Griffin, and two others.

MURDERED BY REDSKINS.

Two Men Killed by Indians and a War of Extermination Now Is Threatened.

There is great excitement at Victoria, B. C., over the reports from Alberni River. The steamer Caribou Fly has arrived at Victoria. Its officers say when the steamer left Skeena it was reported there that Mr. Clifford, in charge of the Hudson's Bay Company at Hazelton, and one of the special constables sent from Victoria had been murdered by Indians. The Indians are thoroughly excited and threaten to exterminate all whites in that part of the country. The Indians who murdered the white men are the worst on the coast, are large, powerful fellows, and have never killed white men before. Troops have been sent to the scene.

MIRACULOUSLY ESCAPED DEATH.

Thirty-four Cars Pass Over a Brakeman, and He Is Not Killed.

A remarkable escape from death occurred on the Central Railroad in Elizabeth, N. J. A brakeman named Robinson, residing at Phillipsburg, was putting on brakes on top of a freight car, and finding it an order to avoid being struck by the Cherry street bridge, he jumped on the ladder which runs down the end of the car. The ladder broke, precipitating him under the train, and thirty-four freight cars passed over the prostrate man as he laid on the ties. By a miracle he escaped being crushed to death, and the doctors say he is not injured.

MASONIC LODGE SUSPENDED.

Liquor Dealers Cause a Disruption in Masonic Ranks.

A serious row has broken out among the Masons of Mount Vernon, Ind., through the refusal of the main body to expend certain men engaged in selling liquor, in violation of the laws of the order. Deputy Grand Master Douglas, of Evansville, went to adjust the difficulty, but finding the lodge incorrigible in its determination to resist the order of the Grand Lodge, he took away its charter. The matter has caused considerable sensation, and the feeling runs high.

SIX PERSONS DROWNED.

A Party Returning from a Dance Meet Sudden Deaths.

Six persons—three men and three women—were drowned while crossing the Arkansas River near Fort Smith, Ark. Their names were John Logan, Jesse Morris, Tom Davis, Sallie Jackson, Mary Pettis, and Carrie Davis. The party had been attending a dance, and were on the way home, when in the middle of the stream the boat upset.

Nominated for Congress.

Wm. Prentiss, of Macomb, has received the Democratic nomination for Congress in the Eleventh Illinois District. The Republicans of the Twenty-fourth District of Pennsylvania have nominated Chas. Mountain, who represented Arkansas in Congress by the Democrats of the Second District of Mississippi.

Nominated for Congress.

The Prohibitionists of the Seventh Illinois District have nominated A. H. Hanson President of the college at Fulton, for Congress. The Indiana Democratic National Convention for the Eighth District nominated E. T. Brookshire, of Montgomery County, for Congress on the 18th ballot. A candidate was named by every county in the district except one. The Mills bill, the Democratic national platform, and Cleveland's administration were indorsed.

Democratic Executive Committee.

The President of the National Association of Democratic Clubs has selected the following Executive Committee: Charles Ogden of Nebraska, Bradley B. Smith of Mississippi, Alexander T. Ashley of Minnesota, Jerry Work Busser of Maryland, Jas. P. Foree of New York, Harvey N. Collison of Massachusetts, Lawrence Gardener of the District of Columbia.

The Way of the Transgressor.

G. H. Jarvis, who deserted his wife and two children at Toronto, Ontario, and Mrs. Madeline Campbell, who and been married just a month when she eloped with Jarvis, have been held in $300 bail at Cincinnati, on a charge of living together as man and wife, written or otherwise, and are authorized to act in their individual capacity regarding the starting of their works.

A general resumption is now looked for in a few days. Up to date thirty-eight firms employing 25,000 men have signed the scale.

DYNAMITERS ON TRIAL.

The Squealers Tell Their Story, Which Is Highly Sensational.

John J. Kelly and Others Give Startling Testimony Against the Defendants.

(Chicago special.)

The six men charged with engaging in the late dynamite conspiracy against the "Q." Road have been placed on preliminary trial before Commissioner Bryan, at Canton, Ohio. The defendants, George J. Gosling and J. A. Dunnelson, who were in Canton, had been arrested on the day of the earliest conversation with their attorney's, Messrs. Masson and Gaskill. These young barristers claimed for an opportunity to confer with their other clients, three of whom, J. Kelly, Wm. Smith, and Jas. Thomas, were in the county jail. Accordingly, on the court adjourning for the day, the party took a hack and drove to the county jail, the narrow limits of the three-cornered cage in the Marshal's office, and the prisoners turned their way into the office and gazed at the men, much as they would at a wild animal. The prisoners were a young, powerful fellow, and two men of middle age, with a young woman, to whom the lately, housed men in the cage, or pacing contemplatively. It was John J. Kelly, one of the "squealers."

Kelly was dressed in a dapper suit and wore a silk hat, and looked a successful artisan, bank young man, who was "keeping company" with a young lady, and was behind a party of railroad officials, including General Manager Stone, Paul Morton, and Attorney Chester

THE FIVE DEFENDANTS.

Dawes and Frank H. Collier. The lank young man was Alexander Smith, an ex-detective in the "Q," who is also regarded as a traitor to his friends.

Then the other defendants were brought in and the quintet were arranged in a row along the wall, with Kelly, Smith, and Collier in the front for separate trials for the men, as they were accused of different crimes, and Gosling and Dunnelson, the two last named, had which contained cartridges, caps, and fuse.

Kelly was the first witness called. He said he had "sat off any of the stuff," and again, on the 4th of July, he had "sat off some of the stuff." Gosling was accordingly tried the cartridges on the track, for the purpose of testing the fuse, and it was found to be a good fuse for explosion.

The district Attorney said it would be proved that while Bowles was away there, was a certain "Dynamite Jack" who came to the house, which the latter said was "Jack" to be careful, to look out for persons supposed to be "spotters" and to "keep a good lookout." Dynamite Jack Mr. Ewing took of meetings between Bowles and Dynamite Jack, at which the latter said he had "a good job now doing" took South to his house and gave him "a lot of stuff" for the cages and "a lot of fuse." Dynamite Jack Wilson and Bowles were subsequently arrested on the train, Jack having a sawed-off shotgun, Bowles a dynamite cartridge on his person.

After the testimony of two or three unimportant witnesses, Mr. Ewing said he was ready to stand. He said: "In May last I was secretary of the Knights of Labor, and I was in the Pacific Hotel. I knew J. A. Bowles. I saw Bowles a package there, which I was told contained dynamite. It was couched 'Hercules.' Bowles said he was going to Chicago with it. I saw Bowles had little caps in his pocket, which he said were used to explode the dynamite. I saw Bowles take the package from the table to the dynamite. He told me personally that he had placed a cartridge of dynamite on the track with wheel tear, and that the cage was blown to pieces."

Cross-examined by Mr. Masson, witnesses was asked if he had not been paid by the R. R. Men, filled Bowles as the man who had on those diagrams, and he said he had not, but that he had put the latter part of Jack, visited his store, and had given him information. He had been paid $100 for his services, and expected a reward, if the doctors say he is not fit to be a witness.

Andrew E. Barlow, a clerk in Lloyd's store, corroborated his employer and also identified the fuse, which was purchased at the store, and he at least two different occasions. The material he sold to him was in 100 feet lots, and he had sold about 1,000 feet. He said Bowles had asked him if there was any danger in handling it, and he had replied that it was safe.

When Bowles "filled Nobbsville he was in the habit of sitting at the house of a man named Sapper, who lived a mile and a half from the town, and on particular occasions, when Sapper was called to the stand and told of Bowles' visits, he said he was "sick." Sapper was a cripple, and was supposed to have suffered for his connection with the "Q."

DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS.

For President of the United States—
GROVER CLEVELAND, of New York.

For Vice President of the United States—
ALLEN G. THURMAN, of Ohio.

THE republican county convention is to be held at the opera house to morrow.

ON Friday afternoon the United States Senate confirmed the nomination of Chief Justice Fuller by a vote of 41 to 20

"T. J. H." in the Boyne Citizen, announces the demise of the greenback party in this county, and states that a large majority of the members of that party are now in hearty support of President Cleveland.

THE republican senate is divided against itself on the tariff question, and no substitute for the Mills bill is likely to be presented. The only question on which they are agreed is to vote against the Mills bill.

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan assembled in state convention at Detroit last Thursday, to nominate candidates for state officers. Charlevoix county was represented by A. A. Cruickshank and J. A. Gellick of Charlevoix, and E. Shay of Bay Springs.

Throughout the entire proceedings there was nothing but harmony and enthusiasm.

At the same time the greenbackers were in session at Grand Rapids. Between the two conventions a basis of fusion was agreed upon, as follows: The democrats to nominate governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, state treasurer, superintendent of public instruction and member of the state board of education. The greenbackers to nominate attorney general, commissioner of land office, and each convention to nominate Hon. Bartley Breen for auditor-general; and that upon the electoral ticket the democrats to nominate ten and the greenbackers three. The democrats to nominate the two electors-at large and for the first, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, ninth and tenth and the greenbackers to nominate electors for the second, eighth and eleventh districts.

Williston R. Burt of Saginaw was nominated for governor by acclimation.

The entire ticket is as follows:

For Governor—
WELLINGTON R. BURT, of Saginaw.

For Lieutenant Governor—
WILLIAM S. MORAN, of Wayne.

For Secretary of State—
THOMAS D. HAWLEY, of Ionia.

For State Treasurer—
JOHN D. NORTON, of Oakland.

For Auditor General—
BARTLEY BREEN, of Menominee.

For Commissioner State Land Office—
SMITH W. FOWLER, of Manistee.

For Attorney General—
ADOLPHUS A. ELLIS, of Ionia.

For Superintendent of Public Instruction—
STUART ECKIRSH, of Oceana.

For Member of Board of Education—
CHARLES R. KING, of Washtenaw.

The electors are as follows:

At Large—J. M. Sterling and Edward Ryan.
First District—S. D. Elwood.
Second District—C. H. Dewey.
Third District—Wm. H. Thompson.
Fourth District—Wm. Kelfer.
Fifth District—Wm. S. Canters.
Sixth Dis rict—Josiah W. Begole.
Seventh District—Thos. M. Crocker.
Eighth District—A. W. Nichols.
Ninth District—Geo. Gossett.
Tenth District—W. D. Mayburry.
Eleventh District—A. M. Fairbanks.

The platform adopted is as follows:

The democracy of Michigan assembled in convention for the nomination of state officers, recognizing the fact that its chief duty is to present to the people candidates whose election will bring to the administration of state affairs integrity of character, purity of purpose and sound business methods, reaffirm its adherence to the traditional and established principles and policies of the democratic party in respect to national politics.

We reserve the expression of our approval of the administration of President Cleveland which has won the respect and confidence of the people and has justified his renomination in response to the universal sentiment of the democracy by his unceasing devotion to public duty his courageous maintenance of democratic principles and his enforcement of pure, just and impartial methods of administration in all the departments of the government.

Upon the chief question of national politics, the relief of the people from the burdens of tariff taxation, we endorse our unalterable opposition to the present tariff policy of the republican party. We affirm our approval of the last tariff message of President Cleveland as an accurate expression of the just and traditional democratic principles which should govern the whole subject of revenue reform and the reduction of the surplus in the treasury. To him as the chosen standard bearer of the national democracy in the present campaign and to his associate, Allen G. Thurman, a tried statesman distinguished by a long life of public service which has been illustrated by high ability and perfect integrity of and fruitful of benefit to the people we pledge our best efforts to the end that Michigan may once more be enrolled in the list of democratic states

We declare our adherence to the platform of the national democratic convention at St. Louis, and we approve the action of our democratic representatives in congress in their efforts to secure a reduction of tariff taxation, thereby preventing further accumulation of a dangerous surplus in the treasury and relieving the people from the burdens of the war tariff.

We believe this course only can bring the policy of the government on this subject in harmony with the constitution, the true interests of the people, the just demands of labor the prosperity of all industries and the development of the resources of this country.

The democracy of Michigan believes in the dignity of American labor; recognizes the rights of wage workers in the fostering care of the government and that legitimate industry of every walk of life shall be encouraged in its work of imbuing up the material interests of state.

The ownership of real estate in this country by foreign corporations and non-resident aliens is injurious to American interests and should be prohibited.

We favor the adoption of measures providing for the health and safety of those engaged in manufacturing, mining and building industries, and the repeal of all class legislation under which monopolies have been fostered and protected.

We demand that congress shall open to the public domain for settlement all lands granted to railroads or other corporations which have not been earned, and more particulary do we demand the forfeiture of all unearned grants of lands in the Upper Peninsula, that that portion of the state may no longer be deprived of its natural growth and and developments.

That to the multiplication in this state of petty boards, commissioners and officials, with such powers and surroundings as insure nether official responsibility nor respect for the legislature or people, leaving the matter of appropriations for state institutions to be largely controlled by log rolling combinations, and as well as to the lack of system we attribute the great and constant increase of appropriation; therefore we submit that the case is one demanding the election of a legislature and state officials free to make changes which economy and good business methods may dictate.

The doctrines of home rule and local self government are cardinal principles of the democratic party. Therefore we cordially sympathize with the people of Ireland in the grand contest which they are making under the leadership of Gladstone and Parnell for the right to have the management of their own affairs.

That though more than twenty-three years have elapsed since the war we should not forget that a large number of that gallant and patriotic army that preserved to us an undivided country is still among us with increasing years and increasing disability, the result of their privation and hardship. We believe the general government should deal justly with them and that liberal pensions should be granted to the disabled, not as charity, but as due them because of the inestimable services they rendered their country, and we point with satisfaction and approval to the liberal construction of the existing pension laws by the present administration, resulting in a large increase in the amounts annually paid to veterans.

The cordial union of the two conventions secures for the ticket the solid hearty support of all the elements of opposition to the republican party in Michigan. With the strength that comes from union, with the grand record made by President Cleveland's administration, and with the above strong state ticket, there is no reason why Michigan democracy should not carry this state in November.

Private Pension Bills.

The reckless manner of passing individual pension bills through congress is a serious reflection upon the integrity of both the senate and the house of representatives. They are put through by wholesale, without inquiry as to their merits. Nearly two hundred were passed through the Senate in an an hour and a half and sent to the president for his approval. It can not be expected, even if it were possible that the president will inquire into the justice of these claims upon the people's treasure, but with that cautious and painstaking and arduous labor which has characterized his administration and distinguished it above all others he hesitates to approve such bills as a matter of course.

Whenever he finds a flagrant case he does not hesitate to withold his signature, and returns the bill with his reasons. He is so conscientious and particular that many of these bills will become laws without his signature, for the reason that he has not time to investigate and ascertain their merits. This is an injustice to the deserving, but the president is not to blame. The people who want an honest and economical administration feel that the executive power is in safe hands. They are daily gaining more and more confidence in him. He has exercised the veto power in more cases than all the presidents who have preceded him put together. It would be strange if he did not make some mistakes, but they are excusable when his motive is patriotic.

The reasons which have frequently been given for returning bills without his approval seriously reflect upon the criminal carelessness of congress, not to say guilty knowledge of members who have in mind their ends. Deserters and worthless vagabonds have been awarded government bounty by congress, but none such find favor by our executive president.

A few days since the president gave the senate a pretty severe scold ing for asking him to approve a bill pensioning a notoriously bad woman, whose name had once been stricken from the pension roll on account of perjury in obtaining government aid. A little of the conscientiousness of the president infused into congress would save millions of the people's treasure from being squandered.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Spirit of the Political Press.

The present corner in sugar is a beautiful illustration of the combined operation of excessive tariff and monopoly trusts.—New York Star.

The Saginaw Valley and Northern Michigan will give Mr. Burt the largest majority ever given to a can didate on any ticket.—Saginaw Courier.

Mr. Burt is one of the great business men of Michigan. He is a man of generous feeling, of splendid executive ability and powerful character He is a predominant force in the commercial and political life of the booming Saginaw Valley, and indeed of all Northern Michigan. He will make a red hot campaign. He is an aggressive leader and a game fighter. After he gets his canvass fairly started he will make things hum. There is no question but that if he is elected Mr. Burt will distinguish himself as one of the best chief executives Michigan has ever had.—Lansing Journal.

The issue of the campaign is falsely stated by the republican convention. No proposition has been made for free trade. The issue is: Shall there be a high tariff or a low tariff? Shall all the people be burdened that some number of the people shall enjoy exceptional and dishonest prosperity? or shall there be equal justice for all? Shall the excise tax on whiskey and tobacco be maintained to the end that the direct and indirect tariff tax on the necessities and comforts of existence shall be reduced, or shall it be abolished in order to make wearing apparel and those things without which existence is miserly expensive? The democratic party and its candidates stand for a low tariff as against a high tariff, for reduced taxation as against excessive taxation, for the maintenance of imports upon whiskey and tobacco rather than upon articles of general and necessary consumption. The democratic party stands for reasonable economy and a reduced surplus, not for wild extravagance which, continuing excessive taxation, will dissipate the surplus. Cleveland and Thurman, a fair tariff and no favorites, will win by the voice of a swinging majority of twelve million overtaxed electors of the republic, against free whiskey, free tobacco, taxed clothing, and the nominees of a convention presided over by a railroad jobber of Nebraska. —Chicago times.

A New Trust.

It is a cold day when a new trust is not announced. The last of these legalized robberies organized to play the part of public extortioners is the Bell Rod bolt trust now going forward in the forms of organization in the city of New York.

There is not a machine, from a farmers wagon to a locomotive engine in which bolts and nuts are not used, nuts and bolts made by the parties to this syndicate, nor is there an implement used in domestic economy from a coffee-mill to the kitchen pump, that does not contain these contrivances. They are in every shop, store and store in the country. They are adapted by a heavy duty, which is 45 per cent ad valorem and 45 per cent specific duty. In addition to this they are made by patent machinery and have the advantage over foreign made bolts of the cheaper freight and insurance. Hence the trust to put up the price. The patents on the machinery are owned by a few men and the business is easily controlled.

How long would such a combine have the ability to plunder the people if its officers were not secure for one half? It would then be ample to protect legitimate business, but not high enough to enable a few men to form a nut and bolt trust.—Chicago News.

A Dreadful Destructive.

Dr. Junemann, an Austrian chemist, has invented a fluid of the most dreadful destructive properties. This fluid, when brought into contact with the air, after the explosion of a shell in which it has been contained, is transformed into a gas, which, being heavier than the air, descends to the ground, killing all men and animals within its reach, and moreover destroying iron, bronze and other metals, as well as setting all inflammable things on fire. So at least the inventor declares in a letter published in one of the Vienna newspapers, and he adds that as far back as 1848 he offered his invention to the Austrian war office, which, however, declined both then and on a subsequent occasion to make experiments. For this reason he has given publicity to his invention, as his patriotic feelings do not allow him to reveal his secret to foreign governments.—Vienna Cor. London Times.

They Can't Beat Our Ticket.

The Republicans will, of course, try to raise an issue out of the surplus, plug cabin and hard cider Tippecanoe and Tyler, too, campaign of 88. But the old chicken won't fight. The present Harrison is not that sort of person. He lives in a palace and drinks only champagne out of cut glass. He never wore homespun in his life, and would not know a cow skin if he saw it. He is a cold, selfish, conceitedly arrogant and vain patrician. He hates a poor man worse than the devil hates holy water. There is nothing popular or magnetic about him. If he lived in the east he would be a drawing Anglomaniac. Living west, he is merely the grandson of his grandfather.

If we cannot beat this ticket, we can beat some at all. But we can beat it. There is in it nothing either captivating or inspiring, and it sets out on its propriety journey with death staring it in the face. By all means let the battle begin.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Reviewing the Fight.

It is now nearly six months since the president's message forced upon congress the consideration of the subject of tariff reform. What has been gained within this half year, and what is the present outlook for the president's policy?

The Mills bill has been persistently called "free trade measure." Nothing men have been told that high wages depend upon high taxes. Capital has been warned to "save protection." And yet it is a striking fact that the old agitation, merely so effective, has fallen flat. Not even Blaine's bill, the greatest of all manufacturing cities, could a significant meeting be drummed up to protest against tariff reduction.

The president has united his party upon this issue as it has not united it upon any great question since the close of the war

The educative effect of the discussion has been considerable. Public opinion has been enlightened, some prejudice has been removed and the minds of others have been aroused to the danger of an enormous surplus in this country and of unnecessary taxation. Not in many years before has there been so able a debate in congress or such a widespread discussion by the press of a governmental policy as that which has followed the message.

Whatever may be the fate of the Mills bill, the issue is joined, and there is no escape from it. It grows out of a new, irrepressible conflict, between two antagonistic ideas, tariff reform against over protection. In this issue the presidential campaign must be and will be fought.—New York World.

Cobden and His Sympathizers.

It must not be forgotten that the men who founded the Cobden club were the men who, through the darkest hours of our own civil conflict, in and out of parliament, were devoted to our Union. It was this school of Manchester that prevented the English cabinet from joining with the French emperor in recognizing the Southern Confederacy and breaking the blockade. What Bright, therefore, are these Republican lovers of the Union so fond of? Not the founder of the Cobden club. These promoters of interchanges, in which both countries are benefited and neither injured, or who, in the language of Cobden, "defied in this country the doctrine of the balance of power." Bright, the friend of the Union,

A-livin' all alone there in that lonesome sort of way
And was a blame old bachelor, mebbe ever since
I'd known 'em all from children—and their daddy from the time
He settled in the neighborhood, and hasn't any a kin
Er dollar, when he married, for to start house-keep'n
So I go to thinkin' of her—both her parents dead and gone
I go to thinkin' of her, and a-wondern what she has done
That all her sisters kep' a giltin' married, one by one,
And her never so much as chances—and the best girl of the peek—
An old maid, with her hands, you might say, tied behind her back!
And thinkin' on John, after she died, she set to jest take on,
When none of 'em was left, you know, but Evaline and John!
And jest declare to goodness 'at the young men
jest wern't no villun
To see what a wife they'd git if they got Evaline!

I got to thinkin' of her; in my great affliction she
Was such a comfort to us, and so kind and neigh-bor'ly
Some and I guess her housework, or to help out little Jane
And talk of her own mother, 'at she'd never see again—
Maybe sometimes cry together—that's the most part, she Would say—'at she'd be reconciled and happy-like 'n we Felt lonesomer'n ever she'd put her bonnet on
And say she jest reckoned 'bad to be agittin' back to John!

I got to thinkin' of her, as I say—and more and more
I'd think of her dependence, and the burdens 'at she bore—
Her parents both a-bein' dead, and all sisters married off,
And skeered off, and her a-livin' there alone with John!
You might say jest a-tetlin' and a-solavin' out her life
For a man 'at hadn't pride enough to git hisself married
Less some one married Evaline, and packed her off some place
So I go to thinkin' of her—and it happened that way.

WITHOUT THE SHADOW OF A DOUBT.

When I looked at Elizabeth as she stood there before me, I understood fully, and for the first time, why she refused to marry me just yet, and in my heart I could not blame her.

Picture to yourself a fresh and charming young girl in brave attire—that is, in a silken robe made ridiculously long and looped up ridiculously high, with a delicately flaring affair of ribbon and lace and feathers towering above a most bewildering arrangement of puffs and frizzes, from which elaborate structure one poor little golden curl had escaped and run away over her shoulder; girded with silver bangles upon her perfect arms, and jewels in her bits of ears, and a delicate perfume floating like incense about her—and you have Elizabeth as she appeared that summer morning when we discussed the momentous question of our marriage and its possible consequences. She was speaking:

"I mean to say, my dear boy, that we could never live upon what you earn—never! It would barely give us bread. Don't frown, Julian; you know that I would only be a drag upon you. I am such a helpless, ignorant creature. I can dress and dance, and play the piano a little, and I don't believe that I know a girl who can do any more. It is a great mistake, I suppose, letting us crop up into such worthlessness; but there! the mischief is done, and we can't help it, can we? Of course not. Now see, dear, you must remember that father refuses to listen to us, and as I have not a penny of my own

"You do not need a penny!" I interrupted, angrily. "Will not my life, with all its years and possibilities, be yours, to reign over for ever?"

"Nonsense!" laughed Elizabeth. "Come now, get to work, like a brave fellow, and paint something grand—something that will make you famous. Can't you?"

I shook my head despondently.

"At least you will try?"

"Yes, and fail once more."

"I lose all patience with you!" exclaimed my companion, her blue eyes flashing warmingly. "You provoke me past endurance. What! Am I not worth trying for? Paint portraits, then, and leave off those fussy old historical things. Why, some one have become famous at portrait-painting—haven't they?"

"Oh, as for portraits, yes," I answered, nonchalantly. "I am quite willing to venture upon that field, for there is Miss Talbot—she has offered me a sitting more than once."

I glanced furtively at Elizabeth, and saw that my shot had told. Her eyes fell, a vivid flush stained her cheeks, and that pretty, pouting nether lip quivered pitifully. Only for a second, however. Then she looked up fearlessly, and said, without a tremor in her voice:

"You speak of Miss Talbot because you think that I am jealous of her. You are wrong. I do not pretend to deny that I have been jealous—frightfully so, even—but that feeling is dead now, Julian, and you have just killed it. Ah, believe me, I may be very silly in many respects, but I have my own ideas about some things, and especially about lovers, and can tell you, sir, that the man I love is placed as far above other men as heaven is above the earth. He cannot do anything dishonorable; but if you——

"Well, and if I should, what then?" asked, mimicking her emphasis.

Elizabeth dismissed the subject with a wave of her little white hand.

"It is time to quitch!" she exclaimed, looking at her watch. "Goodness! Aunt Janet will be frantic. I am going, Julian.

"You will come again to-morrow to see this picture?"

"I think not; I may be busy. Wait, I must leave you there—some fresh, sweet violets; I gathered them expressly for you."

I received the little cluster of flowers in differential enough. That Elizabeth had worn them on her bosom and blushingly detached them was to me a matter of small import then.

"Tell me good-by, please," she murmured.

"I call it be good-by or farewell?"

She did not answer, so I kissed the tempting lips that were raised to mine, said something—I don't remember what—something cold and cruel, no doubt, and presently stood alone upon the threshold of my studio, listening to the rustle of a silken robe, the tickling of bangles, and the clinking of little bottines as she sped swiftly down the stairway. Then I returned to my work, grimly resolute.

"That chapter in my life is ended," I said to myself. "It was very sweet, but very silly. To-morrow I will write to the poor child and release her from all her promises. Little simpleton! she has her ideas of what a lover should be, has she? By Jove! she was sensible in refusing to marry me. And I not only imagined that I was in love, but fancied that she—that I am an idiot! A girl like that, and so uncommon—and, by heavens! not ashamed to tell it, either! Well, I suppose she will marry some rich fool. I loove so."

I have said that I went to work; it was not so—I could not work. Somehow the sunlight seemed no longer to freshen and brighten up the room. It was a gloomy place at the best, but now it seemed how drily lonely and cheerless.

Then, too, thoughts of Elizabeth and of my miserable position were half-craving me, for, despite my pretended indifference, I was madly in love, and knew it.

"By all the gods of pagan Rome she shall be my wife, if she cares enough about it to wait for me!" I mentally exclaimed, for, like an inspiration, a plan of action had suddenly suggested itself, and I resolved to lose no time in putting it into execution.

I had a friend—an old college chum—Fred Denbigh, a royal good fellow, free-hearted, open-handed, and as loyal as a Scot. Putting aside my brushes, I sought Denbigh; then we dined together and soon afterward I returned to my room alone.

Late that evening, when I went out again, I could have met my principal creditor and safely defied the danger of recognition. I had sacrificed my beard—that profusely flowing beard which, if some what unduly, was also of that picturesque kind mostly affected by artists. I had sacrificed it without a pang, and by so doing had completely destroyed my own identity.

In point of fact, I was now a tall, well-built, and clean-shaven young fellow, not altogether bad-looking, and certainly attired with the most scrupulous regard to neatness and refinement.

Nor was I Julian Vancourt—I was plain John Warner, and I was to start at midnight for the West, commissioned by Denbigh to look after certain claims in which he had an interest.

Two weeks later I read in a New York paper a long account of the mysterious disappearance and supposed suicide of Julian Vancourt, an artist of recognized ability, who, after years of honorable endeavor, had attained an envied position in his profession, and bade fair to become one of the greatest historical painters of the age.

I laid aside the paper with a curious sort of shiver; I felt like a man might feel who has just seen his own tombstone. But, then, I was dead, you know—legally so, at least. A letter from Denbigh followed close upon the paper. Here is an extract:

"The pictures went off like wildfire. Each brought a fabulous price. Everything is sold, and Colonel Silkstone bought your 'Jephtha's Daughter,' because it resembles his daughter, I suppose. At any rate, he has it. He was at the sale, looking grimmer and sterner than ever. I have heard that——is ill. No one seems to see much of her, and her friends say some spiteful things about her and the dead man, poor girl!

I was a wretch; but there, it was too late now to undo what had been done, so I went about my work with a will, and in that way sought to lessen my regret that night also of the loss of so close a friend as that poor beggar of a painter. Maybe, after all, there was a deeper regret for someone else, but if there was, I never acknowledged it, even to myself. Yet, as the months were on, and the anniversary of the day upon which I had last seen Elizabeth drew nigh, I became restless and unhappy, and finally I did a very silly thing. I took from their hiding place a little cluster of dried violets, about which a faint perfume still lingered, and I am not ashamed to say that at first I could not see them very clearly for the tears that rushed to my eyes. One of these I detached, and folding it carefully in a sheet of blank paper, addressed it in a disguised hand to the woman who was dearer to me than the life of my heart.

And that was the only bit of sentiment which I permitted to creep into the dreary black years of my self-imposed banishment, although there were times when I felt as if I must go mad, so unutterable was the sense of loneliness and desolation that would overcome me.

Yet, despite all this, despite the dread of what might happen, I deliberately and determinately turned my face away and walked in the path I had chosen.

And at the end of five years I was a rich man! I could scarcely realize it. That poor beggar, Vancourt! Here was a lesson for him, to be sure. A clear case of energy, industry, and simple business tact against genius and fancy and a painter's palette—and the painter's palette was distanced.

Well, no matter; I had money and I was going home. Through all those years a vague, shadowy phantom had walked by my side, mocking, consoling, luring me ever; but that spirit was exercised now, and in its place came ecstatic visions of a sweet girl-woman, Elizabeth! I was going to her, and in the blue sea of her laughing, loving eyes I would drown every care and regret.

Five years! And five times, upon each anniversary of our last meeting, I had sent her a faded violet—only that, a faded violet! But the poor little flower had gone to her freighted with such a wealth of hope and fate that surely in some dumb way it must have told its story. Five years! And Denbigh had given me but scant information concerning Elizabeth in all that time. True, I had never made any inquiries about her, nor had I seen my old friend since we parted so long ago, yet he might have known and have learned for a word—a single word that would tell me ever so little of her. It was a day in midwinter when I reached New York. The cold was biting, and the air was whitened with the falling snow. Yet for me it might have been a day in midsummer, so light was my heart, so warm and glowing all my dreams.

"Was Denbigh whom I first sought out. My old friend was in his studio, hard at work. He rose and welcomed me warmly enough, but great heaven, how the fellow had changed! No longer frank, free and jovial, he had become reserved and quiet, even taciturn. I confess that the alteration shocked me inexpressibly.

"And Elizabeth?" I had questioned, as our hands met.

"She is well," he returned, briefly. "And not married yet," he added, answering the eager inquiry in my eyes.

"Well, I shall see her presently; but first we will dine together, my boy, you and I."

For a moment Denbigh was silent, then he suddenly exclaimed:

"Julian, we can never break bread together again. I need hardly say that I have been false to my friend. God help me, I love Elizabeth Shinstone!"

"You love Elizabeth Shinstone?" I repeated, calmly.

"Could I help it? Was I to blame? Am I more than man? And the wrong-doing was yours—yours alone! An angel stood in your path, and, blind fool that you were, you turned aside from it. An angel, I say! Oh, Vancourt, old friend, kill me if you will, but don't look at me like that. Before Heaven I swear that I have fought against this thing, but——

"And she—Elizabeth?" I interrupted.

"I have never breathed a syllable to her that you might not have heard. You see, there are still greater depths of treachery that I have not reached. No, I have not told it to her."

"Then you must tell it to her."

Denbigh's haggard eyes met mine questioningly.

"Go to her," I continued. "Tell her and hear her answer."

"Are you serious?"

"As if I stood upon the threshold of eternity. If she is what I believe her to be, I need not fear; if she is not—well, even then I shall know it at once. Go!"

"Julian, surely—a love her still?"

"Yes, I love her; but the woman I marry must come to me without the shadow of a doubt to cross our lives. Go! But remember this: Say nothing of my return—not even if—if all is as you wish it."

So I waited there in Denbigh's studio while he went to win the one for whom I, in earnest faith and true loyalty, had worked so long and patiently. How those three weary hours of my solitude dragged on, what frightful forebodings, what glimpses of heaven, what fortures of the nether world, were mine! Had I but known her better, know her as she was—a weak, vain, frivolous creature! Ah, had I been less of a fool! A fool? Ay, thrice-double, for who but a fool would have exposed the woman he loved to such a temptation? Yet here the old thought would steal back upon me, and I would cry aloud:

"No! I have done right to send him. If she comes to me at all, she must come without the shadow of a doubt to cross our lives."

At last there came a step upon the stair, a hand upon the door-latch. I arose. It was Denbigh's servant, and he gave me a sealed envelope. I tore it open and read:

"Go to her. She does not know you are here. Do not wait for me. Go at once."

Ah, my friends, my friends—I had battled, wearily, and, thank heaven the victory was mine.

And so at once I went that way I had so often dreamed of going, in the dim twilight, and the gray ghosts of houses loomed up like spectral shapes in the long white streets.

Looking back at it all now, it seems like a dream, just as it seemed then when at last I stood in Colonel Shinstone's drawing-room, and some one was coming toward me with a wonderfully lithe, light and beautiful eyes.

Not a pale, unhappy, simply attired creature, That I detected at the first keen glance. Not a man, a brave man indeed, saint, but a girl in all the finn and glory of early womanhood, whose eyes at first seemed but the fitting frame for such radiant, true, and tender light. Not a great bound, but I took courage to call to her:

"Elizabeth!"

She sprang to me with a glad little cry. Ah, yes, my beloved was to my arms, I felt her warm breath upon my cheek, her dear hands were clasped about my neck, whilst away behind us, for the first time—fell all the ugly shadows of our lives.

"I have come for you," I said.

"And I have waited for you," she answered. "My violets came back to me with tenderest words of hope and comfort, Julian. Ah, my dear, my own, own dear! I do not know what you have been doing all this while, away from me, but I am sure that it is something grand and noble."

Well, she is mine at last. My sudden disappearance and long absence were plausibly explained to the public, and I am bound to acknowledge that the critics were quite kind; they retracted nothing of all they had written in my favor. Still I cherish a firm conviction that they are only awaiting a fair opportunity to fall upon and demolish me; hence am I exceedingly wary. Let me add that my wife came to me without a penny. It was my will and hers as regards that our home is like heaven. I suppose that in the world, wherever the old Adam has dwelt, I am bound to acknowledge that the scribes were quite kind; they retracted nothing of all they had written in my favor. Still I cherish a firm conviction that they are only awaiting a fair opportunity to fall upon and demolish me; hence am I exceedingly wary. Let me add that my wife came to me without a penny. It was my will and hers as regards that our home is like heaven. I suppose that in the world, wherever the old Adam has dwelt, I, my friends, every one of them.

Denbigh is in Europe, painting himself famous, I hear. Well, he has genius, poor fellow.

Now, my friends, if you fancy that the years had wrought no change in that little woman of whom I write, you err. Nor would I have her so. Let her be just as she is, my type of truth, of womanhood and of perfection—my wife, Elizabeth!

Grew a Beard After Death.

About thirty years ago Hal Clayton, one of the best known gamblers on the coast, died here of a fever. He was rich, and his remains were placed in a costly metallic casket, with a glass top, and consigned to a handsome tomb. His wife, who was frantic with grief, placed her diamonds on his shirt bosom, as he was dressed in his best clothes. Fearful lest the gems would be taken from him, she placed a watch in one of the tomb, and it was maintained for many weeks. Clayton was a Southerner, and the body was disposed of after the Southern fashion, above ground.

Not long ago George Rodsley, who has the care of the cemetery, was possessed with a curiosity to visit Hal Clayton's tomb, and accordingly the keys of the vault took a look at the remains. He was astonished to find that Clayton's beard and mustache had grown under the glass case to such an extent that they reached below his knees. The beard was a rich brown color, extend ing almost from his eyes to his feet, and having a perfectly healthy appearance as it spread over his form as a living man. The beard had been growing in this way for thirteen years.

Clayton had a romantic life. He was engaged to a handsome young girl in the South, and left her to go to the West to make his fortune. Years of his absence, and setting out to find him, drifted, homeless and friendless, from one place to another. After years of this life she met her former lover. She was so changed by her wandering life that he refused to marry her. After his repudiation of his old sweetheart, he became sick, and when lying at death's door she came to his bedside and nursed him back to health. Filled with gratitude at her devotion, he married the affection of his youth, and married her. She proved a devoted wife, and when he died she built, at great expense, the vault where his remains now lie, and in which she lived for many years during all these years. Whether the diamonds are on his shirt front is not known, as the board hides the body from the knees up.—Carson (Nev.) Special.

A Pair of Geological Puzzles.

The Grecian island of Cephalonia, in the Mediterranean, contains two rather remarkable natural phenomena. The first is a rock which oscillates several inches to and fro with the regularity of a pendulum, pressing firmly against a fixed rock one moment and directly afterward opening a space into which the clenched hand may be thrust. The motion is due to some unknown cause, having been found to be quite independent of the sea's action. In the other phenomenon about half a million gallons of water daily flows upon the land by four inlets and is sucked into the earth. The water has been collected in a short canal to drive two mills, but disappears among the rocks, with no visible outlet, after being thus used.—Arkansas Traveler.

[WILLIAM E. CURTIS, IN CHICAGO NEWS.]

One may look in vain for the picturesque in the architecture of the residence or business portion of Petersburg. No buildings are notable for originality or conception, nor has there been any attempt to introduce variety. One building follows the other, and the traveler who has seen one of them constructed on the same pattern and of the same height. The eye is nowhere gratified either by artistic groupings or pleasing effects. The streets are a monotonous succession of six-story stucco palaces, or apartment houses, with stucco stairways and ornaments, but they are used for dwellings and those for business are used for shops. The ground floor is devoted to the business of the building, and the upper apartments above his counting-house, for the merchant prefers to live above his place of business for a shop, and for the merchant to live under the same roof with his stock of goods.

There are one or two exceptions to the monotony of architecture. One is what is known as the marble palace, although there is very little marble about it. It was built of brick and stucco, and was erected by Catherine the Great for one of her lovers, and it has always been in the possession of the Grand Duke Constantine, the brother of the Emperor. A very widow still resides there and who is famous for the value of her jewels. It is an imposing building of granite and iron, surrounded by a high iron fence, with a statue to Napoleon I., criticising the crown of his head and, instead of disengaging himself, smashed the whole thing to atoms with his cane, and then quietly and unconcernedly his escort who remonstrated with him.

A Queer Sort of Fellow.

His friends and attaches knew when his passions were roused by a quivering of his lips, and usually fled for their lives. He brutally killed a number of people by beating them with his cane or sword, and once cut off the ears of his musician with his own hands. He was an ugly looking man, and exceedingly sensitive about his appearance, suspecting that every one who laughed or smiled in his presence was laughing at him, and they suffered for it.

One of his edicts was that whenever he passed along the street every one should stop his carriage and stand with his face in the direction of his house, and he was invented forms of dress for the people, and compelled everybody to adopt them. He would send women from his balls to prison because their gowns were not cut to suit him. If he thought a woman appeared in his presence too plainly dressed he would punish her, or if he considered another too richly dressed, she would go to prison for lese offense. As he was seldom in the same mood, and as he changed his mind from one day to another, it was a very common occurrence for a woman to be sent to prison for a dress which was perfectly proper when she left her house, but which was considered too low or too high when she reached the palace.

One of the Old Laws.

One of the laws provides that a gentleman whose style of dressing does not suit the Emperor may be arrested on the street and forcibly carried to a barber with orders to have his face shaved, and he must be shaved.

He issued an edict setting forth the amount of money travelers might carry with them, and they might have of ordinary man might take with him 200 rubles or so, according to his rank, but the Czar was to be away; the nobles might have a little more, and a prince might take thousand rubles, while the princess might take two or three thousand rubles. The object of this edict was to keep that too much money was not carried out of the country. Paul wanted to be a great man, and he thought he could make himself great. He organized his army on a military basis. He had several regiments composed of 1,000 men, every one of them a hump-backed, pock-marked; another regiment was composed of men with large noses, another regiment of men with small noses. There was a regiment of men with long necks, and he used to delight in reviewing these regiments, and he would call out the regiment with long necks, and he would stand in front of them, and walking back to the Michael palace, spent an hour or two amusing himself by watching the long necks bobbing very fond. While he sat with his Majesty, Alexander, the Czarewitz, and his wife, Princess Sophia.

"Father, why are you called Paul the First?"

"Because no one of that name ever ruled in Russia before me," was the Czar's reply.

"Then I shall be Nicholas the First," replied the boy.

For an instant the Empress feared some thing dreadful would happen to the child, for any allusion to his successor on the throne always threw her into a raving passion. To her surprise he simply took up his cane and walked out of the room, and he never spoke with his mistress, where he left her in a state of hysterics. Alexander was so frightened that the woman excusing herself from his presence, he ran to his mother and asked her what she was doing that not to encourage his father in his fancy? He was astonished to find that the house he remarked to her that she would be ruined if she did not cease to rave, and that the next few days, which looks as if he had some premonition of his assassination kill him.

After he had retired the conspirators, who were mostly officers of his own household, discussed the question as to how they should rid themselves of this man, made their way to his chamber, and, dragging him out of his bed-clothes, gave him a choice from six assassins, and he chose one of the six, and the assassin, without a word, shot himself, having an arm broken and one eye put out in the struggle that ensued.

This palace is called the Taurida Palace, built by Catherine the Great for the most famous of her lovers, the Prince Potemkin. It was here that he is supposed to have been secretly married to the Empress Catherine. The building is 400 feet in front, and the Michael palace, spent an hour or two amusing himself by watching the long necks bobbing very fond. Near the Michael Palace is another of the remarkable palaces of the country, and one which is considered the handsomest of them all. This palace is called the Taurida Palace, built by Catherine the Great for the most famous of her lovers, the Prince Potemkin. It was here that he is supposed to have been secretly married to the Empress Catherine. The building is 400 feet in front, and the Michael palace, spent an hour or two amusing himself by watching the long necks bobbing very fond. While he sat with his Majesty, Alexander, the Czarewitz, and his wife, Princess Sophia.

"Father, why are you called Paul the First?"

"Because no one of that name ever ruled in Russia before me," was the Czar's reply.

"Then I shall be Nicholas the First," replied the boy.

For an instant the Empress feared some thing dreadful would happen to the child, for any allusion to his successor on the throne always threw her into a raving passion. To her surprise he simply took up his cane and walked out of the room, and he never spoke with his mistress, where he left her in a state of hysterics. Alexander was so frightened that the woman, excusing herself from his presence, he ran to his mother and asked her what she was doing that not to encourage his father in his fancy? He was astonished to find that the house he remarked to her that she would be ruined if she did not cease to rave, and that the next few days, which looks as if he had some premonition of his assassination kill him.

After he had retired the conspirators, who were mostly officers of his own household, discussed the question as to how they should rid themselves of this man, made their way to his chamber, and, dragging him out of his bed-clothes, gave him a choice from six assassins, and he chose one of the six, and the assassin, without a word, shot himself, having an arm broken and one eye put out in the struggle that ensued.

Grew a Beard After Death.

About thirty years ago Hal Clayton, one of the best known gamblers on the coast, died here of a fever. He was rich, and his remains were placed in a costly metallic casket, with a glass top, and consigned to a handsome tomb. His wife, who was frantic with grief, placed her diamonds on his shirt bosom, as he was dressed in his best clothes. Fearful lest the gems would be taken from him, she placed a watch in one of the tomb, and it was maintained for many weeks. Clayton was a Southerner, and the body was disposed of after the Southern fashion, above ground.

Not long ago George Rodsley, who has the care of the cemetery, was possessed with a curiosity to visit Hal Clayton's tomb, and accordingly the keys of the vault took a look at the remains. He was astonished to find that Clayton's beard and mustache had grown under the glass case to such an extent that they reached below his knees. The beard was a rich brown color, extending almost from his eyes to his feet, and having a perfectly healthy appearance as it spread over his form as a living man. The beard had been growing in this way for thirteen years.

Clayton had a romantic life. He was engaged to a handsome young girl in the South, and left her to go to the West to make his fortune. Years of his absence, and setting out to find him, drifted, homeless and friendless, from one place to another. After years of this life she met her former lover. She was so changed by her wandering life that he refused to marry her. After his repudiation of his old sweetheart, he became sick, and when lying at death's door she came to his bedside and nursed him back to health. Filled with gratitude at her devotion, he married the affection of his youth, and married her. She proved a devoted wife, and when he died she built, at great expense, the vault where his remains now lie, and in which she lived for many years during all these years. Whether the diamonds are on his shirt front is not known, as the board hides the body from the knees up.—Carson (Nev.) Special.

A Pair of Geological Puzzles.

The Grecian island of Cephalonia, in the Mediterranean, contains two rather remarkable natural phenomena. The first is a rock which oscillates several inches to and fro with the regularity of a pendulum, pressing firmly against a fixed rock one moment and directly afterward opening a space into which the clenched hand may be thrust. The motion is due to some unknown cause, having been found to be quite independent of the sea's action. In the other phenomenon about half a million gallons of water daily flows upon the land by four inlets and is sucked into the earth. The water has been collected in a short canal to drive two mills, but disappears among the rocks, with no visible outlet, after being thus used.—Arkansas Traveler.

DISCUSSING THE TARIFF.

The Wool Paragraphs Give Rise to a Lively Debate in the House.

Messrs. Outhwaite of Ohio, La Follette of Wisconsin, and Others Air Their Views.

[Washington telegram.]

The wool paragraphs of the tariff bill were discussed by the House Saturday in committee of the whole.

Mr. Outhwaite of Ohio rejected the assertion that the framers of the tariff had been to increase the revenue. The revenue was derived from the natural security of the Stocks had greatly increased in the last decade. There had been an increase in the number of cows. Foundlings were increasing in number. There was an increase also in the number of horses. The number of horses had increased, possibly on account of the tariff on coffee bags. Dogs had increased in numbers. The tariff on hides benefited society for this. But maybe, upon which there was no protective tariff, had also increased. How did the gentleman account for that?

Mr. Governor of Ohio suggested that the increase was attributable to the demand for dogs in Indiana.

Mr. Outhwaite proceeded to urge that the high tariff had enriched the manufacturer of wool, which was regulated by the law of supply and demand. He wanted a statute to be made upon a high tariff the price of wool had steadily declined. The farmer was compelled to sell his wool at a price

FARM AND GARDEN.

MODES OF AGRICULTURE PRACTICED BY PROGRESSIVE FARMERS.

An Illustrated Description of How Hay Is Stacked in the Field by Farmers in Northwestern Iowa, Where Wild Grass Is Largely Grown.

A correspondent in Prairie Farmer gives the following illustrated description of how hay is stacked in northwestern Iowa, where wild grass is mostly grown and where it is stacked in the field.

A NOVEL HAY STACKER.

Cut and rake in square lands of such a size that the hay will make stacks of the desired dimensions. The stack is to be made in the center, and the windrows, which should be straight, run towards it. To get the hay to the center use a plank twelve or fourteen feet long as a rake. Hitch a steady team to each end by a rope or chain ten or twelve feet long. The team walks on each side of the window and the driver may stand on the board or net, as he pleases.

To elevate the hay an inclined plane like that shown in the illustration is used. The incline is made of force boards ten feet long, placed on the upper side, and supported by a frame made of two by four scantlings, which are firmly braced. The frame should be fourteen feet long, twelve or fourteen wide, and eight high. To elevate the hay, drive one team on each side of the incline, sliding the hay up and letting it drop over the end onto the stack. It is best to have two men drive while doing this. The man who stacks can help, only two men being actually needed to perform all the work.

When one part of the stack gets as high as the incline, the incline can be moved forward a few feet by hitching one or both teams to the front of it, or by moving it with the plank, as you would a bunch of hay. The first part is topped out while the rest is being built. To get the plank out after unloading, unhitch one team and the other pulls it out lengthwise.

Late Fall or Winter Cabbage.

For late fall or winter cabbage, where land is cheap, the plants are set in rows three feet apart each way. This, says Joseph Harris in American Agriculturist, requires 4,840 plants per acre. The land is marked out with a common marker both ways, the plants are dropped where the two rows cross, and a careful man sets them out. They are set deep enough, so that the lower leaves stand level with the surface. The great point is to press the soil firmly around the roots and not merely around the upper part of the stem. Mr. Harris' plan, after marking out the land both ways, is to drop about two tablespoonfuls of fertilizer or a good handful of pulverized hen dung where the two rows cross, and then run a narrow horse hoe up and down each row both ways.

The favorite varieties and the time of planting vary considerably in different sections. The usual time of planting these varieties for late fall and winter use ranges from the 20th of June until the 10th of July. Much, however, depends on the land and season. When the soil and preparation are all that could be desired, these varieties can be frequently planted safely until the 20th of July, and occasionally until the 1st of August.

The after management of the crop consists merely in keeping the land clean and mellow by constant use of the cultivator and hoe. Simple as this is, it is where many cabbage growers fail. In two or three days after the cabbage plants are set out it is well to run a cultivator between the rows, and follow with a hoe and break the crust round the wilted plants and draw a little fine fresh soil round them. If any of the plants are dead, set out others in their place. In two or three days cultivate again, and keep on cultivating until the cabbage leaves cover the ground. It is one great secret of success.

Ripening Tomatoes.

Tomatoes ripened on the vines are much superior to those that are picked off partly green and laid in the sun to ripen. Many persons, in order to get early fruit, tie the plants to stakes and pinch off the ends of the vines as soon as enough fruit has set. The best soil for tomatoes is a sandy loam, and they will not do well on wet or too highly manured lands.

One Method of Training Tomatoes.

A leading market gardener of Pennsylvania describes in Popular Gardening his plan of training tomatoes.

STAKING TOMATO PLANTS.

Each plant is trained to a stake four to five feet high. The plants are trimmed closely at first, leaving only a few branches for early fruiting. Later he does not trim, but simply ties the vines to the stakes until the top is reached, when they are allowed to hang over and fruit until killed by the frost. In training he makes about three tyings to a stake, leaving only the main vine to grow. The shoots or laterals are cut back to one leaf. The grower quoted from is convinced that leaving sufficient foliage to protect the fruit from the direct rays of the sun, and at the same time not so dense as to exclude light and air too much, will produce the finest fruit.

WHEAT FOR DIFFERENT SOILS.

Interesting Information Furnished by Intelligent Observers.

It is quite well known that varieties that succeed well in some sections of the country prove unprofitable in others under different conditions of soil and climate. New varieties are also being constantly introduced, and it is desirable to learn when and where they succeed or fail in order that as little loss as possible may be sustained by making unnecessary experiments with sorts not adapted to one's own locality. Some interesting information of this kind is furnished in the reports of intelligent observers to the agricultural department at Washington.

The Michigan Agricultural college reports that the imported varieties—Democese, white Crimean, Egyptian and Indian—grew vigorously in the fall, but were not sufficiently hardy to withstand the winter. Extra early Oakley proved too tender for this latitude. The Dehl Mediterranean, a bearded variety, stood thick on the ground, no smut or rust, was ready for harvesting July 1, the berry being plump and hard. The Medboe white slowed some rust on the leaves, but no rust, ripened nicely.

Missouri experiment station reports: The Crimean, a coarse wheat, mostly winter, killed. The Indian and Egyptian wheat, all winter, killed. The Dehl Mediterranean stood the winter well and gave a good berry. The Democese, a failure. The Medboe white gave a moderate yield of most beautiful wheat of light color, with a pearly luster, and ripened June 16. From Pawnee county, Neb., the Sheriff wheat is reported as badly winter killed.

The New York experiment station reports the Dehl Mediterranean is well adapted to this climate. Martin's amber is first class. Democese, white Crimean and Egyptian are failures.

The Pennsylvania state college reports all the imported varieties, white Crimean, Democese, Egyptian and India, winter killed. The yield from one quart Medboe seed was 22 pounds; extra early Oakley, 22 pounds; Dehl Mediterranean, 20 pounds; Martin's amber, 18 ounces. All suffered considerably from the fly.

South Carolina experiment station reports the extra early Oakley a very early variety, and as admirable sort for this latitude. Yield, about 30 bushels to the acre. Medboe's white is a week later and a good southern wheat. The Dehl Mediterranean rather late, but made a fine yield; the Sheriff too late for this latitude; the Egyptian, Crimean and Indian all killed by cold; Martin's amber about half killed.

Virginia, Hampton School reports: Red Mediterranean seems to be the only wheat at all sure here.

The southern states generally report but little wheat sown, as it is not as successful as in higher latitudes and is almost invariably injured by rust.

A Desirable Hybrid Rose.

Professor Budd, of the Iowa state agricultural college, thinks that the question of the possible improvement of the beautiful foliaged Rosa rugosa ought to be agitated. He writes:

"So far as yet tried all of its forms from China, Japan, Poland, north Siberia and central Russia are perfectly hardy and perfect in foliage on the great prairies of the west and northwest, where, under common cultivation, nearly all the varieties grown at the east either fail on account of severe winters or imperfect foliage and flowers in hot, dry summer air. Some of the red and white varieties of east Europe have already developed all of their stamens into petals, and there are good reasons for believing that judicious crossing and selection would soon give a list of varieties uniting the grand foliage of the rugosa with the beauty and perfume of bloom of some of the favorite old varieties."

HYBRID ROSE—MME. GEORGES BRUANT. (Half natural size.)

The need of hardier varieties of roses than we now have is made apparent over a large part of the rich prairies west and northwest of Lake Michigan, where no variety less hardy than the yellow Harrison can be grown unless more care is given in the way of winter protection than is usually bestowed by the average owner of a prairie homestead. Professor Budd closes his letter with the remark that the "professional rose growers should take up this much needed work." The editor of American Garden heartily indorses the professor's remarks and calls attention to the new variety, Mme. Georges Bruant, and Mr. E. S. Carman's success in the same line, as sufficient encouragement to induce our rose growers to systematic efforts in this field of promise.

The experiments of Mr. Carman on the grounds of The Rural New Yorker have resulted in sixty hybrids between Rosa rugosa with pollen from many different roses. One of the first of these to bloom this season is explained by the editor of The Weekly World, a hybrid between R. rugosa and Harrison's yellow. The flower is a surprise. It has twenty petals, and the color is far from that of either its father plant (yellow) or its mother plant (a light pink). The color is almost that of Gen. Jacqueminot.

The hybrid rose depicted in our cut, Mme. Georges Bruant, is the result of a flower of R. rugosa fertilized by the pollen of Scmbrouli. The plant is said to inherit the hardy constitution of the mother plant, and having foliage much like that of rugosa, while in the flower it resembles a tea rose; the flower is white, semi-double and fragrant, and is particularly attractive in the bud.

Agricultural Notes.

The Friday following the first day of May in each year shall hereafter be known throughout New York state as Arbor day, by proclamation of the governor.

New York's appropriations for agriculture and kindred purposes, available after Oct. 1, 1893, make a total of $238,424.11.

FOR THE CAMPAIGN.

Every reader of the JOURNAL has one or more friends whom they can, with a little effort, persuade to become regular readers and patrons of the paper. As an inducement to use that effort and influence now, we offer the paper until November 8th for the small sum of 25 cents—the sooner you begin the more papers you get for the money.

Any person receiving the paper without having ordered it, may know that some friend has paid for it for them, if the address tag shows the figures 8893 following the name.

Send us the names as soon as possible.

In consideration of this very low rate, and to avoid separate account, it is desired that campaign subscriptions be paid in advance.

The Household.

Dyspepsia, Indigestion and Headache seem to take the place of the three graces in many households. How sad is the condition of such a family. The Kidneys and Liver often get deranged and perhaps the parents or even children may be suffering from Diabetes, Bright's Disease or some kindred disease. As a preventive and also a cure for all the diseased conditions of the human family no preparation equals Parmelee's Dyspepsia, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Cure. Only $1.00 for large bottle. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

A Woman's Discovery.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made and that too by a lady in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she submitted to experiment tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly, and could not, sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night, and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus write W. C. Hasenick & Co., of Shelby, N. C. Get a free trial bottle at Crouter's drug store. 2

Nature Cleanses.

The system, if given an opportunity but very few persons find time to give nature a chance and so the blood which is the great drain for carrying away impurities, becomes so clogged with disease that unless some help is given it, the person will be afflicted by blood poisoning and suffer with Fine pies, Boils, Carbuncles, Cancers, Scrofula, &c., and often die without help. Save yourself from all this suffering and loss of time by using Parmelee's Blood Purifier which prevents all diseases in the system. Large bottles $1.00. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Brace Up.

You are feeling depressed, your appetite is poor, you are bothered with headache, you are biliety, nervous, and generally out of sorts, and want to brace up. Brace up, but not with stimulants, spring medicines, or bitters, which have for their basis very cheap, bad whiskey, and whose effect must be followed by your blood, start healthy action of liver and kidneys, restore your vitality, and give renewed health and strength. Such a medicine you will find in Electric Bitters, and only 50 cents a bottle at Dr. G. W. Crouter's drug store. 3

Health Will Follow.

The use of Parmelee's Hop, Iron and Buchu Bitters. They promote sleep and allay nervousness. They tone up and strengthen the system, without exciting the brain as do most other stimulants. They soothe to rest the jarring nerves, and calm the irritable and jaded system. They are prepared from the purest materials and are the best medicines you can use for restoring health and strength. Try them. 50 cents per bottle. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

Guard Against the Strike.

And always have a bottle of Acker's English Remedy in the house. You cannot tell how soon Croup may strike your little one, or a cold or cough be fastened upon you. One dose is a preventive and a few doses is a positive cure. All thread and lung troubles yield to its treatment. A sample bottle is given you free and the remedy guaranteed by G. W. Beaman. Price 25 cts. and $1.00. 16y9

We Are Anxious.

That every young lady should know what a delicate and harmless beautifier is to be found in Hamilton's Oriental Balm. It is absolutely harmless, and it makes the complexion so soft and brilliant, so surely removes tan and freckles, that one needs only to give it a trial to be convinced of its merits. Only 50 cents per bottle. Sold by G. W. Beaman.

We Can and Do

Guarantee Acker's Blood Elixir for it has been fully demonstrated to the people of this country that it is superior to all other preparations for blood diseases. It is a positive cure for syphilitic poisons, Ulcers, Eruptions and Pimples. It purifies the whole system and thoroughly builds up the constitution. Sold by G. W. Beaman, druggist. 3 16y9

LABORS OF SENATE AND HOUSE.

The Army Appropriation Bill Passed—The Oklahoma Bill Discussed in the House.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the army appropriation bill, the 20th, the pending question being on the amendment offered by Mr. Hawley appropriating $750,000 for an armory and gun factory at the Watervliet arsenal, New York; $5,000,000 for the purchase of land for a high-power ordnance-range; $83,000 for the purchase of submarine torpedoes, and $1,000,000 for submarine torpedoes. The Senate then adopted the amendment, and the army appropriation bill was passed. The Senate then proceeded to consider the fisheries treaty in open executive session, and after a time it was taken. Two Presidential vetoes were read and referred, and the Senate adjourned without completing the Oklahoma bill. After discussion the bill was read by paragraphs and it was then agreed that after Oklahoma shall have been organized five years, all officers appointed by the President shall be selected from residents of the Territory.

REPUBLICAN DOINGS.

The Kansas State Convention—L. V. Humphrey Heads the Ticket.

The Kansas Republican State Convention met at Topeka. There were a number of possible nominees for Governor, but after several ballots L. V. Humphrey, of Independence, was chosen. He is a lawyer and banker, and has served Kansas as Lieutenant Governor. Following is the ticket:

Governor, L. V. Humphrey; Associate Justice, W. A. Johnston; Lieutenant Governor, C. H. Skelton; Secretary of State, William Higgins; Auditor, F. J. McCarthy; Treasurer, George Hamilton; Attorney-General, Charles Kelogg.

The platform indorses the platform and nominees of the Chicago convention; commends the State administration; favors home rule for Ireland; declares for the home as against the saloon and demands the complete execution of the liquor laws in all parts of the State; denounces the Prohibition party; favors protection in every sense of the word; indorses the pension policy recommended by the Winfield encampment, and heartily indorses the course of Senators Ingalls and Plumb.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE.

The Colored People Meet in Convention at Indianapolis, Ind.

The National Conference of colored people met at Indianapolis, Ind. There was a large attendance from all parts of the country. The following resolutions, reviewing the political conditions affecting the negro and the promises made by President Cleveland touching the full enjoyment of their rights, were adopted:

Resolved, That we indorse the position taken by the St. Louis convention upon the target question.

Resolved, That this conference of colored American citizens pledge themselves and their best efforts to secure the success of the Democratic party of the nation.

A National Committee was chosen as follows:

Arkansas, B. F. Allsor, District of Columbia, W. A. Robinson; Illinois, Jonathan Jones, C. H. Shelton; Iowa, Charles Curtis; Kansas, Frank Bond; Kentucky, J. A. Ross; Massachusetts, G. H. Plummer; Michigan, G. H. Moore; Missouri, J. Milton Turner; New York, Henry T. Jones; Ohio, John A. Jones; South Carolina, T. G. Cromwell; Tennessee, H. C. Smith; Virginia, S. W. Fisher; N. Y. Scott, of Illinois, was elected Chairman.

The Democrats of the Seventh District of Virginia have renominated Col. O'Ferrall of Winchester for Congress.

The Republican Committee of the Fifth District of Georgia have nominated G. S. Thomas, a white lawyer of Atlanta, for Congress.

Serious Charges.

Government writs have been issued from the United States courts at Fort Smith, Ark., for the arrest of all non-residents who reside on the reservation of the cattle tax in the Chickasaw Nation. The leaders will be charged with rebelling against the United States laws as well as Chickasaw laws.

Late News Notes.

Major J. M. O'Brien has resigned the superintendency of the Mahoning Division of the N. Y., P. & O. R. R., to accept the position of general manager of the Mexican National line.

The directors of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad have declared a dividend of 3 per cent., payable in the new series of stock.

The funeral services of Courtlandt Palmer, founder of the Nineteenth Century Club, were held at New York, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll delivering the address.

Doubled Their Sentences.

Richard Devereaux and William Smith, claiming to be from Chicago, were sentenced at Kalamazoo, Mich., to five years each in State's Prison for blowing open the safe of the Kalamazoo Spring and Axle Works. That night they made an unsuccessful attempt to break jail, and next day their sentences were doubled.

A Sick Scoundrel.

A man calling himself O. S. Hammerslaugh, of Chicago, and claiming to represent the Diebold Safe Company, recently sold a safe to O. B. Harding, of Rockford, Ill., passed a forged check on him for $150, and another on a Rockford bank for $300, and stole $130 worth of clothing.

FULLER IS CONFIRMED.

The Selection of the Eminent Chicago Jurist for Chief Justice Approved by the Senate.

Melville W. Fuller, of Chicago, when he shall have subscribed to the oath of office and entered his name in the big book in the office of the Clerk at Washington, will be the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. He was confirmed by a vote of 41 yeas to 20 nays, after an executive session three hours in length. This time was occupied by five Senators, who were the only ones who spoke upon the nomination.

Three Senators were Edmunds and Evarts, members of the Committee on the Judiciary, and Mr. Stewart, of Nevada, who opposed the confirmation, and by Senators Cullom and Farwell, of Illinois, who favored it. No Democratic Senator spoke on either side. Ten Republicans voted for Mr. Fuller's confirmation, and they were as follows:

Cullom and Farwell of Illinois, Cameron and Quay of Pennsylvania, Hale and Frye of Maine, Platt of Connecticut, Jones of Nevada, Mitchell of Oregon and Riddleberger of Virginia.

All of the Democrats present voted for confirmation. The twenty Republicans voting against confirmation were:

Blair, Brown, Chandler, Dawes, Dolph, Edmunds, Evarts, Hawley, Hoar, Ingalls, Morrison, Palmer, Platt, Sabin, Sawyer, Sherman, Stewart, Stockbridge, Teller, and Wilson of Iowa.

NOMINATED FOR CONGRESS.

Owen Lovejoy the Democratic Candidate in the Seventh Illinois District—Other Nominations.

The Democrats of the Seventh Congressional District of Illinois have nominated Owen Lovejoy, of Princeton, for Congress. The Prohibitionists of the Tenth District of Illinois have nominated for Congress Judge J. B. Sedgwick, of Peoria. G. W. Blewett, of Vincennes, has been nominated for Congress by the Prohibitionists of the Second Indiana Congressional District.

The Eighth Congressional District Union Labor Convention of Iowa met at Lenox and divided, one faction nominating George C. Calkens, of Adams County, for Congress, and the other indorsing Congressman Anderson.

Creed F. Bates, of Chattanooga, was nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Third District of Tennessee, after 237 ballots had been taken.

Hon. G. W. Dargan has been renominated for Congress by the Democrats of Florence, S. C.

James Love of Liberty County, a rich and very popular man, has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Third District of Missouri.

The Democrats of the Fourth Congressional District of West Virginia have nominated J. M. Jackson, of Parkersburg, for Congress. The Second District Democrats, at Pleasant, renominated W. A. Wilson for Congress by acclamation.

James Stephenson, of Montezuma, Ind., a leader in the Methodist church, and superintendent of the Sunday-school, is charged with having embezzled $2,200 of the public school funds and fled to Canada.

A bronze statue of General Moses Cleveland, the founder of the city of Cleveland, has been erected at Cleveland. The monument stands on the spot where he first landed.

Settlers near Bates, N. M., went to the ranch of George Blosser and reinstated him in possession of his property. This has been taken by representatives of the Maxwell land grant. Vigorous measures are being taken to dispossess the settlers, and now they will not yield until forced to do so by Congress.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

The President Informs Congress of the Work Accomplished by the Commission.

Sixteen Thousand Persons Examined Last Year, Two-Thirds of Whom Were Competent.

President Cleveland sent the following message to Congress on the 23d of July:

Pursuant to the section 1 section of Chapter 27 of the laws of the second session of the 48th Congress, I herewith transmit the fourth report of the United States Civil Service Commission, covering the work of the year ending with the 30th of June, 1886, and the work of the fourth year.

While this report has special reference to the operations of the commission during the period above mentioned, it contains, with its accompanying appendices, much valuable information concerning the inception of civil service reform in the United States, and the progress made, and is interesting and instructive to all who desire improvement in administrative methods. Further than the period covered by the report, the persons now examined for admission to the classified service are those who have made their application since the closing of the last examination and 4,500 failed. Of those who passed the examination, 2,677 were appointees for admission to the departmental service at Washington, and has been followed by 1,000 appointees to the outside service. During the same period of appointments were made from the eligible lists to the department service, 641 to the customs service and 1,000 to the postal service.

Concerning separations from the classified service, the report shows that during the year 2,000 were separated, and 1,000 from the outside service who had been appointed from eligible lists, the remainder for causes which the rules took effect they did not apply to the persons who had been appointed from the eligible lists, or to persons who had been appointed to positions independently of the new law and rules, and to persons who, by reason of the accession as in take numerous class, were not in the classified service. The report shows that there have been 1,000 appointments made from the eligible lists, and that the number of separations from the service was 1,000, and that the number of separations mentioned, in the report, is the greater by 1,000 than the number of which no report was made to the commission. The report shows that the number of appointments made from the eligible lists under civil service rules was 1,000, and that the number of separations from the classified service were filled by appointments from the eligible lists under civil service rules, and that 1,000 separations in the classified service were made by reason of the expiration of the probation of 1,000 appointees made from the eligible lists under civil service rules, and that 1,000 were separated from the service in which it had its origin.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

THE bill was reported and passed on the Senate calendar the 20th for the erection of a public building at Chicago. Mr. Dolph called up the bill to prohibit the coining of Chinese silver into the United States, and pending discussion it was laid aside without action. The bill passed the House was the bill appropriating $400,000 to aid State homes for disabled volunteers, which was passed. Mr. Blackburn (Ky.) submitted the conference report on the river and harbor bill, which was agreed to. The report of the conference committee on the bill to provide for the payment of Union soldiers, which was agreed to. The Senate recedes from its amendment striking out the provision for the payment of the purchase of the Portage Lake Canal and the Lake Superior and Mississippi Railroad and Burrell River Canal. The Senate amendment for a survey of a ship canal around the Falls of the Ohio, and the Niagara River was agreed to. Also the Senate amendment providing for a survey and location of a canal from the Illinois River at or near the town of Hennepin to the Mississippi River, and the amendment providing for a survey and report concerning the waters of Lake Michigan with the Calumet River. But the Government is not to be deemed committed to these projects, nor, indeed, to any other project for which a survey is provided for, by the adoption of the report of the engineers. The Senate agreed to the House amendment to the Senate bill for the relief of Fort Smith, Ark., which was amended by the House so as to provide that the Government shall not be deemed committed to these projects, nor, indeed, to any other project for which a survey is provided for, by the adoption of the report of the engineers. The Senate agreed to the House amendment to the Senate bill for the relief of Fort Smith, Ark., which was amended by the House so as to provide that the Government shall not be deemed committed to these projects, nor, indeed, to any other project for which a survey is provided for, by the adoption of the report of the engineers. The Senate agreed to the House amendment to the Senate bill for the relief of the Hastings & Dakota Railroad Company, was agreed to. The House then proceeded to consideration of the whole on the Oklahoma bill, but adjourned without action.

THE Senate resumed consideration of the river appropriation bill, the question being on the amendment of Mr. Hoar to insert the items for the repair of a cofferdam to locate a navy yard at Portsmouth, N. H., and the amendment was agreed to. The bill was then laid aside, and the bill passed. The House then resumed the consideration of the Oklahoma bill. Mr. Allen (Neb.) was passed, and Mr. Springer (Ill.) was recognized. The bill was then read for the purpose of offering amendments. Mr. Springer offered an amendment providing that the lands ceded to pass the private pension bills on the calendar were passed, and the bill was then in order to be considered by the Speaker pro tem. Mr. Springer offered an amendment providing that the lands ceded to Missouri, Kansas and Texas be subject to their respective laws, and that the Secretary of the Interior should not be required to do anything in the premises. The House took up and considered a bill to provide for a national bureau of labor statistics, and for the investigation and settlement of private labor controversies. The bill was passed, and it provides for the appointment of a commissioner of labor, who is to be a person of practical and scientific knowledge, and who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold his office for the term of four years, unless sooner removed by the President. The duties of the commissioner are to collect information upon all matters relative to labor, and to report the results of his investigations and recommendations to Congress. The bill provides for the appointment of a clerk and other employes, and the salaries of the commissioner and clerk are fixed at $5,000 each, and the salaries of the other employes are fixed at $1,200 each. The House then went into committee of the whole on the Oklahoma bill, but adjourned without action.

The Detroit and Chicago Teams Neck and Neck—President Spalding Interviewed.

CHICAGO CORRESPONDENT.

Chicago has placed in long-sounding lead of games with Detroit upon the latter's own grounds, and although it tickled to the Detroiters to see the pennant marks in the flag, it left their finish still in most of its rivals. It was hard work, however, and up to the last moment it looked as if Detroit would make Chicago take a slight one at the last moment. President Spalding said:

"Don't you be I put a little shaky over us because we asked your correspondent to do a little spalding foolish.

"We have taken the lead of the possible pennant winners of last year, and I say that I have seen too many hangs change sides and lost too well worn over the last stage of the race. Way, the fun has just commenced.

"Undoubtedly I feel how it is going to end. Only, in the only way it can end, I think we can change anything without a doubt.

"Now, you know what I mean.

"Well, I don't care who knows it. There is nothing in it that I did not say with my

"Now, you know what I mean. Maybe I am making a party goof of myself.

"Now, see here; there has not to be a word said about anyone to be in the club, when, just as well as a first, hasn't there? Well, we have not. We have not, and we will not. We have worked together, we have fought the struggle, and although Chicago has been in the lead we have not said a word. We have in the country to fig it in its office. We have shaded our heads and let it go. We should have started third if when it was the time we should have made an effort either. Now how ridiculous. The New York, which is supposed to be the most cosmopolitan and most experienced ball game in the country, has not yet so good a game of ball as Chicago plays, and I don't care who knows it. Now, I don't care who knows it. There will be no walkover crowded in the Lingo of Chicago.

"The Chicago team is now organized, well and fairly, and I know it, and I know it is the strongest team in the country. Now, I am feeling. It has inside some country club. Well, I know it. I know it. I know it. I know it not done the something. In batting signal and fielding

Ninth District Democratic Congressional Convention.

The democrats of the ninth congressional district of Michigan will meet in convention at at the opera house, Manistee, on Tuesday, August 21st, 1888, at 3:30 P. M., for the purpose of putting in nomination a candidate for congress for the ninth district of Michigan, electing a district committee, and transacting any other business that may properly come before the convention.

The several counties are entitled to representation as follows, on the basis of one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes:

Antrim, 3; Charlevoix, 4; Kalkaska, 2; Lake, 3; Manistee, 6; Mason, 5; Mecosta, 8; Missaukee, 2; Muskegon, 15; Newaygo, 8; Oceana, 6; Ottawa, 4; Wexford, 4.

A full delegation from every county is earnestly desired, and all opposed to the republican party are cordially invited to participate in the deliberations of the convention.

By order Dem. Cong. Committee.

WM. P. NISBETT, Chairman.

THE Luther Lance has come out for the democratic ticket.

MRS. CLEVELAND is a guest of the family of the editor of the Century Magazine during the heated season.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND took an "outing" last week on the Susquehanna, spending Saturday and Sunday at Fire Island near New York.

FOR every democratic "wheelhorse" who deserts his party to support Chinese Harrison, will be found a dozen progressive young mechanics and laborers to rally to the support of honest government as exemplified by President Cleveland.

THE congressional committee evidently did not consider the protection facilities of the north end of the district when the convention was called at Manistee. Delegates from Charlevoix will have to leave here on the Saturday previous to go by boat or rail via Reed City. The latter would have been a better place.

THE republican county convention at the village hall last Friday was a turbulent affair and resulted in a good deal of bad feeling between the various factions. The fight began at the opening of the session, and will continue long after next November. Delegates were elected to the state, congressional, senatorial and representative conventions and a county ticket put in nomination. The latter is as follows: Sheriff, Willis Hurd; clerk, Sam Thatcher; register, Frank Ramsey; treasurer, H. S. Harsha; judge of probate, F. W. Mayne; prosecuting attorney, F. E. Fogg; circuit court commissioner, W. N. Moore; surveyor, a man unknown to the official republican organ. R. L. Corbett was elected chairman of the county committee, and Jas. A. Keat secretary.

PRESIDENTIAL TARIFF VIEWS.

From President Grant's Message of 1875.

I would mention those articles which enter into manufactures of all sorts. All duty paid on such articles goes direct to the end of the article when manufactured here and must be paid for by the consumer. These duties are not only come from the consumers at home, but act as a protection to foreign manufacturers in our own and distant markets.

From President Arthur's Message of 1882.

The present tariff system is in many respects unjust. It makes unequal distributions, both of its burdens and benefits. * * * * Without entering into minute details, which, under present circumstances, is quite unnecessary, I recommend an enlargement of the free list so as to include within it the numerous articles which yield inconsiderable revenue, a simplification of the complex and inconsistent schedule of duties upon certain manufactures, particularly those of cotton, iron and steel and a substantial reduction of the duties upon sugar, molasses, silk, wool and woolen goods.

From President Arthur's Message of 1884.

The healthful enlargement of our trade with Europe, Asia, and Africa should be sought by reducing tariff burdens on such of their wares as neither one or the other American states are fitted to produce, and thus enable ourselves to obtain in return a better market for our supplies of food, of raw materials, and of the manufactures in which we excel.

From President Cleveland's Message of 1887

The taxation of luxuries presents no features of hardship, but the necessaries of life used and consumed by all the people, the duty upon which adds to the cost of living in every house, should be greatly cheapened. * * * Thus our people might have the opportunity of extending their sales beyond the limits of home consumption—saving them from the depression, interruption in business and loss caused by a glutted domestic market and affording their employes more certain and steady labor, with the resulting quiet and contentment.

President Garfield's Speech in the House in 1870.

I believe that we ought to seek that point of stable equilibrium somewhere between a prohibitory tariff on the one hand and a tariff that gives no protection on the other. What's that point of stable equilibrium? In my judgment it is this: A rate so high that foreign products cannot flood our markets and break down our home manufacturers, but not so high as to keep them altogether out, enabling our manufacturers to combine and raise the prices, nor so high as to stimulate an unhealthy growth of manufactures. In other words, I would have the duty so adjusted that every great American industry can fairly live and make fair profits; and yet so low that if our manufacturers attempted to put prices unreasonably high the competition from abroad would come in and bring down prices to a fair rate.

Evarts Then and Evarts Now.

Republican chickens seem to be coming home to roost at this season of the year with a pertinacity which is decidedly amusing. Here is one of them. When he was secretary of state, in 1878, Senator Evarts, of New York, transmitted a number of consular reports to the speaker of the house in a letter, from which the following extract is made:

"Our workmen in the United States as will be seen from the foregoing extracts, does as much work as two workmen in most of the countries in Europe. . . . We have no oppressed and stupid peasantry, little more intelligent than the tools they handle. All are self-thinking, self-acting and self-supporting.

"Within the last fifteen years we have demonstrated our ability, by the brilliant development of our own resources, to exclude by honest competition, foreign manufactures, to a large extent from our shores.

"The question which now peremptorily challenges all thinking minds is how to create a foreign demand for those manufactures which are left after supplying our home demands. We cannot stand still, for the momentum of increase will soon become so great that it will push us onward anyway; to push us safely and profitably is of so much importance as to almost overtop all other public questions of the hour.

"This question appeals equally to the selfishness and patriotism of all our citizens; but to the laborer it appeals with tenfold force, for without work he cannot live, and unless we can extend the markets for our manufactures he can not expect steady employment, and unless our manufactures can undersell foreign manufacturers we cannot enlarge our foreign market."

This is good democratic doctrine, Mr. Evarts need not be ashamed that he is the author of such sensible remarks, although that he so earnestly wrote in 1879 he will repudiate in 1888, because just now the republican party is fostering the millionaire monopolist at the expense of the American workman.—Free Press.

More Pensions and Bounty

A gentleman representing Milo B. Stevens & Co., of Washington, D. C., will be at U. S. Hotel, Boyne, Saturday, Aug. 11, at Cushman House, Petoskey, Monday, Aug. 13, at the Kensington, Harbor Springs, Tuesday, Aug. 14, and at Fountain City House, Charlevoix, Wednesday, Aug. 15, 1888, to receive claims for pension, increase of pension, bounty, etc., which interested parties may desire to have prosecuted by said attorney.

Russia's Agricultural Machinery.

At the recent agricultural exhibition held at Kharkoff, Russia, foreign firms were well represented. At the exhibition it was noted that foreign machinery is far superior to Russian, in spite of the clever imitation by Russian makers of the most complicated machines. This inferiority is due, in a great measure, to the use of inferior steel, iron and wood.—Boston Budget.

Fearful Extravagance.

Complete returns of the Republican corruption feature of the Rhode Island election are in. The showing is not a very creditable one to the Republicans, for they were compelled to pay $7.50 for votes, when the market price in Rhode Island is not over $5. Such extravagance should be heartily condemned.—Atlanta Constitution.

Banker and Depositor.

It is generally supposed that banks are eager to receive deposits from all sources and pay little attention to the character of the depositor, provided they get their money. This is a very great mistake. Good banks are not in the habit of opening accounts with every man who wants to deposit without knowing something of their customers' business methods. It is almost as hard to become a depositor in some of the strong eastern banks as it is to get a position in one of them, and the depositor must come highly recommended before his money is accepted. The fact is, the relation between a banker and his depositor is a confidential one, and the banker cannot afford to have tricky or dishonest patrons whom he knows he must watch all the time. He would rather let them keep their money and have nothing to do with them.—Globe-Democrat.

A Story of the War.

Maj. Andrew D. Wells, who rode in the famous charge of the Eighth Pennsylvania cavalry at Chancellorsville, received a note, while in Virginia during the war, from a Confederate maiden, asking him to do her some slight service. The gallant major rode to her house, outside the Union lines, and was captured by the enemy. He was sent to Libby prison, and narrowly escaped hanging. For a quarter of a century he cherished a grudge against that fair southern girl, who, as he thought, had lured him into danger. A few days ago he learned her address and wrote to her. In reply to his letter she proved her innocence of all thought of treachery, and told of her endeavors to save him from hanging.—San Francisco Argonaut.

To Set the Ball A-Rolling.

Hostess—My dear Miss Howler, won't you sing something for us? I'm afraid people are feeling things fearfully dull.

Miss Howler—Really, Mrs. Brown, I'm afraid you must excuse me. I'm awfully hoarse to-night.

Hostess—Oh, my dear, that won't make the slightest difference. Nobody will listen, for they'll all begin to talk directly you begin to sing, and I just want something to start the conversation.—Boston Beacon.

Fond of Fireworks.

Messrs. Brock, the English pyrotechnists, have at their factory a Newfoundland dog which revels in fireworks. He rushes into a shower of sparks with as much delight as some of his kind display in a cold bath; and on a lighted squib being thrown within his reach he will run and trample the smoldering stump with his paws.—New York Sun.

Easy Work at Home.

"I see the papers advertising easy work at home," said Mrs. Brown, as her husband seated himself in his easy chair to read the evening news.

"Yes," he replied, "I have noticed advertisements of that kind."

"Well," she said, as she prepared to wash a pile of dirty dishes, "I'm sick of housework, you bet!"—Boston Courier.

A Hearty Old Time Server.

"Ma," said Bobby, after a thoughtful silence, "do you know that I don't believe Santa Claus is really as good as he is cracked up to be?"

"Why, Bobby, what makes you think that?"

"Because he gives the nicest presents to little boys and girls that have rich pas."—New York Sun.

Shaking Rinks in Australia.

An Interesting Course of Lectures.

The Political Science Association of the university of Michigan has made arrangements for a course of six lectures to be given during the next year. These lectures will treat of the American constitution as modified by the federal and the state courts, and will be delivered by prominent jurists of the country. Hon. Stanley Matthews, of the supreme bench; Hon. T. M. Cooley, chairman of the inter-state commerce commission; Hon. Daniel H. Chamberlain, governor of South Carolina; and Hon. Henry Hitchcock, of St. Louis, have already signified their willingness to take part in the course. As the lectures will be both critical and biographical, treating of the lives of the chief justices of the United States, they will be of interest to students of American history as well as to students of law.

An Injurious Shampoo Mixture.

"Speaking of adulterations," said a medical friend to me, "one of the most outrageous I have lately discovered is the one many barbers are making of washing soda for a shampoo mixture. It comes cheaper than ammonia—to the barber. To his customer it is a great deal dearer. It has an injurious effect on the hair and scalp, and it does not clean the head. The refreshing sensation that comes from the evaporation of ammonia is absent, and instead of being invigorated up there was no smell of ammonia about the shampoo. Then I noticed that my head, in spite of shampooing, remained dandruffy and that it lathered up when I put water on it. This led me to investigate. I have got a barber now who uses proper shampooing materials, but I tried a dozen before I found him. Considering the charge of a shampoo, the barber who is not willing to give his customers an honest one don't deserve to have any chance."—Alfred Trumble in New York News.

Chas. Plass, the boat-builder, of Mt. Clemens, made us a call yesterday. The Daily Reporter says he took several orders for boats at Harbor Point, to be built at once. He expects to have a shop at Harbor Springs next year. He says he has built 73 boats since the first of March, which looks like success in the boat-building line.

Ferry Wood formerly a druggist of this place, has, after several weeks journeying through the western states with a view of locating, returned to this state, and brought out a drug store at Freeport, Barry Co. We can say right here to the people of Freeport that in him they will get a good citizen, and a live business man. So much for Michigan.

A reporter for the Resorter while in Charlevoix the other day making his usual round, could not fail to notice the vast improvements made in that village during the past six or seven years. The s e t part of town that a few years ago was a dense and almost impenetrable forest is now occupied by beautiful and costly residences, which mark the rapid progress of that place. The only serious drawback at the present time seems to be a railroad. Could that object be achieved, there is no doubt but that Charlevoix would make rapid strides forward.—Daily Resorter.

Very much as an article which appeared in these columns some time since said it might happen, it has. Geo. Frink representing the syndicate which backs the Toledo, Ann Arbor & Northern, has entered into a preliminary contract by which he is bound to go ahead and build the road when the survey and right of way shall have been completed south from Kalkaska, to a junction with the present line of the T. A. A. & N. R. R. at or near Marion in Osceola county. The D. C. & E. R. R. is to be swallowed up by the T. A. A. & N. and they can't get to swallowing a second to quick.—Bellaire Advertiser.

Benlah Vance was on the sick list last week.

Republican caucus was slinly attended.

F. L. Smith went to Charlevoix on Friday to attend the county convention.

Mr. Deitz and J. Bills went to Traverse City to attend the soldiers' reunion.

Mr. and Mrs. Scofield visited relatives and friends in Echo for two days last week.

George Smith and Fred Willard took a pleasure trip in the region beyond Bellaire.

Eld. Scofield preached on Sunday last on the "Marriage Relation," his topic for two weeks is "Training up the Children."

Mr. Reuben Todd has his new house enclosed and will soon be completed.

Prof. J. M. Harris of Ironton was in this vicinity interviewing school officers in regard to school books.

Albert Todd has sold his shop to J. R. Vance. Mr. Vance will use it for a hay barn having recently added a new stable to it which is quite convenient.

Mr. Frank Ruggles, of Bronson, noted for his famous Bibliopolic jubilee, passed through here last Saturday enroute for the Soo on a business trip. He is an old friend of Rev. H. C. Seofield.

Miss Prudie Scofield and Master Earl Vance celebrated their birthdays, one occurring July 29th the other July 30th. Master Earl is eight years old and Miss Prudie ten years old. Some valuable presents were received by each of which were from Mrs. Thompson of Texas who is sister and aunt to the recipients.

The wheat and harvest has commenced.

Wm. Ingalls' saw mill was burned last week. Total loss.

It is Remarked

That the interest in politics is flourishing.

That it is fine weather for picnic parties.

That "milk shake" is exceedingly popular.

That it is about time for another game of ball in this village.

That the JOURNAL office is the place to get artistic job printing done.

That the republican county convention was not any too harmonious.

That the recent rains did wonders of good to the corn and potatoes.

That we have here in Charlevoix cooler winds, the most and finest lot of shade trees on our streets of any summering town in the state.

Notice.

To the Voters of Charlevoix County:

At the convention holden in the village of Charlevoix, July 27, I was censured by my friends in that village as going back on them and supporting Boyne City. I deny the charge, and do hereby say that it was a falsehood perpetrated by the Boyne City folks to beat me. I hereby announce myself as an independent candidate for county clerk, and trust that my friends may have the chance of showing their good faith at the polls.

BORN.

JARVIS—On July 25, to Mr. and Mrs. Bert Jarvis, a daughter.

JOHNSON—On July 25, to Mr. and Mrs. Henry Johnson, a son.

THE LIME KILN CLUB.

Death of Col. Whyfore Johnson—A Thunder Clap to the Club—A Mistake.

The secretary announced an official communication from Vicksburg announcing the death of Col. Wh.yfore Johnson, an honorary member in good standing.

"While I has his expectin' it fur some time," observed the president, "it nebberthless comes wid a shock. De kurnell was an average man. He'd steal a waterme'yon, in summer, but divide up his wood pile in winter. He'd give up a lost wallet he had found, but cheat you blind in a mule trade. While he'd return yer borrowed wheelbarrer on de worry musk, it wouldn't do to lead him a dollar in cash. If he war' a leetle hard on his ole mule he war' de kindest master a dog ever had. I won't go so far as to say dat Kurnell Johnson unfolded his black wings an' flew straight into heaven's gate, but we shall hang out de usual emblem of mournin' an' hope dat he war' giben a fa' an' impartial trial."

The secretary then read the following:

SELMA, Ala., Feb. 29, 1888.

To the President of the Lime Kiln Club, Detroit.

HONORED SIR—Two suspicious characters were arrested here today, who claim to have come from Detroit. From letters and effects found on their persons I am satisfied we have the parties who made the sixty-fourth attempt to destroy Paradise ball several nights ago. The following are a few of the articles found on their persons:

Part of the hair from the head of Plato.

One eye from the bust of Cato.

The nose and ears from the bust of Nero.

The cheek from the bust of Augustus.

A two inch square snipe bearing the name of De Soto on it, with a large number of mottoes and proverbs with the name of Paradise ball on them. Also a large leather pocketbook, with the name "Lime Kiln club, of Detroit," engraved on the back of it in past letters. This pocketbook contains:

Seven thousand $1,000 bills, seventy-nine $500 bills, $28 $100 bills, $11 $50 bills; total, $108,950. This pocketbook I send to the Commercial and Sentinel for safe keeping.

If you will come yourself, or send Pickles Smith and Gresham Jones with a certificate bearing the great seal of the club, and identify them as the said money, they will be cheerfully turned over to you or them. Congratulating you and the Lime Kiln club on the arrest of these two vandals and return of the property,

I am yours very truly,

WILLIAM C. ROSEMARY, C. M.

The letter was a thunderclap to the club, as according to a communication received last week from Brooklyn, one of the guilty wreckers had been caught, made a confession and been strung up to a limb. It was evident that a great mistake had been made, and after a brief conflab with Sir Isaac Walpole, the president said:

"We shall send a telegram to Selma to hold dese parties, as dar' kin be no doubt dey are de villains who robbed an' wrecked us. As fur de party who was lynched in Brooklyn, war' sorry dat such a mistake was made, an' de club holds itself in readiness to contribute money 'nuff to buy him a tombstone—a cheap one. I reckon he war some passon who peddler had $5 all at one time, an' a $10 gravestone will round him off in fust class shape.—Detroit Free Press.

Prisoner from Russian Casemates.

To a prisoner who had lived for years in the silence and solitude of a bomb proof casemate the noise and rush of the train, the unfamiliar sight of God's green world, and the faces and voices of friends who seemed to have been raised suddenly from the dead, were at first intensely exciting; but the excitement was soon followed by complete prostration. Early in the evening one of my counsels, without the least warning, suddenly became hysterical, and in less than ten minutes seven men in our set were either delirious or lying on the floor in a state of unconsciousness. Some of them raved and cried, some sank from one long faint into another, and some lay motionless and breathless in a profound swoon until we almost gave them up for dead.

The surgeon who accompanied the convoy was summoned, stimulants were administered, water was dashed into the white, chastly face, and everything was done that could be done to restore the sufferers to a normal condition; but all night the car was filled with moans and hysterical weeping, and the women of the party—particularly Anna Pertowna Korba, who was stronger and more self possessed than any of the men—went from one fainting or hysterical patient to another with restoratives, stimulants, and soothing intoxication. When we arrived at Moscow nearly half of the party had to be carried out of the car in the arms of the guard, and our journey was temporarily suspended in order that they might receive medical treatment.—George Kennan in the Century.

Something That Bergh Stopped.

Jump back with me twenty years. You are a school boy. What is this coming round the corner? A butcher's cart. What is in it? Calves, sheep. The heads of the calves hang over the sides of the wagon. The swift revolving wheels, for butchers' boys drive quickly, hit, roll, plunge against the sorrowing head with continuity of torture. Look at the sheep, free their eyeballs distend, their necks swollen, their throats lacerated; hear them bleat, and hear the calves as they believe!

Bergh stopped it.—Joe Howard in New York Graphic.

Money in English Roses.

The great London sporting men who make "books" on the English races do an immense business. They give large credits to responsible patrons and generally get paid promptly. One of them said recently that his outstanding accounts amounted to $1,500,000, but he was perfectly satisfied to have that amount owing him, as his "turnover" amounted to $250,000 a week. There are others on the English turf who do an equally large business.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

A Colorado "Poverty Dance."

The "poverty dance," in Nevada City, Colo., is thus described by a local paper: "Invitations printed on strawboard and inclosed in cheap yellow envelopes are circulated. Tickets for the ball are fortysix cents and supper nineteen cents. No gentleman is allowed to participate who has less than two patches on his clothes; the ladies are dressed in calico, and refreshments are served on wooden plates."—Chicago Herald.

All Want the Same Man.

They have a curious condition of politics in Milwaukee. All parties, Republican, Democratic and Labor, desire to nominate the same man, Mr. Edward F. Allis, for mayor. This is strange enough, but the more curious fact is that Mr. Allis, who might be elected unanimously, refuses to run at all.—Frank Leslie's.

"KISSED HIS MOTHER."

She sat on the porch in the sunshine
As I went down the street,
A woman whose face was silver,
Her white hair was blossom-sweet;
Making me think of a garden,
Where in spite of the frost and snow
Of bleak November weather,
Lads fragrant lilies grow.

I heard a footstep behind me,
And the sound of a merry laugh,
And I knew the heart it came from
Was as light as a mischief-staff.
The blue sky and the hour of trouble,
Hopeful and happy, I ween,
One of the hearts to look on
Where we think all things go wrong.

I turned at the click of the gate-latch,
And met a young man's face
A face that's given me joy in years,
Like the page of a pleasant book,
A load of a steadfast purpose,
Of a brave and daring will;
Of a man's a promise in it
That, God grant, the years fulfill.

He went up the pathway singing,
I saw the woman's eyes
Twinkle with a wordless welcome,
The sunshine warms the skies.
"Boy," she said, when he reached her,
She cried, and took his face
The loving face that was uplifted
For when some mothers died.

That love will die to depend on;
I hold that there is no time
Even lads in love with their mothers
Can forget heaven's prime.
Heaven's greatest hearts have been loving
Those who gave them birth
And the boy who came to meet her
Is sweet in his manhood's worth!

AS INNOCENT AS SHE WAS PRETTY.

"If is all fel-de-ced," said Miss Henrietta Henshaw, sitting bolt upright in her bamboo rocker. "It is all fibble-rab. I say, for people to think they must make up jimcracks that nobody wants and scatter them about among their friends."

"But it is for a birthday present, aunt."

"Well, what of that? Do you suppose because my birthday happens to be coming that I want anyone to give me an ungainly gimcrackism with two H's worked in the corners?"

"What if there should be three H's?" said Lottie, slyly, remembering old Peter Hammond's clumsy attentions, with, as he admitted, "an eye to a snug home."

"What's that you say?" snapped Miss Hetty.

Lottie did not venture a repetition, but and demurely considering what, under the circumstances, she should do. Lottie was Miss Henrietta's orphan niece, and had been a member of her household for nearly a year. She had learned dearly to love the prim old lady, though that love was not unmixed with fear. Her wants had all been kindly anticipated and generously supplied, but now she had come to fear such a great for a few shillings to spend on trifles, of which Miss Hetty did not approve, and had been flatly denied.

Oh, dear, what should she do! Harry had always brought her some tasteful gift, and she did so want to make him a husband for her aunt's derby. She had not dreamed that she could not, and had put it off till the last moment.

The great drops welled up suddenly to her eyes. If Miss Hetta saw any symptoms of heartache, she had had heartaches herself, and they had never killed her yet. But Lottie did not mean to droop. Auntie was usually kind, and was silent her only living relative—except Harry. Well, Harry was not a relative, exactly—and, oh, dear, if she could only have a hat-band!

She forced back the rebellious tears, and went singing about the house like the bluthe bird she was.

The birthday morning arrived, and the problem of Harry's presence was still unsolved. "If I could just give him something," she sighed, looking wistfully down the long street. "Oh," she said, suddenly, clearing her hands, "I will, I will! What a happy thought!" And she fairly bounced into her cloak and hat and went skipping down the street.

Dr. Beach, an eccentric bachelor, lived in the rather lonely house at the extreme end of the street. Lottie was never sick herself, and Aunt Hetta never employed Dr. Beach for her occasional ailments; yet the kindly-hearted girl had contrived to make the acquaintance of the uncouth doctor, who had her and called her "Little Miss."

"What if the dear old man was a little gruff? He was good." And into his office Lottie now went, assured of a warm welcome. Absorbed in her own interest and distress in her errand, she approached the bay-window where stood the great monthly rose-bush which had been the wonder and envy of the admiring public since almost before Lottie was born.

"Oh, Doctor," she said, "I came to ask if you would be so kind as to give me three or four of those lovely buds!"

"What for?" growled the doctor, savagely.

"You see," she began, "I wanted to make something like a birthday gift for—for a friend, but I could not," choking a little, "and I had almost given up hope of anything, when this morning, as I glanced down the road, your beautiful rose seemed to say, 'Come after us,' so here I am. Flowers are always nice to give, you know, and I had none."

"Humph! Why couldn't you make what you wanted to?"

"Aunt Hetta would not let me."

"Humph! Is not Henrietta Henshaw good to you?" he demanded, trotting up and down, as kind as can be. But she does not believe in birthday gifts, she says."

"Hah! you say money yourself?"

"No."

"She might give you a cent or two from time to time; then you would have a fund to draw from.

"Oh, she does; I had five dollars Monday that I had not needed to use. But I saw—aunt and Tommy Elroy with their little knees in a peeping out of their old shoes and—"

"So you squandered your money to clothe the feet of little vagabonds!" growled the doctor, wondering why he hadn't seen the base knee.

"Yes, I got shoes and the nicest red stockings. Jennie cried and cried when she heard me, because she was so glad," refuted Lottie, her quick tears starting.

The doctor rubbed his knuckles vindictively in his own eyes.

"Well, little miss, if you had known you could not get any more money for your pleasantry would you have spent all you had on the little beggars?

"I don't know; I hope so; I'm sorry you asked me. I really think I should. But I did want the other so dreadfully that I might have saved out a little.

"You could have got brown stockings."

"So I could. But I guess I'm glad I did once, the red ones are so much prettier, and the poor like pretty things as well as the rich."

The doctor looked ponderingly on the little miss. She was a pretty creature, as innocent as she was pretty. Though she was precocious, her looks and appearance would hardly have claimed her fifteen well-rounded years.

"It is a bridal rose," said Lottie, keeping her errand in mind, as she looked admiringly at the great bush, whose beautiful blossoms rivaled the whiteness of the snow.

"Humph! I suppose so. You would not think now that it had spoiled a wedding. But it did, just fifteen years ago this day."

Lottie looked in alarm at the white, treacherous thing.

"You would not think, either, that a gruff old fellow like me could ever have got a rosebud to say she would have him?"

"Oh, yes, I would," said Lottie, "I think you are the nicest man in the world—except—"

"Except whom?"

"I was going to say Harry."

"Exceedingly fine compliment you are paying me. You expect some of my choicest flowers for that bid-bit of flattery."

Lottie did not reply, but looked in such consternation from the rosebush to himself that the doctor could not but smile.

"You would like to hear the story? Well, it never came from my lips before, little miss, but I will give it to you. You see, I had been a medical student under old Dr. Weed, and when he died I got my diploma and stuck my shingle out here. Soon after that I got acquainted with so trim a built girl as you often see, and after a while, somehow or other, we became engaged. I was young and had my way to make, and we resolved to wait two years before setting down. Over back of the hill yonder lived a girl named Nancy Brown, a pretty, pale creature, who seemed just ready to go off to the angels. I was called to attend her, and I wanted to do my best. I knew they could never pay me a cent, and perhaps for that reason I went a little oftener than I needed. Nancy had one precious thing, her rosebush; small then, but giving promise of great things. It did seem as if everybody begrudged it to her, for half the town, in one way or another, sought to make it worth her while to give it up.

"Perhaps the motives were good. But, though Nancy was in comparative poverty, no gold was richer enough to buy her one treasure. Well, her fragility proved not to be incipient consumption, after all, and she went on until within twenty-four hours of my wedding-day, and that morning I was in my office here on the watch for my sweetheart, who soon, all smiles and blushes, with the consciousness that it was the last time as a maiden, came tripping down the street. I went out to meet her. This bush, not half as large as it is now, stood here in the window.

"Oh,' said my bride that was to be, in a pretty manner, 'and will you give me a rose? Did you crow it root and branch with silver coin?'

"'Not I. Nancy gave it to one of her own sweet sill.'

"A jealous flush came over my girl's proud face.

"I thought,' she said, 'that your visits there were more frequent than her illness called for. You love her, and if you are fair to you are false to me.'

"I made a sharp reply. She had charged me with double dealing. We were both terrible angry. The next morning we were to have been married. That was fifteen years ago and we have never spoken since. Nancy was going away to fulfill a promise made in childhood, and she gave me her rose because I had 'saved her life for her lover.' Perhaps I had; but she had unknowingly rung a muse. I kept the bush, and it has blossomed every month with all its might. More than one young mother has begged of me some dainty bude to clasp in her dead baby's hand, and many a bride has pleaded with sweet lips for just a few blossoms to gem her hair. I have denied them all, and have never cut one of the flowers until it withered from the stem. It was not for Nancy's sake, either, but some how for the life that was to have blessed mine.

"But you did not love your sweetheart much,' ventured Lottie, winking of the salt drops that had collected on her long lashes.

"Not love her?' roared the doctor. 'Zounds! can a child like you unfortunate enough to be the mother of a man's soul?'

"If you had you would have acted differently,' bravely asserted this small council of one, sitting in judgment, with her chin resting on her hand.

"Acted differently, thundered the irate doctor. "Pray, Miss Wisdom, how should I have acted?"

"You would have said to your sweetheart, 'I do not love Nancy, but I do love her rose. She is going away and gave it to me in gratitude. But I give the rose and myself and all that I have to you, because I love you better than all the world. There, don't you see that everything would have been smooth, and you would have been all three years full of joy?'

"Zounds! so I should!" exclaimed the excited doctor, rising to his feet. "John, come in here," he called. "Help me to wrap up this rose tree. There, put it on your hand-sled and draw it home for this young lady and set it in the house. And you, little miss, present it, with my compliments and best wishes, to Miss Henrietta Henshaw. Good heavens, what a fool!" said the doctor, striking his ball had a vigorous thump, when left alone.

Lottie did as she was bidden, giving Aunt Hetta such a galvanic shock as to paralyze her; but the good lady came to enough to glance furtively down the street to see really that the "impertinent white thing" was no longer scarring at her from the doctor's bay-window. She had a bay-window, too, looking southward, and into it she contrived to roll the great box, with its wealth of white blossoms.

The doctor rubbed his knuckles vindictively in his own eyes.

"Aunt Hetta would not let me."

"Humph! Is not Henrietta Henshaw good to you?" he demanded, trotting up and down, as kind as can be. But she does not believe in birthday gifts, she says."

"No."

HUNTING THE TIGER.

Exciting Adventures and Hair-Breadth Escapes in the Jungles of India.

Punching a Tiger's Nose with a Walking Stick and Frightening the Beast Into a Retreat.

How a Little Dog Came to the Rescue and Saved His Imperiled Master's Life.

IN East Indian hills of the circling advent are with a tiger, in which a little dog came to the rescue and saved his master's life. "I was going through the jungle, when I suddenly heard a rustle in the brush, and the next instant an enormous tiger presented himself and prepared to springupon me. I immediately raised my rifle and fired twice, but, as ill-luck would have it, neither shot struck, and in another second the tiger was on me and had thrown me down, his claws buried in my left shoulder. I had no particular sensation of fear, and I remember thinking quite calmly, as I lay on the ground, the tiger's hot breath coming against my face, 'It's all up with me now.' But at that moment my faithful little Mungo came to the rescue. He bit the tiger's tail so severely that the beast immediately released his hold and turned around to seize his new adversary. But Mungo was sharp and wary, and off in the tall grass in an instant. The tiger followed, but the dog had the advantage with him, as it could run through the grass and under the brushwood at a pace which the other could not keep up with. In fact, it was almost comical to see how the great creature loomed about in its useless chase after the dog. I knew that the tiger, disappointed in seizing Mungo, would soon return to attack his master, so I reloaded my gun and stood waiting. In a short time he was before me once more, and again I leveled my gun as well as I could, considering the pain in my left shoulder. The first shot missed, but the second struck the tiger in the shoulder, crippled him, and made him roll about in agony. Reloading as rapidly as possible, I went nearer to him, aimed very deliberately, and this time gave him his quietus. Scarcely had I done so before Mungo came bounding to me, looking up my face, and whining with joy at seeing me safe.

A sub-commissioner, who is a magistrate for a sub-district, went out in the jungle one day to try and find a tiger which had been reported to him as having been seen near the village where he resided. There being no white man within many miles of him, his guard being composed of Mahrattas police under a native subhadar or lieutenant, Hill went to hunt the wild beast by himself, the Indian servant he took with him to carry his rifle, etc., not counting as an effective. He was walking leisurely along a path in the jungle with only his walking-cane in his hand. It happened to be a fine specimen of the gregarine cane, cut from a bamboo stalk, upon which Hill had brought from the West Indies some years before. The cane had a natural knot or knob as a head, and was remarkably strong and flexible. As he was looking about him from side to side, a large tiger emerged from the thick undergrowth only a few yards in advance of him. Keeping his eyes fixed full on the brute and staring into his eyes, Hill put his left hand cautiously behind him, telling his servant in a low tone to give him his rifle. The Hindoo up to this had been following closely in the footsteps of his master. Not getting the rifle handed to him, Hill repeated the order in a louder tone, but again without any response. As the situation was becoming rather critical, and the tiger was evidently restless and anxious to be at him, Hill, unfortunately for himself, turned his head to see where his servant was, but the cowardly fellow had evidently fled at sight of the dreaded beast. The brute, who had only been kept in check by the resolute gaze of the white man, took instant advantage of Hill's head being turned aside and made a spring, landing just in front of him. Hill had no time to lose in thinking what was now best to be done; he, however, with sure presence of mind, aimed a blow at the tiger's nose, a sensitive part of the animal's body, and, luckily for him, hit his mark. This blow caused the tiger to swerve somewhat in his attack, and he just struck Hill's left arm with one of his powerful paws and vanished in the jungle, whining as he went. Hill could recollect no more, for he fell down insensible, having fainted from pain. The servant, in the meantime, having thrown down the rifle, which was afterward found close to where Hill was, brings had run back to the village half dead with fright and appraised the head man of his master's dangerous position. The Brinjaree jugglers, who are no cowards, soon provided with spears and other primitive weapons into the jungle and found Hill prostrate in the path. He was carried to his bungalow, and a hostile demonstration was made against the Brinjaree, half-castle—apothecary attached to the police detachment dressed and properly cared for the injured arm. It was some months, however, before he was able to resume active duty. One of the Brinjaree gave a severe beating to the cowardly servant, whose services were dispensed with.

When there was a Great American Desert where now are the populous States, it was not unusual for an adventurer to be lost on the prairies and die a miserable death from walking in a circle until weariness made him drop. Those days are past now, but there are parts of the world where lost men still are perhaps frequently occur. A traveler in Dakota one afternoon started off for a little sport, taking his Winchester rifle and his Mulrooney servant to carry his cartridge-belt. He soon discovered the footprints of a tiger in the moist soil, and very incautiously entered the elephant grass, which grows to ten or twelve feet in height. "I followed the trail," said he, "for about half an hour without any result, and then, thinking it time to return, I retraced my steps, as I thought, until, to my surprise and horror, I came upon the footprints of a person wearing boots, and going the same way! I knew that the footsteps were those of my servant, and that I was going in a circular direction and was lost in the grass. There was no mode of elevating myself above the grass and ascertaining my whereabouts, and although I fired several shots in rapid succession I knew my people, on hearing them, would think I was simply shooting at game. My Mahrattas boy was more than useless, falling flat on the ground and howling out prayers to his Hindoo gods. I kicked him once or twice to rouse my feelings, and then started off on a weary tramp, firing my rifle at intervals. Night came in despair, and sank on the ground and thought of the tales I had heard of the Indian tiger, of his nightly visits to the barracks and never heard of again until some hunter would come across a tattered uniform and a few bones. Just as I had resigned myself to the same horrible fate, I heard a dog bark. I rose in an instant, and ran toward the sound, and within fifty yards came upon a native house. The Burman and his family were most polite, and within an hour I was safely conveyed to my boat. You may be sure I paid him well, and I did not forget the yelping dog to whom I really owed my life, although the Mahrattas boy declared that his deity had made the dog bark."

Comedy and tragedy go hand in hand in Hindoo tiger hunts. An amusing example of the former is given by a traveler. A tiger had been wounded, but although one of his hind legs was broken it made its way into a patch of high grass and hid there. Guided by the Bheels, the elephant entered the grass patch for the purpose of driving out the tiger. The enraged animal allowed the pony to pass, and then leaped at one of the Bheels, "a little, hairy, bandy-legged man, more like a satyr than a human being." The Bheel dashed to the nearest tree, and, owing to the broken leg of the tiger, was able to climb out of reach. Finding himself safe, the Bheel "commenced a philippic against the father, mother, sisters, aunts, nieces, and children of his helpless enemy, who sat with glaring eyeballs fixed on his contemptible little enemy, and roaring as if his heart would break with rage.

As the excited orator warmed by his own eloquence, he began skipping from branch to branch, grinning and chattering with the emphasis of an engaged lunatic, pouring out a torrent of the most foul abuse, and attributing to the tiger's family all the vices of male and female relatives in particular, every crime and atrocity that any relative of ours will be committed.

Occasionally he varied his insults by roaring in imitation of the tiger, and at last, when fairly exhausted, he leaned forward till he appeared to be within the reach of his enemy's paw, and, ended this inimitable scene by spitting in his face. Comedy and tragic element prevails. In one of these two instances a man escaped, which for six months had been the terror of the neighborhood, had been treated with all the respect due to a tiger, which had already been rendered furious by a wound. Unfortunately for these men are in the habit of half interesting themselves with opium before driving the tiger from its refuge, and one of them, having taken too large a dose, refused to escape and challenged the tiger, drawing it definitely. In a moment the animal sprang upon him, dashed him to the ground with a blow of his paw, and turned at bay. After a terrible conflict, in which the tiger was killed, the hunter then went to the assistance of the wounded man, but found that he was past all aid, the lower part of his face, including both jaws, having been carried away as if by a cannon-ball. The terrific effect of the single blow indicates the power of the limb which struck it. Had the blow taken effect a few inches higher, the whole of the head would have been carried away. The tiger, after the fatal blow, was known to crush the skull of an ox completely, like an eggshell, and break broken bones felt as if they were loose in a sack. Its power of lower limbs and strength diminishes when the limb is measured. The tiger which killed the Indian's arm was not quite so large, one, measuring nine feet five inches from the nose to the tip of the tail by the girth of the forearm was two feet seven inches. The corresponding limb of a very powerful man measures exactly a foot in circumference. I have not had the opportunity of measuring a tiger, but I have helped to dissect a lion, which is possessed of similar powers, and was struck with amazement at the tremendous development of the muscles of the forelegs.

Too Greedy.

There is perhaps as much difference among birds as among human beings, some are very greedy, others are not. The English sparrow furnishes two illustrations of this, one of them seems to scatter bread crumbs and other table scraps about the door in cold weather that he may have all the fun of driving thrushes, and other like visitors.

A lady, living near Mt. Cochin, China cook sometimes found its way to the parlor window as we were feeding our wild bird pensioners.

When we threw out a plateful of crumbs and other scraps, he would be cobbled up their food very fast by going showily and sensibly to work, each time taking a bite or two, then flying to be instantly swallowed with little or no trouble; yours, finder, and throwing taking only such bits as they very plainly and sensibly seemed to their individual power of deglutition.

It was amusing, however, to see the stupidity of the rice Cochin-China. Greedily pounced upon some big piece, so big that he could not swallow it, and rather than let it drop in order to pick up some more sizable bit, he invariably stuck to it, like a fool as he was, and he, and will be to the end of the chapter.

He would strain and strive to swallow it till you feared he would choke himself, and then, after walking about in the snow with uncertain steps, his eyes bulging out of his head, he would at last swallow it.

The rice bird never once occurred to the stupid Cochin that, by taking smaller and more manageable bits, he could much the gainer in the long run; for he would be able to swallow the big bit in his throat had at last become compressed and lubricated enough to be swallowed outright, then he would be no more for him.

The tiger wild birds had finished it all up, even to the last crumb, and the Cochin, having finally succeeded in the show, looking very discomfited and foolish, and yet manifestly unable to conceive of his greediness, for the next time he got a chance he behaved in precisely the same senseless manner.

One of the human footprints found in volcanic rock in Nicaragua, several years ago, is described by Dr. D. G. Brinton as being 9½ inches long, 3 inches wide at the heel, and 4½ at the toes. The apparent length of the foot itself is eight inches. Dr. Brinton considers the footprints genuine, but is uncertain whether they are so ancient as has been supposed.

A GEORGIA minister made a sensation by preaching his own funeral sermon.

The Care of a Cold.

A cold is a departure from health, and should really be attended to at once. Do not let it take its chance for rid of it at once. Do not feed it, though, for starve it. One cold dire another nearly always ends in thickening of the mucous membrane of the bronchial tubes, and before you are aware you become the victim of winter cough. The membrane that lines the lungs is a very sure preventative of colds. Never overdoze or overheat yourself. The body should be kept at a low ebb from fires indoors if you are subject to colds, coughs, or any weak tendency of simple laryngal or bronchial catarrh, may mean a very serious departure from health; and the sooner you are alerted in such a case the better. Do not be afraid to confess to a cold, because it is only those that delay who suffer in the end.

Getting this is another serious departure from health. One generally throws some weight on the system and gobbled up their food very fast by going showily and sensibly to work, each time taking a bite or two, then flying to be instantly swallowed with little or no trouble; yours, finder, and throwing taking only such bits as they very plainly and sensibly seemed to their individual power of deglutition.

It was amusing, however, to see the stupidity of the rice Cochin-China. Greedily pounced upon some big piece, so big that he could not swallow it, and rather than let it drop in order to pick up some more sizable bit, he invariably stuck to it, like a fool as he was, and he, and will be to the end of the chapter.

He would strain and strive to swallow it till you feared he would choke himself, and then, after walking about in the snow with uncertain steps, his eyes bulging out of his head, he would at last swallow it.

The rice bird never once occurred to the stupid Cochin that, by taking smaller and more manageable bits, he could much the gainer in the long run; for he would be able to swallow the big bit in his throat had at last become compressed and lubricated enough to be swallowed outright, then he would be no more for him.

The tiger wild birds had finished it all up, even to the last crumb, and the Cochin, having finally succeeded in the show, looking very discomfited and foolish, and yet manifestly unable to conceive of his greediness, for the next time he got a chance he behaved in precisely the same senseless manner.

OUR AFRICAN ARISTOCRACY.

Washington the Seat of the Best Colored Society.

(Washington letter.)

Washington is a colored man's paradise. Here at the Nation's Capital he enjoys social and educational advantages that no other city in America affords. Here he finds his highest intellectual and social development. So numerous is the class of cultivated and well-to-do people that they really form a community sufficiently large to make themselves independent of the masses of their race on the one hand and the white aristocracy on the other.

Away from Washington, in the smaller communities, the condition of the wealthy and cultivated colored man is too often a pitiable one. His natural and acquired attainments lift him so high above the rest of his race that he looks down upon them with ill-concealed contempt, and could no more associate with them than could a white person accepting the same relative position. Yet the inexorable "color line" shuts him off as effectually from white society as if he were buried at the bottom of the sea, and so he stands almost alone—a melancholy example of the injury that sometimes follows too great an ambition to outstrip one's fellows. To such colored men Washington holds out inducements that are denied everywhere else.

Under the civil-service law he is given a fair chance for employment, education, an equal opportunity with his white brother to secure a place in the government employ. That many of his race have done so is shown by the fact that more than 1,000 of them hold good paying positions in the classified service in the departments, and can do to-day. These people, it should be understood, are not mere messengers and laborers, but hold clerks, do writing in the same rooms, doing the same class of work and receiving the same salary as white clerks do in their respective grades.

The salaries drawn by these fifty clerks range from $900 to $1,600 a year. In the Third Auditor's office, for example, one young colored man is paid $1,600, two are paid $1,400 each, and two more $1,200 each. Auditor Will ams speaks well of their efficiency and deportment. He says their work is fully up to the average of the other clerks, and that in every way they are worthy of the highest commendation and esteem. Other bureaus who employ colored clerks speak equally well of them.

These clerks form no inconsiderable part of the more exclusive Washington colored society. Associated with them are those of colored blood—lawyers, physicians, college professors, and retired shopkeepers. Drs. Purvis and Shadd, the two surgeons in charge at the Freedman's Hospital, and their wives are among the more prominent members of this social set, which includes also the families of Wormley, the celebrated hotel proprietor; ex-Congressman Lynch of Mississippi, ex-Senator and Reg ster of the Treasury Blanche K. Bruce, James P. Cook, for many years Tax Collector of the District, Fred Douglass, and others.

Probably a dozen of these members of this coterie are financially well to do. Mr. Cook, for instance, is possessed of a income estimated at $30,000; the Wormleys are worth as much more, Fred Douglass pays taxes on $200,000 worth of good city property, and the others class their possessions at from $5,000 to $70,000.

They live in many cases in fashionable neighborhoods. The houses are well furnished and their children receive at the Howard University and kindred institutions of learning. Their entertainments are elegant and recherche, and are marked by a refinement and good taste not to be obtained by any white aristocracy.

The ladies entertain their friends with a dignity and good breeding that would shame many of their white neighbors. Although the ladies have every way from free indoors if you are subject to colds, coughs, or any weak tendency of simple laryngal or bronchial catarrh, may mean a very serious departure from health; and the sooner you are alerted in such a case the better. Do not be afraid to confess to a cold, because it is only those that delay who suffer in the end.

An Invalid's Appetite.

As a matter of food it is important to please the cravings of invalids. Poor sheet-eat from delicate china and glass. Ore ange sauce always serves iced-tea and milk in a wine-glass; one of the thin, bell-shaped glasses that hold more than they look to hold. A sick person will turn away from a bowl of soup, and be pleased with a pretty cupful. Sick children, especially, are amused and pleased with the color and pattern of the cups and dishes, and there is a trace of the fretful child in every invalid. There is something very tempting in a small quantity. It does not tax the eye. Therefore always present just as little to please the invalid wants to see. A course, white dinner-plate heaped with food, will take away all appetite, while a small plate or saucer, especially if it is a dainty one, will be successfully cleaned. A mauve saucer or a pink plate will coax a feverish patient to eat rice pudding or orange cream, or a few grapes, when all other arts have failed. There seems to be an appetite of the eye as well as the stomach, and it must not be offended. Very often invalids are confined to the exertion of lifting the hand to partake of a nourishing drink. Let him have their way. A bent glass tube, sold for five cents at the apothecary's, is not a signal for extreme illness or lowness, except that the head may rest low. It simply means comfort, and that the invalid need not be disturbed, in a sick headache or extreme fatigue, but can take the beverage provided without a change of position. The art of comfort is well understood, and is a great way toward it. When the nerves are not fretted, the body has far better chance of recuperating.—Atlanta Constitution.

Motion Ruled Out.

"Well," said the court reporter to his new assistant, "how do you like the work?"

"Business must be dull?"

"Very dull."

"But were no motions made?"

"One."

"Well, did the Judge entertain it?"

"No; ruled it out."

"Ruled out a motion! What was it?"

One lawyer made a motion to throw an ink-bottle at another lawyer, both lawyers. Judge said it should not come under him, but said he would appoint two masters and a referee, and let the case be decided at the fair grounds, and that the winner should be carried by friends."—New Orleans Picayune.

I have used ALLCOCKS POROUS PLASTERS in my family for the last five years and can truthfully say they are a valuable remedy and effect great cure. I would not be without them. I have in several instances given some to friends suffering with weak and lame backs, and they have invariably affected certain and speedy relief. They cannot be too highly commended.

Ancient Altar of St. Bernard.

There has recently been discovered in the high Alps, near the summit of the great St. Bernard, five large granite altars and numerous other relics of the same kind, used in pagan worship for sacrifices. Swiss scientists consider this discovery a proof that Mount St. Bernard was a place of sacrifice in pagan times, and that the canton of Valais must have been inhabited by human beings as far back as the stone age.—American Analyst.

Early to bed, early to rise, will depend largely upon the number of papers your neighbor takes, but one is a day nets you $5.60 a week, except in leap year, when you will make a cent more. ACCORDING to Professor Sargent, the strongest wood in the United States is that of the nutmeg hickory of the Southern states, which is weaker than the least elastic, and the lowest in specific gravity, is the wood of the Iowa aurea. The highest specific gravity, upon which in general depends value in fuel, is attained by the blackwood of Texas.

It is all right to open a camp-meeting with a prayer, but you cannot open oysters that way.

When They Leave Us.

The exodus of our bodily troubles is (only) welcome. Of these departures is pimples and blotches. It is the fault of the best of commendable eulogists, which act solely upon the bowels, that in operating they gripe and weaken them organs. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters produces a laxative effect, but neither causes pain nor weakens the abdominal region or the stomach. This is pre-eminently the medicine which is constipated, bilious or dyspeptic person should use, since a resort to it involves no bodily discomfort nor produces a violent reaction. The system is invigorated, strengthened and the appetite is improved, and permanently improved, so to it. Fever and ague, rheumatism, and kidney complaints are also conquered by means of their race; experience has proved it to be effectual. Yet it is a wholesome aperient, and is far more reliable tranquillizer of the nerves than sciatica-disturbing narcotics and sedatives.

Circulation of the Blood.

Before William Harvey discovered the circulation of the blood there was little known of its connection or purpose. That there was such a fluid in the human or any other body knew for it was made to flow by ruthless violence from the die at Gaza, tapped his brother on the head with a heavy club. To spill blood was the chief occupation of the people for many centuries, and he was considered the greatest man who succeeded in spilling the greatest quantity. In fact, few seemed to know that blood was designed for anything else. Even after the discovery of the fluid's use, it was for a long time thought that it had any circulation. Harvey was ridiculed for the discovery. He not only advertised to possess the secret, but swore to it before a Justice of the Peace, and this custom, originating with Harvey, has been copied by modern newspapers quite generally. Every well equipped and properly conducted newspaper employs a Harvey to swear to its circulation.—Texas Siftings.

A "Pat and Call."

This is a true story, though unmistakable, but all the brokers understand it. They use the expression in their business, and it is for the option of buying or selling stock one day, at a price which is agreed on, for a price given. It is often a serious operation to the parties, and it is a "pat and call." It is said that the Commodore was accosted with a severe cold and your friends "call" a physician, who gave you a "pat" with the house Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. The great cure for pulmonary and blood diseases. In action is marvellous. It cures the worst cough, whether acute, lingering, or chronic. For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Consumption, Bronchitis, Night Sweats, and kindred affections it surpasses all other remedies.

It is reported from Detroit that a lad named Frank Bailey, 16 years old, has a habit of swallowing sewing needles into the right side of his face and much that it has become necessary to send him to the lunatic asylum. At the time of the departure he had from 30 to 40 pins buried to the head in his cheek, besides an unknown number of needles that were out of sight.

Two years the valley of the country has changed from an Indian reservation to the highest stage of civilization, and the grand Centennial Exposition of 1887 will be a fair for the descendants of the noble men and women who offered their lives in honor of the labors and sacrifices of those who have gone before. Cincinnati, Newport, Covington, positions were when comparatively local interests prevailed, and have been only in the shade by this one, to whose wheel the eyes of the world are turned, and which will with a strength and vitality never seen in after years that he did not visit it will be looked upon as having missed his opportunity.

One Fact

Is worth a volume of theories, and an American statesman. It is a fact, established by the testimony of thousands, that Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup promptly does cure scrofula, salt rheum, and other diseases of the blood, and cures all pulmonary complaints and of the blood. It also overcomes that tired feeling, and restores the system to a healthy condition. Sold by all druggists. Price, 25 cents.

FARM AND GARDEN.

TIMELY TOPICS CONSIDERED BY TRUSTWORTHY AUTHORITIES.

A Short Chapter on Fruit Ladders, with Illustrations Showing Approved Forms That Are Easy to Make and Perfectly Safe in Use.

Every farm should be supplied with two or more ladders, one for short distances that can be readily carried about with one hand, and one for greater heights. A common ladder with parallel poles or bars does not rest well against the branches of a tree, hence do not make convenient ladders for picking fruit in orchards.

LADDERS FOR THE ORCHARD.

James Fife of Kanawha, Va., gives some advice on the subject of making ladders, and describes the forms here illustrated. These will be old to many readers, but beginners may receive timely help from the same. If the bars are made to run up to a point, the ladder may be thrust upward and inward into the tree and will remain firmly in its place. A broad wooden padded hook may be attached to the upper end, by which this ladder may be hung on any limb and drawn down slightly, so that the legs may rest on the ground. This is one of the most convenient forms of step ladders in use. See Fig. 1 in the cut.

A modification of the ordinary ladder may be made by attaching a similar padded hook to the upper end of one of the bars, cutting off a foot or so of the other bar so as to allow the hook to be placed on a limb. See Fig. 2.

Another convenient fruit ladder is shown in Fig. 3, and may be constructed of any light, tough sapling timber, such as young ash, poplar or chestnut. The sapling should be split at the butt and opened to about two feet. The holes for the rounds in the split part should be bored rather slanting so that the rounds when driven in will fit the distance apart ought to be eighteen inches and the timber from which they are split should be well seasoned. The other short rounds or pegs should be made of stuff three fourths of an inch by about two inches, and put in mortises of the same size, and trimmed, curving upward, the ends to project about six inches on each side of the pole as represented in Fig. 3.

Hanging Horses' Tails.

The docking of horses' tails is a mere method of fashion. Just now, in and about New York city, one sees bangs of tails on all the saddle horses. There is a fashion too in some sections of hanging the tails of carriage horses—cutting the hair irregularly—just beyond the end of the bone of the tail. The tails of some of the racing horses are cut square and left somewhat longer as to the hair than those of carriage horses. The cutting off of a portion of the bone of the tail is now rarely practiced.

The Gladiolus.

The gladiolus is not only one of the most beautiful of the summer or tender bulbs, but few plants are so easily managed and none give greater satisfaction in proportion to time, labor and money expended. The flowers are of almost every desirable color.

Successive plantings on the same ground should be avoided, and the fertility of the bed should not be changed so much as to return to the same spot for at least three years. It is the better plan to make the ground very rich for a desired crop this year and plant gladiolus on it the next.

DURABLE TIMBER.

The Chief of the Forestry Division Tells How to Save Timber.

In a bulletin recently issued from the forestry division of the agricultural department at Washington occurs the following advice on treating timber so as to insure its durability:

Early winter felling (December) should have the preference. Always remove the bark from felled timber to aid seasoning, but not from the standing tree. If winter felled, shape the timber to size within a fortnight after felling and have it placed on blocks away from sun and rain as much as possible, as it might not to dry too rapidly. Sufficiently thorough seasoning for most purposes is obtained in from twelve to eighteen months while for special work according to the size, from two to ten years is required.

When timber is cut in the leaf it is advantageous to let the trees lie full length until the leaves are thoroughly withered (two or three weeks) before cutting to size. With conifers this is good practice at any season, and, if it can be done, all winter felled trees should be left lying to leaf out in spring, by which most of the sap is worked out and evaporated.

The best method of obtaining proper seasoning without costly apparatus in shorter time is to immerse the prepared timber in water from one to three weeks to dissolve the fermentable matter near out the surface. This is best done by running water—if such is not at hand a bath may be substituted, the water of which needs frequent change. Timber so treated, like felt timber, will season more quickly and is known to be more durable.

If practicable the application of boiling water or steam is an advantage in leaching out the sap.

Never apply paint or any other coating to green or unseasoned timber. If the wood is not well dried or seasoned, the coat will only hasten decay.

Good coatings consist of oily or resinous substances, which make a smooth coat, capable of being uniformly applied; they must cover every part, must not crack, and possess a certain amount of plasticity after drying. Coal tar, with or without sand or plaster or pitch, especially if mixed with oil of turpentine and applied hot (thus penetrating more deeply), answers best. A mixture of three parts coal tar and one part clean, unsalted grease, to prevent the tar from drying until it has had time to fill the minute pores, is recommended. One barrel of coal tar will cover 300 posts. Wood tar is not serviceable because it does not dry.

Oil paints are next in value. Boiled linseed oil or any other drying vegetable—not animal—oils are used with lead or any other body (like pulverized charcoal) to give substance. Immersion in crude petroleum is also recommended.

Charring of those parts which come into contact with the ground can be considered only as an imperfect preservative, unless a considerable layer of charcoal is formed, and if it is not carefully done the effect is often detrimental, as the process both weakens the timber and produces cracks, thus exposing the interior to fermenta

The Correct Grade in Ditching.

In the figure annexed is illustrated the principle on which an instrument can be made that will, says a correspondent in Rural New Yorker, enable the most inexperienced to determine the proper grade in ditching.

Blighting Influences.

The Gladiolus is not only one of the most beautiful of the summer or tender bulbs, but few plants are so easily managed and none give greater satisfaction in proportion to time, labor and money expended. The flowers are of almost every desirable color.

A DITCHING LEVEL.

This levelling instrument, according to the authority given, may be made of a board five feet, eight inches long, six inches wide, and one half inch thick, made the shape of A, B. A pointer c d, made exactly five and a half feet long turning on d, is fastened to the board at C. At the end A of the board e f is a graduated arc divided into spaces one-sixteenth of an inch each. On the pointer c d is a level L. The upper edge of the pointer should be parallel with the edge of the board A B. To use it drive a stake at the lower end, where the outlet of the ditch is, exactly the same height as the board is at A. Sight the edge A B to the top of this stake. Push the pointer c d down (or up as the case may be) until it is level, and the point should be at zero of the arc. Then read the number of sixteenths from zero to the pointer's end. This will give the fall per rod. As the pointer is five and a half feet long a variation of one-sixteenth of an inch will equal three sixteenths of an inch in fall per rod. Two sixteenths, equal to one eighth of an inch, will indicate a fall of three eighths of an inch per rod, and eight sixteenths, equal to one half inch, will give one and a half inch fall per rod, and so on.

Things Farmers Tell One Another.

The best varieties and species of huckleberry, says A. S. Fuller, of New Jersey, may be grown in every garden where blackberries and raspberries are cultivated. Plants found growing on high, dry ground can be taken up with less labor than those growing in low ground, and usually with a ball of earth about their roots. There is no risk in moving such plants. A buckleberry plantation is very much like an asparagus bed as to permanency, for with ordinary care either will last a lifetime.

P. B. Crandall stated before the Western New York Horticultural society that grapes, picked and wilted, then buried in stone jars three or four feet below the surface, will come out with stems green and full plump and bright in the spring.

A. C. Hammond, secretary of the Illinois Horticultural society, reports most excellent results from spraying his orchard with London purple. He recommends using a pound of purple to three barrels of water and applies with an ordinary force pump.

A. W. Cleaver claims that grass can be grown much more economically in a section with other crops than if the attempt is made to grow it continuously on the same land for a long term of years.

"If we do not raise crops of one sort too long we will always find that the introduction of deep rooted crops will benefit the soil," says Dr. Geesman.

The director of the Massachusetts Experiment station favors spreading out barnyard manure on the surface of the soil as soon as possible. It does not gain in value by being kept, and it is unhealthy for stock to have it stored under them.

The total exports of apples from the United States and Canada for 1887-8 were 998,968 barrels, as against 811,410 barrels for 1886-7. About one half the shipments were made to Liverpool.

The Boy Knew How.

A mother on Madison avenue lately requested her daughter, who is the possessor of a long womanhood, to give her beau a kiss that she must not at sup later than 10 o'clock. This the girl was reluctant to do, but her little brother threatened that unless she did he would open the parlor door and announce the material relict. The sister supposed that she had put a quietus upon her brother by reminding him of his playing hookey and forging his mother's name to excuses from school to go skating, not forgetting to mention the little riding whip his mamma kept in her room. All this, however, was not enough to keep the youth from getting even with his beau for not giving him anything Christmas. The other evening he got an alarm clock with a bell as loud as the gong on the Brooklyn bridge bob, and placed it under the sofa where his sister and her betrothed were to do their spooning. The hands were pointed at 10. The unsuspecting lover's Waterbury. He was just tickling her ear with a yarn about a horse his papa was going to buy when the gong sounded. There was a pause—and then, as though understanding the meaning, he grabbed his hat and never stopped running until he stubbed his toe over Hoop, when he flew. The boy had fixed the steps. The little brother now takes a cushion to school with him.—Albany Journal.

His Own Children.

Not long since there was a crowd of excited darkies in an Austin alley, gathered around two negro boys who had clinched each other and were fighting away for dear life on the ground. There was one negro man present, and he urged the combatants not to give up. "Gosh! him in de eye, Bill!" "Stick it you gimlet in I'll tan yer hide for yer. If you whips Bill, I'll give a quarter for yer."

A well dressed gentleman stopped and said to the negro man: "You ought to be ashamed of yourself to encourage these boys to fight."

"Lor', Lor, boss," was the response, "dem's my own childrens."—Texas Siftings.

Their Business Booming.

Probably no one thing has caused such a general revival of trade and of business throughout their giving away to their customers of so many free trial bottles of the Kings New discovery for consumption. Their trade is simply enormous; this very valuable article from the first has always more than proved all claimed for it. Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup, and incipient consumption have been cured beyond a doubt in every instance where a fair trial has been given. Regular sizes 50 cents and $1. Trial bottles free, large size, $1. Every bottle warranted. 3

Worth Knowing.

Mr. W. H. Morgan, merchant, Lake City, Fla., was taken with a severe cold, attended with a distressing cough and consider his recovery doubtful in his final stages. He tried many so-called popular cough remedies and steadily grew worse. Was reduced to flesh, had difficulty in breathing, and was unable to sleep. Finally tried Dr. King's New discovery for Consumption, and found immediate relief, and after using about a half dozen bottles found himself well, and has had no return of the disease. No other remedy can show so grand a record of cures as Dr. King's New discovery for Consumption. Guaranteed to do just what is claimed for it. Trial bottles free at Dr. Crouter's drug store. 4

A SELF MADE MAN.

THE DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE FOR GOVERNOR.

Wellington R. Burt, the Poor Boy, Sailor, Miner, Woodsman, Lumberman and Businessman Citizen—A Worthy Example for Emulation.

Wellington R. Burt, the nominee of democratic preelection conventions for Governor of Michigan, is a self made man in all the term implies. He was born in Gorresse county, New York, on August 26th 1832. When he was seven years old his parents moved to Jackson county, Michigan, and began the work of clearing and making a new home. He was the eldest child of a large family and when he was only 13 years of age his father died leaving him to become general manager and provider.

The life of the farmer was a vigorous reality to him all through his youth and early manhood. He attended district school in Jackson county, one year at the Albion Academy, and one year at Michigan Central College at Spring Arbor.

At the age of 22 he left the farm and went to sea, visiting over the world. In the course of his wanderings he visited Australia, Van Diemen's Land, the Cape of Good Hope, the Canaria Islands and South America, being variously employed as a sailor, a minor and a contracter.

After three years he returned to Michigan with large experience and a small purse. He had seen the world and was satisfied to come home to stay.

Northern Michigan was then just fairly waking to the importance of her resources as a lumbering territory and Mr. Burt, 25 and full of energy, started north. He located 520 acres of government land in Gratiot county and began the work of making a farm in what was then a wilderness. The lumbering interests of Gratiot county were then in their infancy, but were full of promise and Mr. Burt soon began to think of taking a hand in their development.

In the winter of 1857 he went into a lumber camp with a promise of $15 per month for his work. At the end of the first month he was made foreman of the camp with a promise of $25 per month, and there he labored five months where now stands the thriving village of St. Louis. But in those days the men who embarked in the lumbering business were not so "solid" as many of them are now, and unfortunately for Mr. Burt's first venture, the men for whom he was working failed, and he lost five months' wages, together with a small sum of money he had loaned them.

This did not discourage him in the school of experience.

He learned from the step that settled the future of his life. In the year of 1858 he determined to go into the lumbering business for himself and with that object in view he located in East Saginaw, which has been his home ever since.

He erected a large mill and salt works at Midland, eight miles below this city, which was destroyed by fire 11 years ago, involving a loss of $200,000. He then joined hands with the New York firms, mill and salt block, at Zilwaukee, which then operated a large one, when he disposed of his interest in the concern to Hamilton, McDougal & Co. He owned two mills at Grand Marias, Lake Superior, a planing mill and a lumber yard at Bay City, operated pine lands in Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota, and a cattle and sheep ranch in Texas.

His interests as a lumberman led him into the shipping business and he largely invested in vessel property. As a lumberman he also became a big manufacturer and when the development that interest brought about the formation of the Michigan Salt Association in 1873 Mr. Burt was elected its president, which office he has filled with marked ability to the present time.

The only political office ever held by Mr. Burt was that of Mayor of East Saginaw in 1867.

In 1886 his friends in the Saginaw Valley made an effort to secure his nomination for governor on the democratic ticket, but in the convention held at Grand Rapids fusion with the greenback party was carried out and that arrangement the greenbackers were permitted to name the candidate and Mr. Burt's name was withdrawn.

Mr. Burt has always been popular with the laboring masses. His early life and struggles as a working man created a kindly feeling and a large honest and industrious toilet that has strengthened with the lapse of years, and no object in Saginaw Valley is more easy of excess to the sons of toil and his power is ever open to the call of worthy charity.

He is public spirited, liberal and progressive. The magnificent Opera of Music at East Saginaw, erected at a cost of $75,000, was largely the result of his efforts, and he is one of the foremost men at present engaged in giving the Saginaw Valley a new railway connection with the outside world—the Toledo, Saginaw & Mackinaw—the iron ropes which is now being laid between East Saginaw and Durand, connecting at the latter place with the Grand Trunk system and with the Toledo, Ann Arbor & North Michigan. In fact Mr. Burt's name is identified with nearly every project that has added to the development and prosperity of this section of the state.

Mr. Burt's personal character is stainless, and no citizen of the Saginaw Valley is held in greater esteem by all classes of people.

He will make the most aggressive and interesting campaign ever witnessed in Michigan politics.

In seconding the nomination of W. R. Burt, Chauncey Wisner made a brilliant speech which we give below minus the punctuations of laughter and applause which frequently interrupted the learned speaker.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the convention:—Since my earliest recollection two rival cities in the Saginaw Valley have fought each other. For twenty-five years of republican rule the contest was waged until the territory embraced in that valley sent two democratic congressmen to Washington, and to day the citizens of Bay present to this convention an honored citizen of a sister city! Allow me in behalf of the democracy of Saginaw to reach across the marshes and grasp the hand of Bay City for this noble action.

Mr. Chairman, Wellington R. Burt needs no introduction from me in this convention. His record as an energetic business man is known wherever commerce floats upon the lakes or industries of the Saginaw Valley are offered in the markets of the world. His career as a laboring man is told at every camp fire, in every log shanty in the northern woods. There, as a co-laborer, he worked for daily wages and to-day thousands of laboring men in the northern pineries are watching with trembling nerves and quivering faith for the action of this convention anxious to cast their ballot for the man who rising from their rank, by his own efforts has carved out a fortune and who, unlike others, has reached the summit of success. Wellington R. Burt's sympathy is of no sentimental character, born in office,—it is the result of early education, inured by hardship and toil. Gentlemen, if you want Wellington R. Burt's record as a financial man? It is known throughout the length and breadth of this nation in this country, and his familiarity with business and the business of others will not compel him to falter and pale when as your governor he is asked to sign appropriations for the grand educational institutions of the state. Do you want in the office of governor of this state a man with backbone enough to enter the office of governor and say to the men of the money changers and cast out a den of thieves? Do you want for governor of this state a man of broad views and sterling honesty? Do you want a man in sympathy with the laboring men of the state, one of them an honest man? Suggestions from his wife, Mrs. Wellington R. Burt, and Wayne county with her 5,000 majority must look well to her laurels, in a generous rivalry with the democracy of Saginaw county. Wellington R. Burt for governor and in a hundred day campaign, like another Wellington will wrest from Waterloo, and send to exile another disturber of public peace. We know a man in Indiana and will put it at the top of the pole and in unity with the force in the state who are ready to do or die we will march to victory.

I heard a man to day urge as an objection to Wellington R. Burt that he was a millionaire. Yes he has made a million. Shall we, as southern delegates, not a bid to corrupt elections or pollute the ballot box.

Gentlemen of Wellington R. Burt is a recent convert from republicanism. Why, gentlemen, some of the men who are leading the democracy today came from the republican party, and you may as well confess a paler of the church because two or three years ago he was a sinner and a republican. We in the tenth district and I myself have followed our banner since 1872—know and appreciate and heartily endorse the democracy of our candidate and I would sooner cast my right hand where it would be cunning than to stand up here and advocate the nomination of any who is not heartily in accord with the policy of this administration. The eighth district owes Wellington R. Burt a debt which we now want to pay, for he buried the power of his mighty influence into our congressional district and defeated the combination of the republican party, Roswell G. Horr, and sent to congress that sterling, young democrat, Tim Tarsney, and he earned a place in the affections of the democracy of that district which never can be forgotten. At our late municipal election this spring he gave his aid, and for the first time in years a majority of the common council and a majority of the school board were elected by the democrats. How can I doubt his democracy.

We have come here for the purpose of placing his name before you, not as a politician but as a business man, for the indorsement of the democracy of this state, and I tell you that in company with those glorious leaders and with that great watch word, tariff reform, in the coming fight we will shout out until the stars shall appear at night in the stormiest night of battle. In my third ballot I cast my vote for Wellington R. Burt.

WELLINGTON R. BURT, OF SAGINAW.

A DAY IN CONGRESS.

The Fisheries Treaty Again Discussed—Bills Passed by the Senate, Etc.

AFTER the transaction of some routine business the Senate, the 50, by a strictly party vote, determined to take up the fisheries treaty, the question being on Mr. Morgan's motion to postpone its further consideration until the coming next, and a lengthy and heated debate followed. The following bills were taken from the calendar and passed by the Senate: The House bill establishing additional aids to navigation at the mouth of the Columbia River; the Senate the bill providing for an additional Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. The Senate Senator Dawes introduced a bill to ratify the agreement made by the Northwestern Indians in connection with the Court of Alsen in the Indian Territory. After some routine work the House took up the deficiency bill, the question being on Mr. Morgan's motion to postpone to a formal amendment, Mr. Hever of Indiana precipitated a long political debate by some criticism of Mr. Matson's speech published in the Record of the Fifty-fourth Congress. A long debate as to the relative claims of the parties to the title of "The Soldier's Friend," and the robed flag incident came in for a share of attention. The consideration of the bill was then resumed and for some time ran smoothly until Mr. Pockery of Missouri precipitated a brief tariff debate by a criticism of a certain feature of the surplus. After a short discussion the committee arose. The House voted to non-concur in the Senate amendments to the army appropriation bill and ordered a conference.

DIED ON THE GALLOWS.

The Notorious Blinky Morgan Hanged—He Protests His Innocence.

Charles, alias Blinky Morgan, the principal figure in the Ravenna rescue and the murder of Detective Hulligan of Cleveland, Ohio, was executed at the Ohio Penitentiary in Columbus. The prisoner spent a quiet day, refusing to see visitors except those with whom he had been intimate and who had taken an interest in the commutation of his sentence. To all with whom he talked he protested his innocence of the crime. Thirty persons witnessed the execution, which was singularly quiet. Morgan dying of strangulation.

Nominated for Congress.

The Illinois Democratic Congressional Convention for the Twentieth District met at Murphysboro. The Hon. A. T. Robinson, of Union County, was unanimously nominated for member of Congress.

The Prohibition Convention of the Second District of Nebraska have nominated the Rev. George Scott, of Saline County.

The Republicans of the Sixteenth Ohio District have nominated E. L. Tybarker for Congress.

A Double Tragedy.

At Pittsburg, Pa., May Patton, of Johnstown, Pa., aged 20, shot and killed Charles De Knight, a Pullman car conductor, and blew her own brains out in a hotel where they had registered a few hours before as C. Lewis and wife, of Johnstown. Both were dead before any one reached their room, and the cause of the murder and suicide can only be surmised. Both were young people of good connections and reputation.

Mrs. Jenkins Found Guilty.

After thirty hours' deliberation the jury at Terre Haute, Ind., returned a verdict of guilty against Mrs. Jenkins for the killing of her sister's daughter, Hattie Denaun. Mrs. Jenkins' son, who saw his mother driving the girl out of the yard, and handed her the musket with which she shot the girl, is under indictment as an accessory.

Murdered by a Nihilist.

On the death of Gen. Drenteln, Military Governor of the Kieff district of Russia, it was announced that death was due to apoplexy. The Wiener Allgemeine Zeitung now says it has learned that Gen. Drentelu was murdered by a nihilist at Kieff.

Condensed News.

All cases against the Boston & Providence Railroad Company arising out of the Bussey bridge accident have been settled without trial at a total cost of about $1,000,000.

E. S. Smedley, of Fort Wayne, Ind., traveling boot and shoe salesman, died at a hotel at Columbus, Ind., by suicide as reported, but his friends think of an overdose of morphine taken to relieve pain.

A young girl named Julia Flynn, of Des Moines, Iowa, has begun suit against her mother and guardian for $10,000 damages for false statements made concerning her character and brutal treatment.

The wife of Thomas W. Eck, the bicyclist, has begun suit in Minneapolis, Minn., for divorce. Just a year ago quite a sensation was created in that city by the runaway marriage of this same couple.

Prohibition Candidates Decline.

The Rev. T. H. Dahl, of Stoughton, Wis., Prohibition candidate for Lieutenant Governor, and D. C. Prescott, of Marinette, candidate for Treasurer, have declined to run, and Chris Carlson, of Eau Claire, and L. W. Hoyt, of Madison, have been named, respectively, for the vacant places on the ticket by the State Central Committee.

Burglar Killed by a Woman.

Near Dawisville, W. Va., Maria and Virella Reeves, maiden ladies living alone, were awakened by burglars moving in their room. One of the sisters fired, killing one burglar, and the other marauder was shot and mortally wounded by the other sister while trying to escape through a window.

CONDITION OF CROPS.

Reports of the Harvest and Growing Grain in the Western States.

The following summary of the crop report appears in the last issue of the Farmer's Review, of Chicago:

A summary of the crop reports received from our correspondents this week furnishes interesting information relative to the estimated yield of spring wheat, the estimated yield of oats, the average condition of the corn crop, and the acreage of flax, potatoes and tobacco, as follows: Illinois—Estimated yield of spring wheat, 15 2-7 bushels; estimated yield of oats, 35½ bushels; condition of corn crop, 103 per cent, as compared with average; yield of hay, average, 1½ tons. Indiana—Estimated yield of spring wheat, 15 bushels; condition of corn, 98 per cent; hay, yield, 1 4-5 tons. Indiana, Oats, 35 bushels; condition of corn, 104 per cent; hay yield, 1.90 tons. Michigan—Spring wheat, 15 bushels; oats, 35 bushels; condition of corn, 95 per cent; hay yield, 1 ton. Ohio—Oats, 35½ bushels; condition of corn, 102 per cent; hay, 1½ tons. Missouri—Oats, 34 bushels; condition of corn, 99 per cent; hay yield, 1½ tons. Iowa—Spring wheat, 15 bushels; oats, 34 bushels; condition of corn, 98 per cent; hay yield, 1 ton. Nebraska—Spring wheat, 14½ bushels; oats, 31 bushels; condition of corn, 104 per cent; hay yield, 1½ tons. Kansas—Spring wheat, 16 bushels; oats, 33½ bushels; condition of corn, 100 per cent; hay, yield, 1½ tons. Nebraska—Spring wheat, 14 bushels; oats, 32½ bushels; condition of corn, 97 per cent; hay yield, 1.5 tons.

There are complaints of rust in wheat in some districts, while oats are badly laid out in others. Rain is needed for corn and potatoes.

BUSINESS PROSPECTS.

An Encouraging Outlook in All Branches, Though Trade Is Somewhat Dull.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s trade review for the past week says:

Improvement continues. The collapse of the Western Iron Manufacturers' Association has not caused the least alarm, but has rather encouraged, but has iron weaker. Stocks have been strengthened by a decision arresting the enforcement of the Sherman law for the time being, and there are interesting decisions on many important points. The failures for the past week were much as last year, but the liabilities were much greater, though their gross earnings gained 6.4 per cent, and the gains in gross earnings for July have been less than half as large. Statements show that the earnings of 64 roads have been placed in the hands of receivers during the last year with $153,000,000 bonds and $50,000,000 stock, and the gross and $28,300,000 net earnings for the first half of last year. But the average price of stocks has risen about 21.40 per share, though less strong of late. Reports of domestic trade are generally very encouraging, though the dullness yet prevails, improvement appears at many points. The Treasury has taken in during the past week $9,000,000 more than it has paid out, but reports from all internal revenue collectors show a large falling off for all legitimate business, with a general deficiency of demand. Once more the country closes a crop year with a surplus of nearly 200,000 bushels of wheat on hand unsold, and the prospect is that there will be an ample supply for every demand during the coming year, exceed 14,000,000 bushels, exports for the last year having been less than 150,000,000 bushels.

ACROSS THE WATER.

Happenings in Foreign Countries—A Terrible Storm in France.

Eight thousand navvies are on a strike at Paris.

Clotten, the man who threatened Mr. Gladstone's life, has been liberated on his own recognizance.

Jem Smith, the prize-fighter, was seriously injured by being thrown from a trap while driving in Kilburn, London.

Five hundred strikers attacked the police at Lavilliette, France. Ten of the rioters were wounded with swords.

The Paris Municipal Council has voted 1,000,000 francs to erect an electric-light station in the Halles Centrales to supply the whole city.

A fearful storm has caused much destruction in Northwest France, and many fishermen have been drowned. The Duke of Grammont's yacht was foundered off Cherbourg.

Advices from Khartoum say that the Austrian, Neidel, who was engaged to build a mausoleum, managed to escape from that city, but was recaptured at Dongola and hanged.

THEY SHOT TO KILL.

The Sheriff, Four Deputies, and Six Others Killed in Stevens County, Kansas.

The county-seat war in Stevens County, Kansas, has broken out afresh, and has resulted in the murder of John Cross, Sheriff of the county; S. H. Hubbard, C. W. Eaton, H. Taney, and W. H. Wilcox, all citizens of Woodsdale, and it is reported others, making eleven in all. The county was organized two years ago and is occupied largely by hard characters. Hugoton was chosen the county seat by fraud, the Woodsdale people say, and the election result is in litigation. Bad blood has long existed between the two towns. Constable C. E. Short, of Woodsdale, and two others attempted to arrest Sam Robinson and three other Hugoton men in the county seat trip. Sheriff Cross received a request for help from Short, and, with Hubbard, Eaton, Taney, and Wilcox, he started to render it. The party stopped at a ranch that night, and were there surprised in their sleep by Hugoton men, headed by Robinson, who seized them, took away their arms, stood them up in a road and shot them. The Governor has been appealed to for troops. More trouble is feared.

SWARMS OF EAVENOUS GRASSHOPPERS.

Canadian Priests Say They Are a Punishment for the People's Wickedness.

In the parish of St. Barthelemi, county of Berthier, says a Montreal, Que., dispatch, swarms of ravenous grasshoppers have settled down oven and eaten almost everything in the fields. The wheat and oat crop in the neighborhood has been completely destroyed. The grasshoppers do not seem to be satisfied at the ruin they have wrought to everything in the shape of fruit and vegetables, but actually eat the cedar fence and the posts along the fences. In speaking after mass with reference to the plague, the priest attributed the serious visitation to the probable wickedness of the people, who had neglected to perform their religious duties in a manner becoming a Christian people.

BLEW OFF HIS HEAD.

A Michigan Man Ends His Life Almost as Did Anarchist Lingg.

The body of Michael Weiss, a single man 40 years old, was found near Bird Jacket Depot, Mich., with his head completely blown off. It is supposed he committed suicide by placing a stick of Hercules powder in his mouth and touching it off. The brains and skull were scattered for a hundred feet around.

BIGAMIST AND MURDERER.

A Man with Thirteen Wives Kills No. 4 and Then Shoots Himself.

The village of Wellsboro, Pa., has been aroused by the arrival at the county jail of George S. Bailey for shooting his wife. Bailey has not less than thirteen wives. He married her in good faith, believing her husband dead, killing one burglar.

RESCUED AT LAST.

The Thrilling Sensations of a Man Who for Ten Days Was Buried in a Well.

John Anderson, of Nebraska, Alive and Well After a Remarkable Experience.

[Johnstown (Neb.) special.]

John Anderson, who was buried in a caving well, near Johnstown, Neb., and was rescued after ten days of torturing uncertainty, tells a thrilling story of his experience. "The days were as long as for the next ten days," says Anderson, "will not get rich very fast. What have I to say about my experience? It is good deal. It was awful. July 19 I went into R. H. Hall's well to clean it out and repair the curbing. The well, which was 150 feet deep, was a very dangerous one and I felt as though I ought not to work in it. Fifty feet down was where the curbing needed the most repairing, as at this point the old curbing had given away and about a foot of sand had caved in. After taking the measurement I came out, put my curbing together and lowered it, supported by four ropes. Of course this curbing was strung together than the other and would have to be made fast. This I did by going below and nailing it by four inch stuff on the old curbing. In this new curbing I had laid three boards across the bottom, letting them rest on the old curbing, thinking that if any sand was in this box stuffing hay in behind, preparatory to filling in the sand, would keep it with straw.

"When I was about ready to leave the well I saw it beginning to cave about me, dumping into the bucket I called for them above to pull me up quick, but before I move could be made the sand and boards had closed in on me and I was a prisoner. For the first few minutes of my imprisonment cold words cannot express my feelings. That my time had come I did not doubt in the least, and the thought of such a horrible death was terrible. After collecting my thoughts a little I discovered I was held fast in the bucket by two or three boards, but by a hard struggle I managed to extricate myself from this position and dropped down into the bottom. From the bottom of the box it was three and a half feet to the boards above, which in falling had formed themselves into an arch and protected me from the sand. The box was now only about two feet square, and not room enough for me to stand erect. I could get on my knees or sit down, but had to stay in a crouching position the whole time I was in the well.

"About the first three days I got along very well, but after that I began to want water badly. The fourth day when it rained I heard what I thought was water slowly dripping. Feeling around I found it, and holding my mouth open managed in this way to get about a dozen drops of water, which gave me much relief. I had no difficulty in breathing until the well below me came so near being filled by sand occasionally coming in, caused by the digging above. I had breathed the air over so much that it had become impure, causing me to have a smothering sensation, but about this time the workers got near enough to me to let in air from above.

"By having a good supply of chewing tobacco I did not suffer so much for food as might have been expected. From the beginning I could hear considerable that was said and done above. I had the wagon when it started to town for lumber and heard some one say the man is dead and the order given to have the well dug out. When they began to pull I knew there was great danger of the bucket giving way and crushing me, and for my own safety and to give evidence of being alive I cut the ropes and heard the exciting talk that prevailed when it was discovered that I was alive. It was music to me, and from that time on I was hopeful of being rescued.

"About the sixth day I felt something crawling on my hand and found it to be a blue-bottle fly. I thought by this that an opening had been made from above. I was correct, for soon Mr. Henry Archer had the opening large enough for a bucket and reaching down, handed me a bottle of water and a little bread, which I drank thankful.

"From this time on I began to gain strength, and by laying down and taking a time passed quicker than one would suppose. When my feet ached, which as bulbs swollen, are better, and I dare eat a square meal. I will be able to come home and rest for a few days before I can be persuaded to go into the well again."

When reaching the top of the ground, Anderson shook hands with his rescuers and tried to thank them but failed, he said, say, "God bless you, boys," when his voice was choked with tears. There were 200 people present, and there were very few dry eyes among them. He was carried carefully to a farm-house, and placed under the care of two physicians. They say he is doing as well as could be expected, and that he will soon be entirely out of health.

The sympathy naturally called out by a situation such as Anderson was interested in the country where, by force of circumstances, every effort in a neighbor, and for ten days business in Johnstown and Atwood, and on the farms was practically suspended. So intense was the excitement and anxiety that farmers left their fields and merchants their stores and flocked to the scene of the accident. Large supplies were sent to the workers from private residences and stores, and the women were unceasing in their kindly offices. But although the morning paper said that every one in the person would never have been saved but for the kindness of a neighbor, he rejected the work during the last two days, and was unceasing in his own efforts and encouraged the men by his cheerful words when they were almost ready to despair.

Robbing the Dead.

The widow of a woman who died at Ellenville, N. Y., the other day, has confessed that he was a professional grave-robber. He took jewelry from the dead and silver plates and handles from the caskets.

The Chicago Anarchists.

The Chicago anarchist conspirators, Chosek and Claibourne, do not appear in court at the time set, and their bail bonds were forfeited. They were afterward found and arrested.

Gone Up in Smoke.

Richardson's planing-mill and Moir, Son & Co.'s grist-mill and elevator at Bradford, N. S., have been destroyed by fire. Loss $45,000.

MOLLIE MOTT and Tyer Scanlan, the Chicago toughs, have been lodged behind the bars at Joliet, Ill.

NATIONAL LAWMAKERS.

What Is Being Done by the National Legislature.

THE Senate again considered the fisheries treaty in open executive session the 27th, but it went over without action. The sundry civil appropriation bill was then considered. Among the amendments the Senate agreed to were the following: Increasing the appropriation for repairs of lighthouses, etc., from $300,000 to $325,000; increasing the appropriation for salaries of lighthouse-keepers from $848,000 to $850,000; increasing the appropriation for lighting of rivers from $670,000 to $680,000; inserting an item of $50,000 for examination of harbors in the Lake district; inserting an item of $40,000 for improvement of Ocmulgee River, Georgia; inserting an item of $10,000 for improvement of Altamaha River, Georgia; inserting an item of $8,000 for a fish-culture station at Neosho, Mo., and of $7,000 for the maintenance of the same; inserting an item of $25,000 for the survey and relocation of the boundary line between the United States and Mexico; inserting an item of $50,000 for a private war-claim bill, now passed by the House. On motion of Mr. Cullom (Ill.) bill was passed authorizing the Illinois River Channel and Dock Company to improve the mouth of the Illinois River. Mr. Cullom also (Ill.) introduced a bill to authorize the construction of a marine hospital at Evansville, Ind., at an expenditure of $75,000. At the evening session sixty-six private pension bills were passed.

THE sundry civil service appropriation bill was the principal topic of discussion in the Senate the pending question being on the paragraph relating to the new Library Building at Washington, which, according to various amendments agreed to, is to be fireproof, is to cost not more than $4,000,000, and will meet all requirements of the Library for a period of twenty years. The House had not yet acted on a portion of the work, and for new designs and general consideration of the subject the Senate added a clause of a previous appropriation $ 50,000 for the completion of the plans, and provided that the building should be erected under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, and that it shall be the duty of all contracts made for the construction of the building to employ only American citizens. The work of all grading, excavating, and masonry was ordered to be done by day labor, and the contract for a rapid motor system was awarded to Lowrey of Pittsburgh. Mr. Lowrey was reported and placed on the floor of the Senate by Senator Cullom (the Senate took up and passed the bill providing for the appointment of a commission to revise the laws relating to the Postmaster-General, 19, to 18, for the purpose of expending the $50,000 appropriated in said office. The Senate agreed to committee amendments to the bill for the relief of Mrs. Jefferson Davis, increasing the pension from $5,000 to $5,000; to authorize the Wisconsin and Southwestern Railway Company to build a bridge across the Mississippi River; to pay the actual purchasers of lands lying in the vicinity of the Sioux City & Pacific Railroad, which, owing to the organization of the company, fell within the limits of certain railroad grants and had increased greatly in value, and to give a vote for the disposal of the Fort Wallace military reservation, Kansas, for the benefit of the public school in the state. The House passed a resolution to the same effect. The Senate also passed a bill to pay Kate Sherman, widow of Gen. Sherman, $5,000 for the use of the committee, as far as the minor amendments were concerned, was passed by the full House.

COLD-WATERITES.

Connecticut Prohibitionists Convention Nominate a State Ticket.

The Public Debt Statement—High License in New Jersey—Sheriff Jack's Health.

The Connecticut State Prohibition Convention met at Hartford, and the Hon. E. Northrup was elected Chairman. In his address he said he was convinced that the prohibition amendment in Rhode Island would never be enforced. "It is no use to attempt a reform of this sort through either of the old parties. The Prohibition party has now taken its position on solid ground and will make no compromise." Mr. Northrup was heartily applauded. The platform declares for prohibition of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors as a beverage by statutory or constitutional enactments enforced by a prohibition party; will declare for a tariff adjusted so to be for the best interest of all; for civil service reform; for a uniform divorce law; for the Australian ballot; for settlement of labor troubles by arbitration; for a revision of the pension laws in justice to the soldiers, and an appeal to all voters to unite with the party. Four hundred and fourteen delegates were present. The Hon. T. C. Desmond, of Wisconsin, spoke, and a collection was taken up, and over $100 subscribed. The Committee on Resolutions split on woman suffrage, and no reports were made. The Temperance party ignored the woman subject, while a minority favored it. The minority was left on the issue. Ex-Governor Rollins, of New Hampshire, is reported as saying that he would vote for the disposal of the Fort Wallace military reservation, Kansas, for the benefit of the public school in the state. The House passed a resolution to the same effect. The Senate also passed a bill to pay Kate Sherman $5,000 for the use of the committee, as far as the minor amendments were concerned, was passed by the full House.

A Foundling's Home Which Shelters Twenty-four Thousand Abandoned Babies.

Mammoth Residences of the Russian Millionaires and Their Sumptuous Entertainments.

[BY WILLIAM ELIOT CURTIS.]

One of the most important public establishments in Petersburg is the Foundling's home, which, with its baby farm, is known to thousands of those who visited Russia when it was added to the Imperial Exhibition of 1893. The building occupies 26,325 square feet of ground, and has a capacity of twenty-two thousand fatherless babies were received during the year, representing a family of 24,000 inhabitants. As this is one of the most popular institutions of the country, the Committee on Reception and Reports were made. The Memory ignored the woman subject, while a minority favored it. The minority was left on the issue. Ex-Governor Rollins, of New Hampshire, is reported as saying that he would vote for the disposal of the Fort Wallace military reservation, Kansas, for the benefit of the public school in the state. GEN. SHERIDAN IMPROVING.

Dr. O'Reilly Notes the Change for the Few Weeks Have Brought.

Dr. O'Reilly has issued the following encouraging bulletin at Nonquitt, on the date of Aug. 1:

"Gen. Sheridan was last seen by me the morning of July 7, the day after the bulletin was issued. He was then very suffering to-day to be the attending physician. He noted the changes which have occurred since he left Nonquitt. The tissues are firmer, better and his color more healthy. The eyes are not so bright, the face is less pleasant. His face is fuller, and the contour of the face is changed to advantage. He has good volume and tension, and probably a little increase in his respiration from nervousness. He is taking food well. The organs of digestion are in good order. The urine has brought here by mechanics to whom they follow: Lieutenant Commander Colwell, Navy Yard; Lieutenant Governor, Nathan Goodwin; of Manchester; Secretary of State, Theodore L. Pease, of Nashua; Treasurer, Henry E. Reis, of Newport; Comptroller, Edward Manchester, of Keene. Electors-at-large and district electors were then chosen, and the convention adjourned.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—The first load of new wheat this season has been marketed in Jackson, the price paid being seventy-eight cents a bushel.

—A severe thunder and rain storm occurred in the vicinity of Calumet recently. Lightning tore the roof off Cooper's boarding house at Red Jacket, and Mrs. Adolph Bajorce was badly injured and Mrs. Ezra McFadyen of Jackson was killed.

—Several Polish young men of Alpena have organized themselves into a brass band, chipped in about $200, and sent for a set of tan brass instruments. Alpena will, in a short time have three brass bands, the German, the Norwegian, and the Polish. Now the French and Americans should come to the front.

—There is no village in the State where the Sunday liquor law is more strictly enforced than that of Mackinac Island.

—The Catholic congregation of Ontonagon are contemplating making some important improvements on the church property.

—The outlook this year is for a heavy crop of nut-bearing trees, and consequently the small boy rejoices.

—The new Union Depot at Sault Ste. Marie is completed.

—Fifty-one people listened to the farewell sermon of Rev. M. W. Haynes of the First Baptist Church of Kalamazoo, and they were moved away, being unable to gain even standing room. Every foot of space, excepting the aisles, was occupied, chairs being placed on the pulpit, and even the pulpit steps serving as seats for interested listeners.

—The Rev. Father Chebul has arrived at Ontonagon, and assumed charge of the Catholic Church in the village. He is now the oldest priest in the diocese, having been in the ministry thirty-three years; he has been laboring very hard at Ironwood, and thought he would take the more quiet and less laborious parish in Ontonagon.

—Train No. 27, the east-bound freight train, engine No. 1126, and the west-bound passenger train No. 98, engine No. 1095, on the Wabash, collided at Bellevue, on the regular meeting place of the two trains, and the order is for No. 27 to sidetrack and wait for No. 98. Instead of this No. 27 went weeping around the curve west of the station and crashed into the passenger train, lifting the locomotive off the front trucks and forcing the passenger train back about forty car lengths. No damage, save that to the two engines, resulted from the collision. No one was killed or injured. The engineer of 27 has been on the road several years and feels the accident very deeply. He says he forgot about sidebracking. Had not the engineer of No. 98 reversed his engine on seeing the danger, a terrible accident, probably involving the loss of many lives, would have been the result.

—The body of an unknown man was found in the river near the Michigan Central freight depot at Bay City. It was in an advanced stage of decomposition and badly decomposed. The coroner found that one of the eyes bore evidence of having been blackened previous to death, and from this fact a report has spread that the man was foully dealt with. Some three weeks ago a light took place on Saginaw street, the exact place where the body was found, in which one man, a person known as "Scotty" among his associates, was knocked down. This man has not been seen since that night. The finding of the body and the disappearance of the man Scotty seem a trifle mysterious.

When the estate was settled, Dr. Hugh McGregor Wilson stepped in with apparently authentic papers from Jackson and claimed all the money aggregating with interest $40,000. He claimed that small payments had been made on each, thus preventing them from becoming outlawed. As he was a poor man and the notes had never been indorsed or secured or sued upon, the estate became suspicious and had them submitted to experts, who, after a minute examination, pronounced them forgeries, one having been raised in a bungling way from $18 to $18,000, and another from 1,000 to $18,000. From appearances both were raised recently. About fifteen years ago Mrs. Hotchkiss and her son, who had a two-thirds interest in the estate, lived at Lockport, N. Y., as did also the doctor. The son was taken insane and soon died, leaving his mother. Dr. Wilson, Mrs. Hotchkiss and Wilson soon after came to Detroit. Three years ago they were arrested for the murder of the son. His body was disinterred and arsenic traces were found. It was uncertain whether it had been administered to him while alive or used by the undertakers. So both were discharged.

Ninth District Democratic Congressional Convention.

The democrats of the ninth congressional district of Michigan will meet in convention at the opera house, Manistee, on Tuesday, August 21st, 1888, at 3.30 P. M., for the purpose of putting in nomination a candidate for congress for the ninth district of Michigan, electing a district committee, and transacting any other business that may properly come before the convention.

The several counties are entitled to representation as follows, on the basis of one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes:

Antrim, 3; Charlevoix, 4; Kalkaska, 2; Lake, 2; Manistee, 6; Mason, 5; Mecosta, 4; Missaukee, 3; Muskegon, 15; Newaygo, 8; Oceana, 6; Osceola, 4; Wexford, 4.

A full delegation from every county is earnestly desired, and all opposed to the republican party are cordially invited to participate in the deliberations of the convention.

By order Dem. Cong. Committee.

WM. P. NISBETT, Chairman.

GEN. SHERIDAN died at Nonquit, Mass., at 10.50 Monday morning.

B. M. CUTCHEON was renominated for candidate for congress for this district at the republican convention at Reed City, Monday afternoon.

D. W. DONSEY, R. H. Gillchrist, and other colored orators will make speeches in New Jersey, in favor of Cleveland and Thurman, this fall.

THE Port Huron Tribune hitherto an independent paper, with republican tendencies, has come out for tariff reform, Cleveland and Thurman. Editor Finn would rather be right than President of the U. S.

THAT Rev. Burchard's "Rum, Romanism, and Rebellion" speech four years ago represented the true sentiments of a large proportion of the republican party there can be no room for doubt. Another eminent divine, Bishop J. H. Vincent, who scores that rickety wreck of the political demagogue, writes that because he is "a true prohibitionist and antiromanist, he is also a republican." The letter has been published in the Jacksonville, (N. Y.) Journal, and is causing republican managers no end of worriment.

As ancient philosopher once wrote "The mills of the gods grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small," or works to that effect. Hon. Charles H. Hoge, the democratic representative from the fourth congressional district of West Virginia, who paired with Sam. Randall on the Mills tariff bill, will doubtless pin this bit of ancient wisdom in his hat and wear it where he can refer to it often. He was badly beaten in an effort to secure a renomination. Democrats of republican proclivities are not in demand as candidates this year.

IN a store window in Washington there was recently displayed what should prove a popular style of handkerchief among the supporters of Ben. Harrison. It is a handkerchief emblazoned with stars at top and bottom for the states and territories, with a small 8c. stamped upon it and the following it scription:

PROTECTION TO AMERICAN LABOR AND AMERICAN INDUSTRIES.

Appended to it is a card reading as follows: "Republican handkerchief, endorsed by the chairman of the Chicago convention. The only authorized campaign handkerchief. Imported Chinese silk."

The republican party of the upper peninsula has lost one of its leading lights in the desertion of Fred Brasted, of Ishpeming, who announces that it is his intention to hereafter affiliate with the democrats. Mr. Brasted is one of the leading and most influential Scandinavians in the upper peninsula. He has resided in Marquette county for many years, and although a poor boy when he came to this country, he amassed a fortune estimated at from $300,000 to half a million. He owns a large general mercantile establishment which does a business of about $50,000 per month, and a few weeks ago he purchased the Winthrop and Mitchell iron mines, located near Ishpeming. Mr. Brasted was a delegate to the democratic state convention held at Detroit recently, and the delegates from the eleventh congressional district chose him as presidential elector. With becoming modesty, however he declined, saying that he was too new in the party to accept such an honor. Mr. Brasted's advocacy of the election of Cleveland and Thurman, shows that he is not at all afraid that the iron district will suffer from democratic legislation.

MUCH has been said and written regarding the position of candidate Harrison toward the laboring man. In a recent response to a series of resolutions adopted by the Harmony Legion, of Philadelphia, he said: "I have always believed that no man's wages should be so low that he cannot make provision in his days of vigor for the feebleness of old age." To aid the laboring man in accomplishing this desirable result, he asks him to vote to make him (Harrison) president, on a platform that proposes to tax the laborer on the commonest necessities of life; but genuously proposes to allow him free rum and tobacco.

Spirit of the Political Press.

An off-set will be made to have Blaine stump Michigan. His services may be needed.—Menominee Democrat

There is a surprise in store for the republicans of Michigan unless we are grossly mistaken. "There's a hen on."—Menominee Democrat.

O. M. Barnes, a Michigan lumberman says that "Michigan pine is in no danger from competition with Canada." "The lumbermen," he says "should be led to see that reducing the tariff will not hurt but rather benefit them.—Menominee Democrat.

Tippecanoe { and Chinaman / and Monopoly / and Rat pie / and Boodle / and Free whiskey / and Dear clothing / and Cheap labor } too.
—Philadelphia Herald.

There is not a high tariff monopoly in the country that does not hire the cheapest labor it can get and pay the lowest wages it can find anybody to take. And until a democratic congress prohibited it by law those high tariff plutocrats were scouring the slums, not only of Europe, but of Asia as well, for low priced serfs and coolies.—Boston Globe.

None of the newspapers say whether Mr. Carnegie is in company with Mr. Blaine on the steamer that is now heading towards our shores. If the great manufacturer is on board he ought to come in for his share in the glorious welcome that awaits the plumed knight. A man like him, who can pile up $1,500,000 profits out of protected labor in one year and not distribute a cent of it among his poorly paid employes, ought naturally to look for a grand reception from the high tariff nabobs.—New York Graphic.

The Wonder Will Increase.

In his speech at Terre Haute, Ind., Saturday night, before 6,000 people, Senator Voorhees declared: "I have and nothing in saying that the annals of mankind may be searched in vain for a parallel to the present condition of American affairs."

The wonder will increase when it is considered that this situation has lasted over four long years, during which the national income was a hundred millions above legitimate expenditure, save so far as $195,000,000 of call bonds were redeemed, and that they were kept out a year while the money lay in the treasury.

The wonder will increase, if the reader will consider that, in 1886, with $292,000,000 of government money in the treasury, and an extra income of $300,000 a day, congress reduced no tax, but added a bogus-butter levy of nearly a million a year.

The wonder will increase if the American taxpayer understand that there is, in the treasury, for each man, woman, child, Indian and Chinaman the sum of $8 of unneeded funds above the gold reserve—$1,000,000,000.

And the wonder will increase if we behold a party of 6,000,000 voters who lay it down as doctrine that this system should continue to oppress us in the future as it has robbed us in the past.—Chicago Herald.

The Reckless Element.

Let no man make any mistake about this The power behind Grover Cleveland is not intrigue nor partisan cunning, nor anything that arises out of political expediency or any combination. The power back of Grover Cleveland is public sentiment. It is overwhelming. It will be resistless.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Leprosy Disowns Scrofula."

It is not at all uncommon to see some measly children disown their parentage but it is perfectly unnatural to see parents disown their offspring. Here is the leprous monopoly scrofula, the parent of the scrofulous trusts, actually feeling ashamed of its own offspring, and taking pains to repudiate and deny the relationship.

Some months ago I pointed out, as I thought then, as clearly as possible that the trust scrofula was the offspring of the monopoly tariff leprosy. Now let me once more make this point clear. There is a duty of 1¼ cents per pound on iron or steel beams and girders for building purposes. This product costs in Europe 1.30 cents per pound. Therefore a duty of 1¼ cents per pound is 102.75 per cent. There is a combination or trust in this country which regulates the price of iron beams and girders. I believe that Mr. Carnegie is one of the chief producers. In 1887 we imported 13,516,673 pounds of this product, which cost abroad $164,403, and the duty paid thereon was $168,920.93. The home combination or trust have an agreement, so at least it is said, and they have but one price between them. There is no home competition. In order that there may be no mistake, I call upon the iron beam and girder producers to gainsay these facts, and I will then, as it becomes an honest reformer of abuses, stand corrected. Now then these home manufacturers, having a protection of 102 per cent. and having combined upon a selling price, naturally take, as near as possible, the full pound of flesh that the tariff gives them, and still we import at 102 per cent. duty 13,500,000 pounds. This statement, I hope, is plain for everybody to understand. In other words, the tariff lepers having put 102 per cent. duty on beams and girders, the trust scrofula was begotten in the shape of a trust or combination of manufacturers, and the tariff leper, in the shape of a trust or combination to exact millions of dollars taxes from the people who use this building material in the country. Now, is it not plain that without a high tariff there would have been no trust or combination? Is it not a fact that if as in the Mills bill, the duty on these iron girders and beams is reduced from 1¼ cents per pound to 6 10-10 of a per pound, this combination will have to reduce the price at least 6 10-10 a cent per pound? And is it not possible that when the leprous duty of 102 per cent. is reduced to about 50 per cent. there may be a chance of the monopoly breaking up and a wholesome home competition setting in? What is the use of this cabinet statesman Senator Sherman who so acutely suffers now from this "green sickness" leaves as the clearly pointed presidential "itch," to try to repudiate trusts and relieve the consumers of that curse by impudable and almost impeachable laws, when the only method in burning deep into the leprous tariff with a hot iron and so purge and purify the leprous poison out of the scrofulous trust? The action of the president in repudiating the trust which they alone are responsible for, is of a piece with the anxiety of the Republicans to repudiate the free whisky plank in the Chicago platform. What is the use of trying to evade or explain the actual facts?

The tariff as it now exists is leprosy. Trusts are its offspring, and therefore when the national income was a hundred millions above legitimate expenditure, save so far as $195,000,000 of call bonds were redeemed, and that they were kept out a year while the money lay in the treasury.

Wide Awake for August.

All boys will enjoy the frontispiece of the August Wide Awake, "The Crisis," a wild Canadian river-scene, also the accompanying story of peril and pluck, "Across the Breach," by Macdonald Oxley, and both boys and girls will have great fun over James Otis' complete serial, "A Neck-tie Party," for it is a jolly story. One of the most beautiful things in the number is by May Kendall, an English writer, the author of "Dreamthorp." That Very Man is a "parable" entitled "The Temple of Music," and teaches one of the best precious of life's lessons—that "he who loses his life shall find it" and who have ever given up an ideal for the sake of duty will be happy over the touching and beautiful story. In "The Elephants of an Indian Prince" Miss Bisby Sweat offers the young folks the most entertaining elephant article ever written

> ... you are even acquainted with the Dutch elephants of Asia. Pets in Artist Life," by Eleanor Lewis, has some beautiful pictures and some very amusing anecdotes. "Dolly" is a pathetic little tale for little folks by Katharine Macquoid, "Ship-building Bees and a Queen" by Lucy Everett Hale writes ab.ut Boston Common as it was in Revolutionary times, and the article "on Henry Bacon's famous picture of "The Boston Tea Party and General Gage," Dr. Garnett of the British Museum has a witty chinese story called "The Rewards of Industry," amusingly illustrated. Mrs. Lucy Larcom contributes a long suggestive story "A Helping Hand," written in young women's interest from a social standpoint. "Double Roses," the serial by Mrs. Burnett, relates the overthrow of Phyllis and Bisebell, and the training-ship serial by Mrs. Crowninshield, "Plucky Senalb," shows how the Government discovered Harry's pluck and how it saved a steamer. Mrs. Dodge contributes a charming poem, "The Little Town Maid," which is a most pathetic appeal for a university education for girls. There are many other a tractions—a pretty paper by Mrs. Frances A. Humphrey about "The English Daisy," written among English dainties, an article on Hans Andersen, an account of this baby Buddhas in Tibet by Mrs. Emerson, instructions how to make a "handy microscope," interesting letters from Susan Coolidge, Children, poems, prize-questions and pictures.

Will Vote as They Believe.

The old party lines are broken. The people believe in Democratic principles as embodied in Cleveland and Thurman. Democratic party of today is the administration, not President Cleveland. The people believe so will they vote.—New York Star.

Everything Ready for Victory.

The public mind is made up now, and it will not change. When election day comes an irresistible majority of the votes will be cast for Cleveland and Thurman and honest government.—New York Star.

Favors for the Few.

The Chicago platform is a square tool declaration in favor of the trusts and monopolies that today hold the people by the throat. Its denunciation of them is a piece of hypocrisy that will deceive nobody, because its attitude in respect to the tariff favors a policy under which every trust in the land will thrive.—Congressman Ford.

The One Thing They Want Free.

There is one thing the Republicans do not want protected this time, and that is the treasury.—Philadelphia Times.

A Damaging Confession.

The Leader goes into considerable detail to show that a reduction of the tariff would not cheapen anything but wages. It says it would not make the cost of food any cheaper. It would not, it thinks, lessen the cost of meat, flour, butter and eggs, nor any of the food products that the farmers furnish. If this is so, what is the good of a high tariff for the farmer? How can it "protect" him when, as The Leader now admits, its reduction of tariff would not affect him in the least? If he could sell everything he produces at just as good prices without a protective tariff as he does with one, what does he want a protective tariff for? It taxes his clothes, his lumber, his nails, his carpets. If he has any, and his farming implements, and now comes The Leader saying that the process that makes him pay him get a single cent more for anything he sells. This is the most scandalous confession the tariff trust advocates have made yet. What sort of a tariff humbug have they been putting upon the honest farmer all these years, anyhow?—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Natural and Artificial Obstructions.

Whenever you diminish the abundance of things which minister to our necessities, it is like interposing a desert, swamp, an unbridged stream or a bad road between producer and consumer. No road at all! It is a prohibitory duty. Twenty per cent. duty is like a bad road; 40 per cent. is a corduroy road (laughter); 60 per cent. like a broad, deep and rapid unbridged river, and 50 per cent. like a swamp fanking the river on both sides, while 100 per cent., such as levied upon steel in rails, blankets and window glass, is a band of brigands who strip the merchant of nearly all he possesses. Is it strange that he should be grateful to God that he escapes with his life.—Congressman S. S. Cox.

THE DEMOCRATS ORGANIZED.

Cleveland and Thurman Tariff Reform Club.

At Bartholomew's opera house last Saturday evening, the democrats organized a Cleveland and Thurman Tariff Reform Club, with the following officers:

President—John Nicholls.

Vice Presidents—Amos Fox, Jos. M. Clark.

Secretary—C. J. Strang.

Assistant Secretary—R. W. Kane.

Treasurer—L. D. Bartholomew.

Five members of the executive committee were appointed, and five more are to be appointed at the meeting next Saturday evening. Those appointed are as follows: J. Milo Eaton, Alex. Cameron, Chas. H. Ball, A. J. McLeod, Geo. Pappin.

Seventy names were enrolled that evening, and the list has increased every day since.

It is expected that the room formerly occupied by A. J. Mudge & Sons grocery will be secured for a club room, where the boys may gather to discuss the issues of the day, and for holding the meetings of the club. The next meeting will be held next Saturday evening, at which time the executive committee will be completed and the night for the regular weekly meeting will be determined.

There are daily accessions to the ranks for tariff reform, from among the laborers, who are beginning to see who are benefited and who are robbed by high tariff, and the prospects are encouraging for an increased vote for Cleveland over that of four years ago.

What Makes Wages Low in Europe.

Wages are low in Europe—there is no doubt about that. They are probably low, and, in the continental countries, are apparently going lower yet. But why? Those who say that it is because of a mistaken economic policy in Europe regarding imports forget that there is only one European nation which does not maintain a protective tariff, they forget that on the continent wages are lowest in those countries where tariffs are highest and they forget that all through Europe the protection numbers hundreds of people to the square mile. In this last fact lies the real explanation of the low wages rate.—Providence (R. I.) Journal.

Iron Workers' Wages Reduced.

In a presidential year it is always possible to tell the men employed in protected industries that their wages would be higher if somebody on the other side were not suspected of a design to ruin American industries. In Pennsylvania the workingmen have always shown a most obliging disposition to believe this tale. A canvass that begins with a reduction of wages in the most highly protected industry while the sacred and admirable tariff is in full operation subjects the Pennsylvania workingman to a test of faith more searching than has heretofore been imposed upon him; and it will be interesting to see how he takes it.—New York Times.

A Word About the Squash.

The squash is one of our tender annuals, and cannot be planted until all danger of frost is past. Again, the seed itself is liable to rot in damp, cool weather. The plaster is about as good an article as has yet been found for driving away bugs. The crop must be gathered before it is nipped in frost or it will not keep well. The vines may be allowed to grow as long as enough, but of the fall or winter sorts, five or six rows should be planted.

The Return of Mr. Blaine.

Mr. Blaine is expected to land on these shores about the 7th of August. Fifty thousand ardent partisans, representing the national league of Republican clubs and the admirers of the Plumed Knight in all parts of the country, will assemble here to welcome him back and give vent to the enthusiasm which only Mr. Blaine is capable of making them feel. There is no magic for them in the candidacy of the man whom the Chicago convention placed at the head of the ticket. They can neither shoot nor sting for the descendant of "Old Tippecanoe." Nothing in his career or his personality stirs them as they need and wish to be stirred. It is but natural, therefore, that their hearts and hopes should turn toward the magnetic exile, whose very name is an inspiration and whose presence will arouse the slumbering ardor of Republicanism.

Mr. Blaine must expect to witness a scene rivaling the popular demonstrations that attended the last visit of Lafayette to the United States, at those which marked the arrival of Kossuth. He comes to impart to the canvass the only fervor on that side which it is destined to display, and the first step of his triumphal stumping tour is certain to be characterized by all the devices to promote his cause that devotion and ingenuity can suggest. We say "his" cause, inasmuch as the nominal candidate of the Republican party is not the real candidate. A Republican victory will not mean the triumph of Harrison, but the triumph of Blaine. A Republican administration would not be the administration of the nominee of the Chicago convention, but the administration of the nominee of the Republican masses—James G. Blaine.

Under such circumstances his coming, while sure to be greeted by the most flattering proofs of political loyalty and personal affection, is almost equally sure to involve the dangerous consequences which the unpremeditated utterances of impetuous friends entail. The Burchard of 1884 is likely to be succeeded by a Burchard in 1888. This amenability is one of the positive traits which distinguish him who aspires to favor heat the blood of the multitude. The passion of the crowd is full of peril for the object of its adoration. Enthusiasm despises the calculations of prudence and refuses to be chilled by the cold counsels of reason. Therefore, while Mr. Blaine is destined to tread a path strewn with the flowers of a personal loyalty, he can scarcely escape the discovery that it is a path full of pitfalls.

Democrats may accordingly share with Republicans the pleasure of beholding the "white plume" waving at the front again. Mr. Blaine's positive committal against the chief plank in the Republican platform—the free whisky plank—will not be the least of the embarrassments that await him. If Burchard should fill to play his appointed role, the magician himself can be relied upon to multiply the difficulties which environ his party. Clever as he is, there is sufficient quicksilver in his blood to warrant the expectation of numerous lapses from caution in the course of a long campaign. He cannot adjust himself to the conditions of this fight, or reconcile his past declarations with the Chicago creed without exposing himself to criticisms that must be greatly to the disadvantage of the Republican cause. But it will be a great day for political magnetism when he disembarks at the port of New York, and the more insignificant will Harrison appear as the tour he takes up his line of march across the continent.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Will Blaine Recant?

Mr. "Pig Iron" Kelley, of Pennsylvania, who so handsomely played into the hands of Congressman Scott, a few days ago, in the matter of Andrew Carnegie's $1,500,000 income, electrified his Republican friends in the house by declaring that Mr. Blaine could be induced to recant the passage in his now notorious Paris letter against striking the Federal tax off whisky. According to Mr. Kelley, Mr. Blaine was carried away "enthusiasm" when he wrote the letter in question and will now be in returning shame the heart of the party by saying: "I am ready to admit I had formerly an erroneous opinion, but now I am with you heart and soul." We do not, of course, believe that Kelley, who is a great deal of a windbag, had any authority for making such a statement, but it is plain, nevertheless, that Mr. Blaine has an exceedingly awkward situation to face. It is quite impossible for two declarations to be more antagonistic than those of the Republican platform and Mr. Blaine's epistle. Here are the two platforms now:

"If there shall still remain a larger revenue than to repudiate the debts of the government, we favor the entire repeal of internal taxes that is, the whisky rather than the surrender of any part of our protective system.

Mr. Blaine to Blaine:

"I would not advise the repeal of the whisky tax. There is a time for all. To cheapen the price of whisky is to increase its consumption enormously. There would be no sense in urging the repeal of the tax, while there are some states, if the national government neutralizes the good effect by making whisky within reach of every one at twenty cents a gallon. It would destroy high license at once in all the states."

There is no way of getting round or away from this. Mr. Blaine asserts that free Federal whisky would "destroy high license at once in all the states" (the Republicans are in favor of high license) —and the platform declares in favor of free whisky.

Kelley is entitled to a vote of thanks from the Democrats for his success in emphasizing this point.—Brooklyn Citizen.

A Shuffling Platform.

The Boston Herald (Ind.) explains to a contemporary who evidently cannot see why the Germans should object to the "white plume" waving at the front again, Mr. Blaine's positive committal against the chief plank in the Republican platform—the free whisky plank—will not be the least of the embarrassments that await him. If Burchard should fill to play his appointed role, the magician himself can

THE TARIFF.

An Earnest and Eloquent Plea for the Reduction of Import Duties.

Protection Without Restraint Means Monopoly, and Both Mean Death to American Commerce.

Speech of Mr. Anderson, of Iowa, on the Mills Bill, Delivered in the House of Representatives.

Our farmers in the West are more and more coming to understand that the benefits of protection, as portrayed by its advocates, relate to the condition of those who are the benefiaries of the system, and not to those who feel the burden of the protective tariff. They know, too, that the balance of trade being against the farmers of the West and as to the products they raise upon their farms to meet that balance that the people of that section of the country are in no sense benefiaries of protection, whatever may be said of them. The farmers of the West are a plain and, considering their surroundings, a prosperous people, and with a fair fight in which to have a fair show. But what I do mean to say is that there is unjust discrimination somewhere; that there are unjust and onerous burdens laid upon them by the protective system; that the evil is not the result of the people engaged in with the agenta of the protective system, but that some backset for the average power of the Government, is an unequal contest. And it is for the reason that the discussion of this question, so intimately involved in the pending measure will be of the greatest benefit to the people, that I make the discussion of protection in general that I shall with unfeigned pleasure the present debate.

When the question of tariff taxation is put from the field and the people calmly and dispassionately look at it, it will be found, as it appears, they will see that a tax is a tax; that a fraud is a fraud; that a robbery is a robbery, whether making a foreign or a domestic market the leading, vital principle of the life of all of them lod, the fundamental, the principle of competition. Protection without proper restraint means monopoly, and both mean death to the most vital and effective principle of American commerce—competition. Competition means fair play, honesty and justice, and it means foul play on the highest authority, for the Scriptures tell us that the Lord hates robbery. Can anyone imagine a system, as up to where we can appreciate as never before, the Golden Lad's Prayer which prescribes the absence of temptation as the condition on which we can gain the kingdom of heaven. But as obvious as this proposition is, and as commonly it is, I do not think it is necessary in the common affairs of state as the daily potions are necessary to the practice of the healing art of medicine.

The people of the country the time has come when the farmers of the great West have such time for thought and action with reference to their own affairs as he was. If this is the country is marred one that has a tendency to equalize the business and the benefits between the different sections of the country and the different classes of people, I am sure I speak for myself as a citizen of one of the great central wealths of the West, which I have the honor in part to represent, I will say that the West will meet this question in the broad-minded, generous spirit of patriotism that has ever been the dominant spirit of our states to the Republic, but in the spirit of fair and honest discussion of the rights of our Eastern protection friends of the manufacturing interests, and of the great sections of Western representation with Eastern ideas, that we are such dull, obtuse, and easily deceived people that we will regard the tariff as a blessing, and that the acquiesce in the policy of a tariff for revenue with fundamental protection we are doing in the interest of the, deceived by the sophistries of the modern protectionist, we will be really to be into all of the blessings that have come to man in the ages of the world, and that the tariff, with all its evils and its shams, and its sophistries, and its robbery can make it seem otherwise.

The secretary of the Treasury estimates the needs of the Government for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1886, and ending June, 1887, at $215,000,000. The aforementioned sum will come into the Treasury within that time from—

Customs duties	$195,000,000
Internal revenue	30,000,000
All other sources	10,000,000

Making a total of $235,000,000

Leaving a surplus of $20,000,000 to be applied to the payment of the public debt.

Ah, or nearly all, agree that there should be such a recast of the revenue laws of the country as to leave that amount of $20,000,000 in the coffers of the Government annually, and that the surplus of the Government unnecessarily abstracted from the just measure of taxation.

It must these Obligations is stern business, and no array of figures or labyrinth of statistics can make it other than a stern, hard, and, to those who view the great mass of the people, who bear the burden of the tariff, a cruel, and, I may add, a wicked, and, I may add, a wicked, and, I may add, a wicked

FARM AND GARDEN.

PRACTICAL LESSONS FROM EVERY DAY LIFE ON THE FARM.

Plows Manufactured in Various Parts of the Country—Diverse Results with Different Soils in Which They Are Used. Plowing Under Green Crops.

There are many good plows manufactured in various parts of the country and these give diverse results with the different soils in which they are used, and from the unlike modes of using them by the different owners. Country Gentleman, in reply to recent queries concerning plows that will turn under green crops, gives expression to the following statements, which are of widespread interest.

FIGS. 1, 2—PLOWING UNDER GREEN CROPS.

The chilled plows have generally given better results than those with steel mold boards, and are mostly better for avoiding adhesion of the soil. A personal examination of the different plows made or sold in your region of the country would doubtless give more satisfactory results than any single recommendation. For turning under a short or moderate growth of a green crop, important aid is rendered by the skids, further, such as is represented in Fig. 1. For taller growth of rye or clover, two or three feet high, a wood hook or heavy chain is indispensable. A good wood hook is represented by Fig. 2. The curved hook sweeps and bends over the green crop in front of the mold board, and they are at once buried out of sight.

A single and nearly straight iron rod, in the proper place (Fig. 2), throws the green crop over into the previous furrow. This form has the advantage of not being caught by any obstructions; but it is important that it be properly adjusted for efficient work and that it is stiff enough to hold its place.

FIGS. 3 AND 4—PLOWING UNDER GREEN CROPS.

Different modes are employed for using the heavy chain for covering the growth. Fig. 4 represents one of these modes, the operation being quite similar to that of the wood hook (Fig. 2). Sometimes the chain is attached so as to operate like the straight rod (Fig. 3).

The appearance of a field where the corner has had to turn under a tall crop of grass without chain or hook, the tops of the growth projecting between the furrows a foot or more in height, is very different from a field properly treated, with the growth thoroughly buried.

Tucking Butter.

It detracts greatly from the market value of butter to mix different makes, which generally smack different colors, together in a solid pack. Buyers of country made butter in large quantities usually work it over again and color it uniformly before packing it down in a solid mass. This, however, injures the grain, and the result is to average the quality of the good and poor that are packed together. When practicable, it is best to keep each make by itself and ship it to market in tubs, wrapped in bleached muslin, wet enough to keep from sticking to the roll. As a general rule, a country dealer or producer will realize most from his butter trade who sells it as soon as in season, and before it has lost the delicate flavor and aroma of fresh butter by long keeping.

In packing solidly in tubs or firkins from fifty to 100 pounds are used. The packages should always be made of hard wood. When it is desired to keep early made butter through the summer to a season of scarcity and better prices, the following plan has proved one of the best:

Pack only sweet and fresh rolls where the buttermilk has been got out and the grain of the butter is good. Wrap each roll in a thin muslin cloth wet in strong brine and pack the rolls closely in the package without jamming or disfiguring them. Then immediately cover the butter entirely with clear, strong brine and set it away in a cool place. The first may be weighted down and more put in afterward, but none should be left floating partly out of the brine. In this way each roll is entirely embargoed and does not come in contact with the air.

Japanese Buckwheat.

Considerable curiosity has been evinced concerning Japanese buckwheat. Mr. Peter Henderson, the well known New York seedsman, says of it: "Japanese buckwheat is entirely distinct from all other varieties so far offered." Mr. Henderson speaks of it as to the productiveness of Japanese buckwheat, and recommends a trial of it, whether it be for selling, for the apiary or the aviary. Good reports come of the variety from bee keepers, who have grown it in connection with bee culture.

Encouraging Silk Culture.

Senator Chandler has introduced a bill into congress appropriating $150,000 for the encouragement of silk culture in the United States. It creates a division of silk culture in the department of agriculture and authorizes the establishment of experimental silk culture stations through out the country and provides for the free distribution of mulberry seed and silk worms.

Crops of 1886 and 1887.

According to the department of agriculture, the acreage of the several crops in 1886 and 1887 are as follows: Wheat in 1886, 38,000,000 acres; in 1887, 37,000,000. Corn in 1886, 65,365,000; in 1887, 74,400,000. Rye in 1886, 1,000,000; in 1887, 28,000,000. Oats in 1886, 16,200,000; in 1887, 22,900,000.

SCAB IN POTATOES.

Opinions Expressed by Scientists and Progressive Farmers.

The two principal desires of the potato grower are, of course, quality and quantity, and if only one may be realized the former has the preference. Potatoes without disease are, or ought to be, the great aim in this day of rot, blight and scabby tubers. Of late years not only learned scientists, but progressive farmers, have endeavored to discover the cause and a preventive for scab in potatoes.

Some of our ablest authorities, including Dr. J. B. Lawes, of England; E. S. Carman, editor of The Rural New Yorker; Dr. F. M. Hexamer, Dr. Henry Stewart and Professor Stockbridge, after extensive and repeated experiments, have become convinced of the efficacy of special commercial fertilizers for the potato. Mr. Carman, who believes that wire worms are at least one cause of scabby potatoes, says: "Whether the wire worm dislikes potato chemical fertilizers or whether these do not furnish the shelter which the worm prefers, we do not pretend to say. We do say that in all of our tests the potatoes grown with farm manure have invariably been more injured wire worms than those grown with fertilizers."

The feeling very generally prevails that manure, especially fresh manure, is prolific cause, in many soils, of potato scab, and ought to be avoided for this crop. In general, it is claimed that potatoes grown on chemical fertilizers are more free from rot scab and blight, and are smoother, more uniform and of better quality than those grown on unfermented stable manure.

In a word, experience has proven that organic manures tend to promote scab and rot in potatoes. The organic substance seems to afford a soil peculiarly adapted to the development of fungi and insects, which in time attack the potatoes. On the other hand, results favor the belief that commercial fertilizers made from minerals and properly treated animal products are comparatively free from fungi, and that such fertilizers tend to prevent or destroy any chance fungus growth in the potato itself.

Capes in Chickens.

Wright, who is a good authority on poultry, thinks capes infectious, or at least epidemic. Unless, perhaps, thus communicated by others, its occurrence is caused by foul water, exposure to wet, and want of nourishing food. The actual symptoms exhibited are a number of small worms in the windpipe and gasping for breath. If taken early it will be sufficient to put a little camphor in the drinking water or a little turpentine may be given daily in meal. In bad cases the worms must be removed by introducing a loop of horse hair into the trachea and turning it round during the withdrawal, repeating the operation till the worms are extracted. A feather stripped almost to the top may be used instead of the horse hair. Small pellets of camphor are sometimes given, and the feather may be dipped in turpentine diluted with three parts water. When young chickens are kept in clean coops and out of the early morning dew and rains, they are not often troubled with capes.

The Elm Tree Beetle.

For the elm tree beetle, that has become such a pest in many sections at this season of the year, Professor Riley recommends as the best remedy spraying the trees with a solution of London purple made from half a pound of purple and three quarts of flour in forty gallons of water, or in these proportions

FOR THE CAMPAIGN.

Every reader of the JOURNAL has one or more friends whom they can, with a little effort, persuade to become regular readers and patrons of the paper. In the excitement in use that effort and influence now, we offer the paper until November 8th for the small sum of 25 cents—the sooner you begin the more papers you get for the money.

Any person receiving the paper without having ordered it, may know that some friend has paid for it to them, if the address tag shows the figures SNOVS following the name.

Send us the names as soon as possible.

In consideration of this very low rate, and to avoid separate account, it is desired that campaign subscriptions be paid in advance.

PANEL FOR FENCE.

Fig. 1 represents one of these panels, the panel illustrated in the accompanying cut was recently described in Rural New Yorker, and they may be made of poles, edging, fencing wire lath, any or all of these, combined or separate, as chance may be convenient.

These panels can be fastened to each other with wire, willow bands, old hoops or anything that will hold. This sort of fence was recommended originally for portable hog yards. An extension, so to speak, of the idea resulted in the inclosing of a piece of ground the right size for a garden that was cumbered by the hogs until it was rich and clean enough to be properly tilled. Then three sides of the frame was removed for convenience in plowing. The long yard joins the garden side, so that, of course, if one wants his garden inclosed he can leave the fence standing. The ends of the pieces that answer the purpose of posts are well sharpened and driven into the ground to some depth, the one in the middle of the panel having a longer point than the end ones. One can make up a lot of such panels during winter

Along the Country Road.

It is best for the average farmer to have but one kind of chicks. They can then have unfinished grain, and there will be no expensive yards to keep up, and you will always know that your birds are pure. Birds can't remain healthy unless they are allowed plenty of room to roam and hunt for early worm.

President Chamberlain, of the Iowa Agricultural college, does not believe in permanent pastures, preferring a regular rotation of crops, with clover and timothy meadow for two years of the rotation. The land, under rotation, is in better heart, and you get more grass, relatively.

During the hot summer months the Douglas mixture placed in the drinking vessels—one ounce of mixture to one gallon of water, placed in vessels to run at will—is the best tonic that can be given chickens.

An English farmer says: "My twenty-five years' experimentation with potash on Norfolk soils warrants me in advising its application to roots, in preference to any crop in the ordinary rotation."

An able bodied load of industrious habits will make way with and digest his own weight of insects during twenty-four hours. If you be of an insecticidal turn of mind turn out by daylight and watch the toads getting breakfast. It is entertaining.

A Good Tribute to Randall.

A correspondent writes from Washington dispatches, it is definitely settled that Mr. Randall is suffering from that dread affliction, cancer of the stomach. Accepting this as true, it may be well to remember that Mr. Randall's usefulness as a legislator is at an end. The country will hear with sorrow of his enforced retirement. Whatever may be said of Mr. Randall's disagreeable traits, he is faithful to his party on economic questions, his great ability, his unquestioned integrity and his devotion to principle must be acknowledged. No man in congress has rendered the Democratic party more faithful service. His heroic battles in the reconstruction period can never be forgotten. He has earned for himself the respect and admiration of all high minded men, and in his affliction he will have universal sympathy.—New York World.

PLEA FOR FREE WOOL.

By the National Association of Wool Manufacturers.

In 1885, only three years ago, the National Association of Wool Manufacturers addressed a statement to the secretary of the treasury as "unanimously approved" by that body, arguing in favor of free wool and showing the necessity that existed therefor. Among other arguments advanced for free wool were these:

"The American woolen manufacturer is engaged in a perpetual struggle with the manufacturers of Europe for the possession of the markets of this country. In this strife the European manufacturer possesses the advantage, which would be overwhelming if not counteracted by special legislation, of having the raw material of his manufacture free from duty—no duties on wool existing in Great Britain, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, and slight duties, if any, in other manufacturing nations. Our European competitors are exempt from the direct enhancement, by a duty, of the cost of wool, thus having less capital to supply their trade and no cost of interest on the duty upon the wool, which, at the low rate of duty now in force, is a very large item. While the "left" lasts the pupils of the eyes are dilated, and a sort of drowsy indifference to all outside objects seems to pervade the whole system. Not in connection with the use of tobacco in Persia is the manner in which its solace is taken so different from the way it is used by all passers by. Cigars are not sold there, but the cowdens, and they have a large supply of pipes and tobacco with him, are plentiful. For the most part only one or two puffs are taken at a time and smoke a well filled qualyan. This takes him about thirty minutes to do.—The Cosmopolitan.

A STUNNING EXAMPLE.

How the War Tariff "Protects" the Coal Miner.

If we can find any state in the Union whose every product is and always has been the beneficiary of protection, then, in that state, if the protection theory be sound, wages should be ample and the condition of the workingman prosperous. And, happily, we find just such a state in Pennsylvania.

For three quarters of a century Pennsylvania has been the home and cradle and creature of protection. It has varied in other things. It has been Whig and it has been Democratic; it has been Republican and it has been Democratic; it has been pro-railroad and anti-railroad; it has been pro-slavery and anti-slavery; it has changed its religion and its habits; but one thing it has never changed, and that is its belief that the industries of Pennsylvania must be protected. Fifty years ago the newspapers of Philadelphia declared that the Commies would all shut down if the advocates of a revenue tariff triumphed; twenty years ago, Pennsylvania was buried in ofsigy their favorite son, Dallas, for voting for the tariff of 1846; twenty eight years ago, Pennsylvania made the assertion of a protection plank in the Chicago platform the price of her vote for President, and ever since then Pennsylvania has insisted on her representatives, whether Democratic or Republican, insisting every attempt to reduce customs duties and demanding at all times and under all circumstances that the tariff be erased. Here, then, is an example of the complete working of protection, here is a state where the protectionist policy has had full and free scope for nearly four generations of men, and where it must have produced its fruits if it is true that protects wages it ought to have protected them there.

The two great industries of Pennsylvania are coal mining and iron making. In the latter an attempt to reduce wages has just caused a general strike. In some cases the mills, having heavy contracts on hand, have been forced to yield, but most of them hold out, and the men are offered the choice of partial starvation at low wages or absolute starvation at no wages at all. Their condition is thus described by an eye witness, who has just traveled through the state:

"There is no human existence more purely animal than that which moves on from the cradle to the grave in the coal villages of Pennsylvania. From day's end to day's end, year in and year out, the miners' families toil along in that hard, toilsome, brutalizing grimy path to the grave. Squalor and impudence, the wretched homes in keeping with their more wretched lives."

Most of the miners are paid by the place and earn from eighty-five cents to $1.40 per day. But hardly any of them are so well paid that they can afford to let their children remain at school after 12 or 14. At that age they must go to work for a share towards earning the family's bread. The iron workers get better pay, but owing to the fluctuations in the trade, they are always on the ragged edge of a precipice. Not a few of them have saved from eighty-five cents to $1.40 per day. Little of Importance Transacted by Senate or House.

MR. PALMER introduced a bill for the purchase of the Portage Lake and River Improvement Company's canal, etc., in the Senate the 9th. Referred to the Committee on Commerce. Mr. Mitchell offered a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Interior for information relative to the Lake Michigan Mill land case. Adopted. The bills to the Northern Pacific lands, Oregon and Washington Territories, for the subsidization of the fisheries treaty in open executive session, and the Nicaragua canal bill were passed upon. Considerable time was taken in debate and sharp passages between Morgan on the one side and Hoar and Sherman on the other. The discussion came to a close and the Senate adjourned. The Senate has confirmed the following nominations: Brigadier-General Carlin, from the Commissioner of Agriculture, transmitted the report of the expenditures and results obtained by the Ladies' Silk Culture Association of California, and the arrangements for the development of the culture of the silk. The report shows that the orchard of mulberry trees, about 4,000 trees from one to three years old, and as many cuttings. The work of the society is in its infancy, but has increasingly been limited in expenditure. Mr. Dibble, of South Carolina, submitted the report of the minority of the joint committee of a public building in Sioux City, Iowa, and it was agreed to. It fixes the limit of cost at $125,000. The House then adjourned.

OLD ONES GOOD ENOUGH.

The Michigan Republicans Renominate Most of Their State Officers.

The Republicans of Michigan met in State Convention at Detroit, and placed in the field the following ticket: For Governor, Cyrus G. Luce; Lieutenant-Governor, James S. McDonald; Secretary of State, Gilbert R. Ganson; Treasurer, George L. Maltz; Auditor-General, H. H. Alpin; Land Commissioner, Roscoe D. Dix; Attorney-General, Stephen V. R. Trowbridge; Superintendent of Public Instructions, Joseph Estabrook; member State Board of Education, Jerry F. Power; Electors at Large, Russell A. Alger and Isaac Cappon. The convention indorsed the Chicago platform, and progressive temperance legislation, favoring local option.

A SOUTHERN BLAZE.

Over One Million of Property Destroyed at Chattanooga, Tenn.

A fearful fire occurred at Chattanooga, Tenn., which destroyed several blocks in the business center of that city, causing a loss of $1,500,000. Five men were killed by the falling of a wall, and several firemen were overcome. The following parties were burned out: M. Black Drug Company, the Beall Printing Company, Gibson & Lee, wholesale queensware; Rosson, Crutchfield & Co., wholesale dry goods; Bankers' Clothing Store; M. Rosenbaum & Co.; A. T. Schopik, wholesale liquor dealer; N. Deamtess & Bro., wholesale and retail grocers; A. T. Schipik, baker and confectioner; Howard Shelton, wholesale and retail harness.

Gone Up in Smoke.

Fires were started in the furnaces of the old crucible works of the Cleveland Steel Company, at Cleveland, Ohio, recently. Loss to the Prospect Rolling Mill Company, but before operations had been begun sparks ignited the frame walls of the mill, and it was totally destroyed at a loss of $30,000; insurance, $10,000.

The Pioneer Knight's Return.

Hon. James S. Bliss and family have returned in safety from their foreign visit, looking and feeling better than when going abroad. They were received with honors by their admirers, when landing at New York. It is expected that Mr. Blaine will take an active part in the approaching campaign.

Nominated for Congress.

Judge C. A. O. McClellan, of Auburn, Ind., has been nominated for Congress by the Twelfth District Democrats.

Here and There.

John Ellsworth was arrested at Astoria, Oregon, and turned over to the Sheriff of Marion County, Illinois, on a requisition. He is charged with having fraudulently conveyed a piece of land to an old German for $1,500, the deed proving worthless.

George Grubb and Abraham Snyder were arrested at South Amboy, N. J., charged with fearfully beating and maiming an aged woman, Rosella Wycock.

A commission in New York is taking testimony in the suit of Charles C. Franklyn against the London Times. The paper wrongly charged him with misappropriating $3,000,000 intrusted to him.

Killed Three Men and Escaped.

Advices from the Cheyenne Nation, Indian Territory, say that Charles Perkins, a noted horse-thief and murderer, shot and killed two Deputy United States Marshals and one citizen at Marshall's Ferry, on the Red River, while resisting arrest. Perkins escaped. There are nine indictments against him for murder. He says he will never be taken alive.

Injunction Dissolved.

Judge Vanscoy, of the Common Pleas Court at Hamilton, Ohio, has dissolved the temporary injunction to restrain the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railway Company from selling the stock of its Cincinnati, Richmond & Chicago branch. It is understood that the sale will be made to the Pennsylvania Road.

BUSINESS SITUATION IMPROVING.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of the Situation in Trade.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s business review for the past week says:

Business is a little better, and in aggregate volume is now fully equal to that of last year at this date. The iron and woolen trades have improved, and the cotton manufacture is more limited and farm products move in greater volume. Trade has improved in Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Cleveland, Detroit, St. Paul, Nashville, and Galveston, and is excellent in Omaha. In Philadelphia and Pittsburg the lumber trade is seriously mentioned as excellent, and in Pittsburg and Nashville the demand for iron has been better prices in iron have been settled, with improvement also in charcoal iron in Philadelphia. Cotton dealings are smaller than usual, and dry goods are dull, especially selling. The speculative market for cotton has ruled higher. Wheat has risen 4 cents for the week with sales of 16,000,000 bushels in New York, and corn 1 cent with sales of 15,000,000 bushels, and oats 2 cents. Hogs have risen 10 cents, lard 15 cents and pork 25 cents, while beef is 25 cents lower, dressed beef 50 cents, and cattle 5 cents per 100 pounds, with sales of 325,000 head. Reports as to collections do not improve and complaints are common. The New York exports of specie for the week are $1,000,000; imports over exports, about $11,000, and for July, following $61,000,000 for the six months. The Treasury has taken in during the last week $2,000,000 more than it has paid out, and the total circulation of all kinds is about $6,000,000 less than it was a month ago. The settlement of the Clearing House for the week just ended show that there have been exchanges stocks about 62 cents per share, but West-bound freight rates do not yet improve in spite of frequent hopeful reports. Business failures throughout the country for the month of July have numbered 235, as compared with 221 the previous week.

HURLED DOWN AN EMBANKMENT.

Awful Railroad Accident Near Morgantown, Ind.—Many Hurt, Ten Fatally.

An awful railroad accident occurred near Morgantown, Ind., on the Fairland & Frankfort railroad. The train was the usual accommodation, several freight and one baggage and passenger car, thirty-five passengers being in the latter. While crossing a trestle it gave way and the passenger coach was hurled down a fifty-four foot embankment. The injured were: Mrs. Lyon, daughter and son, of Kentucky; Mr. Voyles, Martinsville; Mrs. T. Hancock, Morgantown; Tom Kennedy, mail agent, Martinsville; N. S. Hicks, Nicholas; Mr. Jacob Eckert, Indianapolis; Tom Summerville, conductor, Martinsville; Rev. Stark, Georgetown; Mrs. William Morgan and three children, Indianapolis; William Griffith, Needmore; Miss Prewitt, Martinsville; Harry Matthews and daughter, Indianapolis; Mabel Rund, Brown County; unknown lady and daughter, of Indianapolis. Of the above number at least ten cannot live.

A Nonquitt, Mass., special of the 7th says: The funeral party bearing the remains of General Sheridan will leave here Wednesday evening for Washington, where the services will be held at St. Matthew's Church Saturday, conducted by Cardinal Gibbons, followed by interment with full military honors in Arlington Cemetery. The following gentlemen will act as pall bearers: Gen. W. T. Sherman, Marshall Field, of Chicago; Gen. Hawley, of the United States Senate; Speaker Carlisle, Vice-President Thomson, of the Pennsylvania Railroad; Gen. Wesley Merritt, United States army; the senior member of the Grand Army of the Republic in the District of Columbia, Secretary Whitney, Gen. McFerley, Gen. Joseph Fullerton, of St. Louis; Secretary Endicott, and George W. Childs.

POLITICAL ACTIVITY.

Various Parties Throughout the Country Name Candidates for Congress.

The Republican Convention of the Sixth Congressional District of Iowa unanimously nominated Mayor John P. Lacey, of Ottumwa, on the first ballot. Lacey is a leading lawyer of Iowa.

The Democratic Convention of the Second Congressional District of Nebraska nominated G. W. Hastings of Saline.

The Republicans of the Second Congressional District of Iowa have put in nomination for Congress Col. Park W. McManus, of Scott County.

The Democratic Convention at Brinkley, Ark., renominated C. R. Breckinridge by acclamation for Representative from the Second District.

Dr. W. W. Root, of Mason, Mich., has been nominated for Congress by Sixth District Prohibitionists in convention at Lansing.

JOHN H. HARMON.

The Well-Known Michigan Politician Dies of Paralysis.

John H. Harmon died suddenly of paralysis at Detroit, Mich., aged 60 years.

Few men were better known in politics than Mr. Harmon. He was during the days of Democratic ascendancy, previous to the war, a trusted friend and counselor of Presidents Van Buren, Polk, Pierce, and Buchanan, and held in the Cabinet of the last three Presidents, and all the older line of Democratic statesmen. He took up his residence in Detroit in 1837, seeking employment in the Free Press and was for a long time State printer. He was twice elected Mayor of Detroit, and was appointed Collector of Customs by President Pierce. Mr. Harmon was a lobbyist for the Michigan Central, and retired from journalism. He was well known as a lobbyist.

GEORGIA DEMOCRATS.

They Nominate a State Ticket and Indorse the St. Louis Platform.

The Democrats of Georgia, in convention at Atlanta, nominated the following for State offices: For Governor, John B. Gordon; Secretary of State, N. C. Barnet; Treasurer, R. U. Hardeman; Comptroller, W. A. Wright; and Attorney General, Clifford Anderson. Resolutions were adopted indorsing the Democratic State administration and the Democratic national platform, laying special stress on the tariff-reform plank and the President's message.

A TENNESSEE TOWN BURNED.

The Village of Newborn Nearly Wiped Out.

Advices from Newborn, Dyer County, Tenn., say that fire had broken out in the entire eastern part of that town. But for the blowing up of one building by the citizens to prevent explosions, the whole town would have been wiped out. The loss is $25,000, and not a cent of insurance. The fire was incendiary.

CLAIMING COMMISSIONS.

Suit Against the St. Louis, Alton and Springfield for $120,000.

A suit for $120,000 against the St. Louis, Alton and Springfield Railroad of Illinois has been begun in the Supreme Court of New York. The claim is for commissions earned in the sale of $1,200,000 first mortgage bonds in London. Robert G. Ingersoll has been retained by the plaintiffs as senior counsel. It is stated that the suit was made on representations authorized by the company's officials, which are now disclaimed.

ENGLISH CROPS DAMAGED.

Heavy Rainfalls Injure Crops, and Prices Go Up.

The London Mark Lane Express, in its review of the British grain trade during the past week, says: "August opened with disaster to the agricultural interests of the whole country. The rainfalls have been unprecedented in many districts, and the damage done to the wheat crops is irreparable. The values of English wheat have risen 1 shilling per central in the London market and 2 pence in the Liverpool market. Country flour is quoted at 40 shillings per sack. Foreign wheat has stiffened at Liverpool, and values are 1 penny per central higher. Corn is steady. Oats and barley are in fair demand at unchanged prices."

GEN. HOYEY NOMINATED.

The Indiana Republicans Place Him at the Head of Their Ticket.

The Republicans of Indiana, in convention at Indianapolis, nominated the following ticket: For Governor, Alvin P. Hoyey; Lieutenant-Governor, Ira J. Chase; Secretary of State, Charles F. Griffin; Auditor, Bruce Carr; Treasurer, Julius A. Lemcke; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Harvey M. LaFollette; Attorney-General, Lewis Ross; Judge of Supreme Court, John Griffiths. The convention indorsed the Chicago platform.

Two Workmen Killed.

Six workmen building a bridge on the Pennsylvania Road over the Juniata River, near Mifflin, Pa., were engaged upon a light trestle, when a heavy car of stone in running a flying switch became uncontrollable, left the rails, and landed on the trestle, crushing it and the men to the river fifty feet below. Two will die from their injuries, and the other four are badly hurt, three of them crippled for life.

Electric Light Companies.

—The semi-annual meeting of the Association of Electric Illuminating Companies, comprising all the companies in the United States and Canada doing business under license from the parent company, was held at Nantasket Beach, Mass., and elected John J. Boggs, of New York, President.

New Telegraph Company.

—The Gray National Telautograph Company has been chartered at Richmond, Va., with a capital stock not to exceed $15,000,000. Thomas M. Logan is President. The company will engage in the general telegraph and telephone business under the system invented by Professor Elisha Gray.

Attempted to Shoot a Preacher.

A crank named Hensel created a sensation in the German Methodist Church of Dayton, Ohio, by attempting to shoot Ezekiel Light, the preacher. He was captured before any harm had been done.

An Ohio Storm.

A severe wind and rain storm raged for five minutes at Springfield, Ohio, doing damage amounting to thousands of dollars, including the partial wrecking of the Arcade Hotel.

A Wine Merchant Assigns.

James Guest, a wholesale wine merchant of Montreal, Canada, has made an assignment. The liabilities are $200,000, assets not large losses by failures caused the assignment.

Died from Suffocation.

A family of four—Gustav Frey, aged 40, his wife, 36, mother-in-law and 12-year-old daughter—living on the top floor of a fourtory tenement building in New York City, died from suffocation and burns in a fire.

Stabbed in the Neck.

During a dance at Arquill's grove, Dubuque County, Iowa, Ed Jennings stabbed Dick Jones in the neck, inflicting a mortal wound. Both are young farmers.

Striking Brakemen.

The brakemen on the Toledo & Iron Ronton Road, who have been getting $55 per month, are on strike for $65.

Minor Mention.

J. L. Lagano, who claims to have assisted in the capture of Sitting Bull, is trying to get a reward from the government.

DEATH OF SHERIDAN.

The Valiant Hero Passes Away Painlessly and Unexpectedly at Nonquitt.

The Great Soldier's Last Hours—Biographical Sketch of His Life and Deeds.

[Nonquitt (Mass.) special.]

Gen. Phil H. Sheridan is dead. The end came suddenly and unexpectedly at his cottage at Nonquitt, Mass., Sunday night, August 5th, at 10:30 o'clock, from heart trouble. Previous to the sudden appearance of heart failure, at about 9:30 p. m., there had been no premonitions of any unfavorable change in his condition during the day. The weather had been warmer than usual and the General was at times a little restless, but seemed generally bright and cheerful. His voice was strong, he took a full supply of nourishment, slept occasionally as usual, and the doctors and his family were in hopeful spirits. At 7 o'clock Mrs. Sheridan and the doctors went to the hotel for supper, and soon after their return the usual preparations for the night were made.

At 9:20 symptoms of heart failure suddenly appeared, and Drs. O'Reilly and Matthews, who were with him at the time, immediately applied the remedies which proved successful in all similar previous attacks, but this time they were without effect, and despite all that could be done the General gradually sank into a condition of complete unconsciousness, and at 10:30 breathed his last. Mrs. Sheridan, the Sisters Mabun and Justina—the faithful lady attendants—were at his bedside throughout his dying hours.

The following official bulletin was issued shortly after his death:

Gen. Sheridan died at 10:30 p. m. The immediate cause of death was heart failure. The remote cause was disease of the coronary artery valves, the existence of which was known to his physicians, and which was discovered in November of last year. The complications which occurred were nervous exhaustion, congestion of the lungs and pulmonary edema. The last day of his life was somewhat restless, but he was able to be out of his room. The arrival of his family at 8:30 seemed to relieve the symptoms of heart failure suddenly. The family, physicians and attendants were all with him when he unexpectedly expired, but proved ineffectual, and he died without a struggle.

AT THE DEATHBED.

Review of the General's Illness and the Events of the Last Hours.

General Sheridan left his home on Monday, May 21, being attracted by what is known as Commodore Vanderbilt's yacht, and returned during that day, but rallied at night. He suffered from a severe attack of heart failure, which lasted about two hours. The following Saturday his death was momentarily expected, but he rallied from the attack and lived until Monday and day. He received the last sacrament of the church from Father Doyle, who visited him at intervals during the trying moments. He was conscious and able to talk with his family and attendants. He was able to sit, with the utmost coolness, completed all arrangements for the last journey.

The subsequent days were filled with care and anxiety by the family and by the physicians, who clung to their patient with strong tenacity. They watched every symptom and every change, and the best medical skill was made available. For days they continued their vigil, and the family suffering from the long strain, became determined to grasp the old hero from the grasp of the destroyer. The fight was a long and a sturdy one, and science can make when put to such a test remain silent. He was in great pain, suffering with great heroism and made a gallant fight against the inevitable. He was cheerful, and with his wife in his arms, with determination preserved and prolonged his life, and gave to his friends and to the Congress, time to pass the bill to give him four stars as General. The effort was made, and he lived to hear of his name to a letter of thanks to the President.

Since 30 Gen. Sheridan was never in his residence in Washington in a bed Cross and Crown, Gen. Sheridan's room was so arranged that he could see the same day, and proceeded by the same entrance as Gen. Grant, the decorations of Republican Headquarters in New York (after the evening of August 8) were arranged in the same way as the room of Nonquitt the afternoon of July 8. The day was spent in quiet, the family being with him. Late in the afternoon he was seized with the stricken soldier and his family occupied a few minutes in conversation about the sea, under the grateful air of which he expected to be restored to health. The conversation was considered by the army physicians who was present to be the last he ever spoke. The family and attendants noticed the exhilaration as in a precarious condition, and the family were called to his bedside the night before.

The day was spent in quiet, the family being with him. Late in the afternoon he was seized with the stricken soldier and his family occupied a few minutes in conversation about the sea, under the grateful air of which he expected to be restored to health. The conversation was considered by the army physicians who was present to be the last he ever spoke. The family and attendants noticed the exhilaration as in a precarious condition, and the family were called to his bedside the night before.

Late at first eighteen days after his arrival the change of climate and surroundings wrought a favorable impression upon his health, and he gained in vigor and in the general tone of the world as the normal and healthy stages of progress. The physicians who had been in charge of the Robert O'Reilly, who had been in charge of the Sheridan family, and who had been with the family since the first attack, left the family a few days. He returned to Washington, leaving only Drs. Matthews and Yarrow in charge.

A few days ago it became evident that the General was really recuperating instead of progressing. The reaction which had been occasioned by the long journey, the change of climate, and symptoms of rapid decline were noticed. Dr O'Reilly was hastily summoned, and he was arrived where he found the case was hopeless. He at once sent word to Dr. Pepper, of Philadelphia, and Dr. Agnew, of Philadelphia, who had been called into the case when the General was in Washington and disabuted the Second impression. It was, however, given out to the public that Dr. Pepper's visit was not professional, but simply a friendly one. The physicians had been assisted by Drs. Matthews and followed the case closely that the General had been attacked with a sudden relapse, and that heroic methods were necessary to prolong his life. M. V. Sheridan, brother of the General, was relieved about the condition of the patient, and was hopeful of his recovery. He admitted, it is said, that the General was in a bad way. This was really the first intimation which had come from the sick room a cottage of the serious condition of the General.

The family received a telegram Sunday night that Sheridan was attacked with three visited its of consulting which so alarmed his physicians in Washington, and to which it was supposed would die. The physicians recorded to the use of oxygen to sustain life and frequent applications were given him. They entered him for a long stay, and he was able to be out of his room, which unusually followed their application when he was in Washington. Then the electric battery was called into requisition, and from his frequent use momentary good results were obtained. The electric battery was used the same day and night. The distressing suffocating cough, which resembled a violent, unsuccessful retching after vomiting rather than an attempt to raise phlegm or clear the lungs, continued all night. The family were in constant fear of the coming of such a paroxysm. The frequency with which they occurred was a sure indication of the physicians that they might expect the worst. The family were informed of the condition of the patient. The General's devoted wife was constantly by his side, and his sons, who had come under the direction of the physicians. The trained nurses from the Baltimore Convent, and Colonel Mike Sheridan's aide was in constant attendance. The sunshine of Nonquitt was a great comfort to previous attacks proved up hope in the family, though it was evident to the physicians that the overcirculatory and pulmonary troubles which had sustained the patient throughout his long stage at Washington were of no further benefit to him, and he was very weak exhausted, and the life spark almost flickering. The following official bulletin was issued shortly after his death:

Gen. Sheridan died at 10:30 p. m. The immediate cause of death was heart failure. The remote cause of death was disease of the coronary valves, the existence of which was known to his physicians, and which was discovered in November of last year. The complications which occurred were nervous exhaustion, congestion of the lungs and pulmonary edema. The last day of his life was somewhat restless, but he was able to be out of his room. The arrival of his family at 8:30 seemed to relieve the symptoms of heart failure suddenly. The family, physicians and attendants were all with him when he unexpectedly expired, but proved ineffectual, and he died without a struggle.

AT THE DEATHBED.

Review of the General's Illness and the Events of the Last Hours.

General Sheridan left his home on Monday, May 21, being attracted by what is known as Commodore Vanderbilt's yacht, and returned during that day, but rallied at night. He suffered from a severe attack of heart failure, which lasted about two hours. The following Saturday his death was momentarily expected, but he rallied from the attack and lived until Monday and day. He received the last sacrament of the church from Father Doyle, who visited him at intervals during the trying moments. He was conscious and able to talk with his family and attendants. He was able to sit, with the utmost coolness, completed all arrangements for the last journey.

The subsequent days were filled with care and anxiety by the family and by the physicians, who clung to their patient with strong tenacity. They watched every symptom and every change, and the best medical skill was made available. For days they continued their vigil, and the family suffering from the Ninth District Democratic Congressional Convention.

The democrats of the ninth congressional district of Michigan will meet in convention at the opera house, Manistee, on Tuesday, August 21st, 1888, at 3.30 P. M., for the purpose of putting in nomination a candidate for congress for the ninth district of Michigan, electing a district committee, and transacting any other business that may properly come before the convention.

The several counties are entitled to representation as follows, on the basis of one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes:

Antrim, 3; Charlevoix, 4; Kalkaska, 2; Lake, 3; Manistee, 6; Mason, 5; Mecosta, 8; Missaukee, 2; Muskegon, 15; Newaygo, 8; Oceana, 6; Osceola, 4; Wexford, 4.

A full delegation from every county is earnestly desired, and all opposed to the republican party are cordially invited to participate in the deliberations of the convention.

By order Dem. Cong. Committee.

WM. F. NISBETT, Chairman.

Democratic County Convention.

A democratic county convention will be held at the VILLAGE HALL, Charlevoix, on

at 11.00 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of nominating delegates to the representative and senatorial conventions, for the nomination of candidates for county officers, for the reorganization of the county committee, and for the transaction of such other business as may come before the convention. Each township is entitled to delegates to said convention as follows:

Bay 2; Bear Lake 1; Boyne Valley 2; Chandler 1, Charlevoix 6, Evangeline 3, Eveline 5, Hayes 3; Hudson 1; Marion 2, Melrose 1, Norwood, 2; Resort 1; South Arm 6; Springvale 1; Wilson 2.

A. D. CRUICKSHANK,
Chairman.

J. MILO EATON,
Secretary.

National Party County Convention.

The county convention of the national party of Charlevoix county, will be held at the opera hall in the village of Charlevoix, on the 28th day of August, 1888, at 11 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of placing in nomination a county ticket and transacting such other business as may come before the convention. The several townships are entitled to representation as follows:

Bear Lake, 2; Boyne Valley, 3; Chandler, 2; Charlevoix, 5; Evangeline (including Bay), 5; Eveline, 6, Hayes, 3, Hudson, 2, Marion 2; Melrose, 2; Norwood, 2; Resort, 2; South Arm, 2; Springvale 1; Wilson, 3.

Boyne City, Aug. 14, 1888.

By order of Committee.

E. H. SHEPARD, Sec.

T. M. NESBIT, O. C. Wright and H. G. Wright, three prominent republicans of Ionia, have deserted that party and openly declared themselves in favor of tariff reform.

W. R. BURT has a grand record in all his dealings with his employes. It is no wonder that the genuine workingmen of the Saginaws are solid for him.—Port Huron Herald.

HARRISON publicly made the assertion not long since that $1.00 a day was enough pay for a workingman. Fifty cents a day is enough pay for the workingman who casts his ballot for him in November.—Menominee Democrat.

WHEN we reflect that the Mills bill leaves a duty of forty-one per cent on imports, it shows that we are a long way from free trade yet and that nobody need get scared at the monopolistic British free trade howl that has been raised by the millionaires and their benchmen of the press.—Genesee Spectator.

IT will be noticed that the bulk of the "deserters to the republican ship" heralded with a flourish of trumpets by the radical press, are either screen heads, office seekers, or personally interested in the continuance of a protective tariff. Those swamping to the democratic banner are the tariff cursed masses, and their name is Legion.—Big Rapids Herald.

THE Cleveland club completed its organization Saturday evening and appointed G. W. Crouter, Chas. E. Swallow, Harry Nichols, Pat O'Neill and Dr. Frank Scott as additional members of the executive committee. The regular meetings are to be held on Saturday evening of each week. It was decided to have a discussion of some subject under the tariff question at each regular meeting, the speaker to be provided by the executive committee. For the present the speakers will be selected from the membership of the club. Later in the canvass there will be speakers from abroad. On Monday evening the executive committee held a meeting and appointed sub-committees for the various departments of work requiring immediate attention. The democracy of Charlevoix seems to be organizing to win this year. At least it has that appearance now.

THE Gogebic Iron Spirit booms W. S. Johnson of Sutton's Bay for congress from the eleventh district. We can assure our friends of the eleventh that if Mr. Johnson consents to run and is given the nomination, he will make a lively canvas. In 1886, Johnson reduced the republican majority in this senatorial district nearly six hundred.

THE Blaine reception in New York has stirred up the biggest rumpus among the republican managers that was ever known. The Blaine men are determined to run the campaign and distribute the rewards while the Harrison managers are anxious in regard to the attentions given to Blaine and fear to grant all the Blaine men ask, because of having nothing left for themselves. And so the fight grows fiercer from day to day.

THE democratic congressional convention at Manistee next Tuesday may not have a full representation from these northern counties, because of the long distance necessary to travel to reach there, but what we lack in numbers may be made up in vigor and a determination to put in nomination a good man. There has been mentioned for this office Mr. H. B. Hudson of Mancelona, and from all we can learn of his history and methods, if nominated he will make an active personal canvass of the district, and if elected will serve his constituents faithfully and well. It seems an almost hopeless undertaking to overcome the majority given for Mr. Cutchson two years ago, and yet if anyone can do so Mr. Hudson is the man. He is personally popular at home and among the soldier voters wherever known, (and that is not confined to the district by any means), is right on the money question, and is a ready and pleasing speaker. We should like to see him nominated.

IN 1880 Garfield's plurality of the total popular vote was 3,093; in 1884, Cleveland's plurality was 71,422, a democratic gain of 74,455, in the face of the republicans having every advantage and also in spite of the cry that the country would surely go to ruin. Instead of the country going to ruin, all must admit that Grover Cleveland has made a careful conscientious president and the country is certainly no nearer to ruin than when the republicans had full and absolute control. When these things are considered and the further fact that republicans everywhere are becoming more and more disgusted with their own party measures and management and are leaving it to join other parties there is no reason to doubt that Grover Cleveland will secure the same or greater ratio of increase of the popular vote and will also have a safe majority of the electoral vote. The republicans are organizing all over the state with brass bands and glee clubs to keep up appearances, and make much ado over an occasional deserter from democracy but democracy everywhere is alert and encouraged. There are daily accessions from the ranks of the republican party,—not of the hoodlum element, but of the bone and sinew of the country,—men who are thinking for themselves, and studying out the problem of the tariff and unnecessary taxation. They are determined that taxes shall be reduced to the actual needs of the government, and they can see in the policy outlined by President Cleveland, and sustained by the national democratic platform a solution of that question. There is abundant reason to believe that Cleveland will be re-elected by a greatly increased majority.

Republican Discord.

The following communication is furnished by a gentleman who has always been recognized as one of the faithful in the republican ranks. But he is not pleased with the republican ticket and the method of its nomination. The tenor of the letter would indicate that if the democrats nominate a clean ticket of honorable, capable men, he will give them his support, and will vote and work against his old party. And there are others like him.

The drift of the politics of this county is fast reaching a point, which must prove disastrous to our best interests, and is antagonistic to the spirit of free institutions.

The wise men in the east seem to carry the county in their grip sacks, that is to say, they have, through means known only to those who can condescend to put their own interest above that of their town, county, or state, acquired a lead which gets at defiance the voice of the honest voters, who alone have the power, if used judiciously, to say who shall be their servants to represent their interests in the affairs of the county. The Sentinel thinks it could have made a better choice than was made by the late republican convention. Why don't it? But says also that the "nominations are all right," because they represent a clear majority of the republican vote of the county. No such thing, the republicans of the county will not sustain such a nomination. The republican majority in this county wants to have a clean nomination of men, for the various offices, who will be a credit to our county, which needs so much, a better record than she has got in neighboring counties who have watched our progress and know our history. Votes, see to it that we vote the demagogue and the autocrat out.

Let it not be said that we have a dictator, upon us rests the responsibility of good government in the county. Let us show to the world that we can discriminate between those who want to serve their own interests, and those who would serve the best interests of the county. Let us, then, apart from all sectional feeling and personal considerations, cast our vote for those whom we can conscientiously trust with the interests of the county.

This is a matter which is of interest to all parties; let it then, by our vote, say, thus far, and no farther,—let us not forget that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

Sunday Excursions.

I am a stranger in these parts, but I may say how it strikes a stranger. Last Sunday I was in one of the villages that are the sea ports of the lake country. Soon after the morning service the boat arrived with an excursion party accompanied by a brass band. This was enough to call the juvenile part of the population to say nothing of their elders. The band playing on the street was a natural if not a necessary part of the excursion. So the Sunday quiet was disturbed in a town otherwise restful. I am told that the same band on the streets of Charlevoix, seriously disturbed the worship of more than one congregation.

And this is common experience during the summer time. The Sunday excursion belongs to the day. It is widely advertised and largely patronized. To say nothing of the insult to Him who has commanded to keep holy His day, it is a wrong to those who believe and enjoy a quiet Lord's Day. The excursion concerns more than the excursionists, and those who furnish the boat or car, and the accompanying entertainments. What I have detailed is the best side of the matter. Often drunkenness and rioting are accompaniments. The law may not reach these breaches of good order, but the sentiment of the community should. And it should, to say the least, discontinue the public advertisement and in every reasonable way to ke its protest.

Lecturing on Current News.

In nothing is more lax than the system of education since the days of our grandmothers more especially and only than in one of the departments of a fashionable female part of the population, to say nothing of their elders. The band playing on the street was a natural if not a necessary part of the excursion. So the Sunday quiet was disturbed in a town otherwise restful. I am told that the same band on the streets of Charlevoix, seriously disturbed the worship of more than one congregation.

Every one in the community is cordially invited to be upon the grounds. Regular Sunday services at Green's hall. Prayer meeting Thursday evening.

The flagstaff at Traverse City, owned by the signal service department, was sold at auction yesterday. There was a good deal of bidding but it was bought by the Cleveland & Thurman club, and will hereafter fly democratic colors. The club has a fine flag and streamer and the location of the staff is a good one, being on front street near the center of the town.—Eagle.

No well balanced citizen or true business man will ever fly off the wheel if he happens to see an item that does not just suit his fancy in the village newspaper. Remember that an editor has hundreds of items to get each week to fill the columns of his paper and to think that he can please every reader is simply nonsense and the thought should not be tolerated for an instant in the mind of any sensible man.—Ex.

The Grand Rapids Democrat of the 8th has the following Charlevoix items: Joseph Beauvais, the boat builder, has just turned out a $125 row boat for J. H. Harmon of Chicago..... Ed West of Chicago has a new sail boat which he has been trying for the past week. It is some of Joseph Beauvais' work. Mr. West makes himself very agreeable on the resort. He is exceedingly hospitable with his sail boat..... George Stockbridge has not been exercising his new yatch very much. It is a very elegant little vessel, said to have cost in the neighborhood of $4,000. It is in charge of Capt. James Beauvais, late of the United States life saving station at Grand Haven.

The following from the Bellaire Advertiser echoes our sentiments exactly: We do not believe in the business policy of giving an advertiser a dollars worth of laudatory local notice every time he indulges in a few cents or for that matter a few dollars' worth of advertising, nor do we think it fair to the patron who keeps a large advertisement standing that he should receive less local puffs than the small advertiser who keeps constantly changing. We shall at all times, to the best of our ability, give the news, without puffing our friends or patrons nor slurring or ignoring our enemies but those who see fit to withold their favors. Paid local notices appear amongst the reading matter but always prefaced by the warning ☞ which puts the reader on guard and enables them to skip it if desired. Free puffs are barred.

People who hang to northern Michigan will in a few years thank their lucky stars for the circumstances which compelled them to remain. There can be no doubt about it. When we first came here, Traverse City, Charlevoix and Elk Rapids were little towns and at that time Petoskey was almost unknown. What a glorious growth and development since that time. Mancelona had but two buildings; Kalkaska had but six, and since then they have all kept pace with, we might say, rapid development of the country. The development of northern Michigan is not a bubble—it is more solid, substantial and healthy. If you live to see it twenty-five years from now you will find the most beautiful portion of all Michigan. When we were first at Mancelona it had two families; now it has a population of about 2,000; Traverse City, 1,000; now 3,500. Kalkaska had two families; now 1,500. Petoskey a few, now upwards of 5,000. In the face of all this improvement some people cannot go backward. We know men in this town who didn't have a dollar when they struck it and who are now in comfortable circumstances. These men do not and never did, speak ill of their poor luck. —Elk Rapids Progress.

Frank and Miss Mattie O'Neil returned Sunday from an extended visit at Frankfort.

John Goss returned Saturday from a week in the berry patch, and brought with him a barrel of huckleberries.

Harrison Berdan of Charlevoix, is in Cheboygan today visiting his relative, Dr. D. W. Berdan and family.—Cheboygan Tribune.

Mr. and Mrs. McGinnis and Mrs. Bedell, of Denver, Col., are visiting their old friends, Mr. and Mrs. Capt. H. G. Edwards and family.

Miss Edna Kelly and Miss Clementine Brien returned Tuesday from a two weeks visit with Miss Maggie Enos at Charlevoix.—Cadillac News and Express.

Burgess.

BURGESS, Aug. 14.—Henry Hamlin has been quite sick the past few days but is considered out of danger.

Mrs. Jack Saunby is again under the doctor's care.

Amos Webster has returned from off the lakes. Arrived home last Sunday.

Mr. Morell Long and Mrs. Ganson of Bay, were in the neighborhood over Sunday. Mrs. G. will remain some time visiting her sister and friends.

Mr. John Brown has been sick the past week but is now able to be around again.

Mrs. Albert Moran is confined to the house with quinzy throuble.

Mr. Alex. Ross and son of Milwaukee, in answer to a telegram, arrived today to attend the funeral of his daughter, but arrived one day too late.

Misses Nora and Vera Cooper were visiting several days last week at their aunts, Mrs. I. S. Webster.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Scott are away on a visit.

Mrs. Scroggie of Charlevoix, is making a visit with her children in Hayes.

Again this community is called upon to mourn the loss of a much respected friend. Mrs. Thomas Sunderland died last Sunday morning at nine o'clock, leaving an infant son not yet a month old. Mary was well known and all loved her. The heart stricken husband and mother have the deepest sympathy of their many friends.

Dearest Mary, thy work is done,
And thy race was bravely fought,
But we know that God is good,
He alone can all our sorrows heal.

CARD OF THANKS.

To the many kind friends and neighbors who so kindly assisted us in the last sickness of our wife and daughter, and minghed their affections and tears with us, we take this way of expressing our gratefulness to you.

CHARLES SUNDERLAND.
MRS. ALEX. ROSS.

Boyne.

BOYNE, August 8.—Nice rain yesterday.

Mrs. Thurston, wife of Rev A. L. Thurston of Sherman, Wexford county, is the guest of Mrs. A. E. Martin the present week.

The Charlevoix county teacher's institute was held in Boyne last week. A large number of teachers were present.

James Mitchell one of Boyne's oldest residents was buried Sunday. Funeral services held in the Methodist church at three o'clock, conducted by Rev. J. Burige. There was a large attendance of citizens.

An ice cream social was held Friday evening Aug. 3d by the ladies of the M. E. church for the benefit of the pastor.

The Methodist church held their 4th quarterly meeting Saturday evening and Sunday morning, the 4th and 5th. Services were conducted by presiding Elder Sherman who delivered a wonderful instructive and beautiful sermon to a crowded house. Several were baptized in the morning and five accessions were made to the church.

Memorial Service.

Philip H. Sheridan memorial service will be held at the Congregational church, Sunday afternoon at four o'clock, by the Grand Army. The old soldiers and Sons of Veterans are requested to be present. The G. A. R. will meet at Maj. E. H. Green's office at 3.45 p. m. The public are cordially invited. Rev. W. H. McCartney will be the orator and remarks are expected from citizens and comrades and especially those who served under that heroic leader.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

A RAILROAD BOOM.

Plenty of Enthusiasm all Along the Line.

The officers of the D. C. & E. R. R. are closing up the right of way, the surveyors are extending the line southward from Kalkaska toward Marion, and villages all along the line are preparing to give the necessary aid to complete the building of the road.

At every town the officers have met a generous response in the matter of aid, and there is not now a doubt that the whole $100,000 will be raised without a dissenting vote.

A gentleman from Petoskey, well informed in business circles, says that although Petoskey has one railroad, the people there are quite unanimous in favor of voting aid to secure another competing road.

Kalkaska has now in operation a woodenware factory, located there by reason of the prospects of D., C. & E. R. R., which takes the raw material from the forest and produces goods to the value of $60,000 a year, and many others in view that are quite sure to come as soon as the road is in operation.

For these and other reasons, Charlevoix should cast a unanimous vote for the bonds next Monday and thus secure some of the factories and other business sure to follow the completion of the road.

The following from the Bellaire Advertiser, and other papers, shows the general sentiment in behalf of the road:

On Thursday evening, Robt. M. Cherrie, J. Milo Eaton, and Fred J. Moore, president, secretary and treasurer respectively of the Detroit, Charlevoix, and Escanaba Railroad, arrived in Bellaire. A representative of this paper secured an interview, and this is what we learn:

The D., C. & E. R. R. Co. have levied three five per cent assessments on the subscribed stock and with the money so raised have surveyed the line from the straits of Mackinac to Kalkaska, have paid incidental expenses and secured the greater part of the right of way. Some few debts have been incurred, but there is enough unpaid assessments to meet them and no more assessments will be levied. Those who have not paid their assessments should do so at once, that the officers be not hampered in their work. The directors have signed articles of agreement with Geo. S. Frink who represents a syndicate of New York capitalists, whereby he agrees to put the survey through from Kalkaska, south to a junction with the Toledo, Ann Arbor and Northern, and also pay the expense of procuring the right of way. He also pays all expenses of procuring right of way over the present surveyed line which is not met by assessments already levied. He also agrees to commence the actual work of construction the very instant that the survey is completed and—now comes our side. We must pay up the present 15 per cent assessment, we must see that the right of way is given from the straits through to Marion, we must execute and deliver to some third party bonds of the villages and townships, through which the road runs, to the amount of $100,000. These bonds can run for 30 years at 5 per cent semi annual interest and the amount raised by each village or township will be spent right where it is raised.

The entire length of the road is 150 miles which makes the bonus demanded only two thirds of a thousand dollars to each mile, which is only a very small fraction of what other roads have received from towns in southern Michigan. Charlevoix will bond for $25,000, an equal amount can be raised north of there and $20,000 can be counted on south of Kalkaska, leaving $30,000 to be raised between Bellaire and Kalkaska. $15,000 for Bellaire in 30 days and bonds drawing 5 per cent semi-annual interest means an annual expense of $750.—but, you say, the bonds will have to be paid—so they will, thirty years from now when Bellaire will be worth enough so that $30,000 would cost the tax roll of a single year would not be as much as the $750 we shall pay next year.

The letting up on assessments should make us all willing and anxious to issue these bonds at an expense which is merely nominal. Better terms were never offered any community and we shall jump at the chance.

Mr. Frink is going ahead with his work and the surveyors are 3½ miles south of Kalkaska, and meeting with no success. Survey will be finished in about thirty days and then Mr. Frink will be waiting upon our municipalities unless we move lively. We can call a special election, give twenty days notice, vote and issue bonds and have them ready on time if we will.

Bonds are not to be delivered until the road is built, but must be executed and placed as an escrow in some third party's hands to wait for it. Frink may know what to depend upon. That he will do his share is manifest from the way he is now expending his money on the additional survey, etc.

Here it is:

Pay up!
Right of way!
$15,000 bond!
And in return
No assessments.

RAILROAD!!!

—Advertiser.

We interviewed President Cheney of the Charlevoix railroad, last week, and find him so calmly confident of the immediate construction of that road that our skepticism was somewhat shaken. Charlevoix votes this month on the question of bonding the village for $25,000 of the $100,000 of local aid required, and we suppose that there is no question about the vote being largely in the affirmative, since the coming of a railroad will greatly advance the value of property, while the taxes for the bonds and interest on the bonds will not amount to much of an offset.—Petoskey Record.

The subject of the projected railroad to Charlevoix is the engrossing topic here now among the business men. The feeling on the Kalamazoo resort is largely against it, but the village and the Chicago resort clamor vociferously for the railroad. The Chicago people have offered ground on their resort for a depot. The upper cut, connecting Round and Pine lakes, will probably be bridged, and most likely the bridges will be arranged for vehicles and pedestrians as well as for the railroad. Quite a number of moneyed men are looking up Charlevoix real estate in expectation of the coming boom.—Cor. Grand Rapids Democrat.

If Bellaire gets that road before Elk Rapids gets one, which is likely, this town ought to crawl into a hole. Those folks up there haven't much money but they do work—and work is what counts.—Elk Rapids Progress.

Mellvaine's Rest.

Reported for the Journal.

One of the jolliest camping parties of the season returned last evening to the Chicago resort. Last Monday one of the resorters proposed to get up a camping party in true Indian style, and eleven jumped into the proposition.

The party was composed of W. D. McIlvaine (Buffalo Bill), Albert Harmon (Pute Joe), R. C. Givins (Stone Chariey), Ned Wiley (Mohawk Tom), Jack Alling (Pokanogah), Mr. Knapp (Pottawattamie Sam), Bert Gates (Wild Cat Jim), Mrs. Ed. Wiley (Starlight), Mrs. R. C. Givins (Moonlight), Miss Kate Harmon (Katy did), Miss Minnie Hutchins (Minnehaha).

They camped at Holy Island, Pine lake, and had a pow wow that would turn the aborigines white. The party enjoyed themselves so thoroughly that they almost shed tears when they pulled up stakes and came back to the horrors of sewer-gas and civilization.

Seven Tickets in the Field Seeking the Suffrages of the Dear People.

Portraits and Biographies of the Numerous Candidates for the White House.

Interesting Facts About Re-elections and the Voting by Presidential Electors.

Popular Vote for President in 1880 and 1884, as Shown by the Official Returns.

There are seven Presidential tickets before the American people seeking their suffrages at the quadrennial election to be held on the first Tuesday in November next, namely: Albert E. Redstone, of California, for President, and John Colvin, of Kansas, for Vice President, nominated at Washington on the 4th of May, by the Industrial Reform party; Petra A. Lockwood, of the 11th district of Columbia, for President, and Alfred H. Love, of Pennsylvania, for Vice President, nominated at Chicago, on the 9th of June, by the National Woman's Suffrage party; Robert H. Cowdrey, of Illinois, for President, and W. H. T. Wakefield, of Kansas, for Vice President, nominated at Cincinnati on May 17, by the Prohibitory party; Clinton B. Fisk, of New York, for President, and John A. Brooks, of Missouri, for Vice President, nominated at Indianapolis May 9, by the Prohibition party; Grover Cleveland, of New York, for President, and Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, for Vice President, nominated at St. Louis, June 5, by the Democratic party; and Benjamin Harrison, of Indiana, for President, and Levi P. Morton, of New York, for Vice President, nominated at Chicago, May 25, by the Republican party. With such a large collection to choose from the Republican voters will be at a loss, with very little trouble, to make a selection suitable to his taste. "You pays your money and takes your choice." We print below brief sketches and portraits of nearly all the candidates.

Benjamin Harrison.

Benjamin Harrison, the Republican nominee for President, comes from Puritan stock. Several of his ancestors were men of distinction. His great grandfather, Benjamin Harrison, of Virginia, was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, was three times Governor of his State, and was a member of the convention which ratified the Federal Constitution. His father, John Scott Harrison, the grandfather of the nominee, was the ninth President of the United States, besides being a renowned soldier and statesman.

Gen. Harrison was born at North Bend, Hamilton County, Ohio, Aug. 20, 1833, received a classical education, graduating at Miami University, Oxford, Ohio, in 1852, and married in Cincinnati, Ohio, October 20, 1853, he then went to Indianapolis, where he has since resided, and has been engaged in the practice of the law. He was elected in October, 1860, by the people, Reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court of Indiana, was commissioned on July, 1862, as Second Lieutenant of Indiana Volunteers (raised Company A, of the Seventieth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, was commissioned Captain, and on the organization of the regiment was commissioned Colonel) in August went with the army to Kentucky, and in December, 1862, participated out in June, 1863, was brevetted Brigadier General in February, 1865; in October, 1864, while in the field, was re-elected Reporter of the Supreme Court, which office he had held by election in the interval, and held it until he resigned, was re-elected, and served for four years; in 1876 he was the candidate of the Republican party for Governor of Indiana, but was defeated; was appointed a member of the Mississippi River Commission in 1879; was elected, in 1880, United States Senator, but resigned to accept Joseph E. McDonald, Democrat, and took his seat March 4, 1881. He sought re-election to the Senate in 1886, but was defeated by Judge Turpie, the Democratic nominee.

Levi P. Morton.

Levi P. Morton, the Republican Vice-Presidential candidate, was born in Vermont sixty years ago. His mother was the widow of a Revolutionary soldier, and his father was a tailor in a community where clothes hardly ever wore out, and times were always hard. Levi's boy hood days were passed in a country store. The removal of the family to Clinton, Oneida County, New York, afforded the lad educational advantages in the academy there. In his 17th year he became a clerk and assistant teacher in the New York Institution for the Blind in New York City, in which his elder brother was now a Presbyterian Sunday-school teacher. In 1853 Grover went to Black Rock, near Buffalo, to teach, and succeeded his uncle, Lewis J. Allen, in the compilation of a volume of the "American Herd Book," receiving $50 for six weeks' services. In August, 1853, he entered the Buffalo Law School, and in the spring of 1854 left Black Rock to apply himself to the study of law and was admitted to the bar in 1859. He was appointed Assistant District Attorney of Erie County Jan. 1, 1863, and held the office two years, when he was elected City Attorney, and was re-elected in 1866, but was defeated by Lyman K. Bass, Republican, and became a law partner of Isaac W. Vandergrift, and in 1869 formed the law partnership of Lansing, Cleveland & Falconer. His practice was fairly successful until 1876, when he was elected Representative in Congress, and served one three-years' term by because a member of the law firm of Bass, Cleveland & Morton, which was a prominent one. In the fall of 1880 he was nominated for Mayor by the Buffalo Democrats and Greenbackers, and was elected by a plurality of 192; 4 votes; his opponent being Jacob Kemp, Secretary of the Treasury. July 11, 1884, the National Democratic Convention, in session at Chicago, nominated Morton, who, on the second ballot, 683 votes out of a total of 820, and on motion of the late Thomas A. Hendricks, who became his running mate, the nomination was made unanimous. Morton was the man who, Conkling believed to be right, as a new ticket, Cleveland received 219 votes to the Electoral College and Blaine 182. The popular vote was: Cleveland, 4,874,986; Blaine, 4,851,981; Butler, 175,370; St. John, 150,369. At the National Democratic Convention, held at St. Louis, in June last, President Cleveland was renominated on the second ballot, Morton made large gains under him.

President Cleveland was married in the White House June 2, 1886, to Miss Frances Folsom, daughter of his deceased friend and partner. Under Morton's lead in the state law, and the union has proved a very happy one.

Allen G. Thurman.

Cleveland's ticket-fellow, Allen G. Thurman, was born in Lewisburg, Va., Nov. 13, 1813. When he was six years old his parents moved to Ohio. He was educated in the common schools, and was graduated from a great school of hard knocks at a collegiate training. While still a boy he studied law under his uncle, ex-Gov. Allen of Ohio, and Judge Swayne, and his ambition was to become a good lawyer and a good citizen. He succeeded. Over his own protest, he was nominated for Congress, in 1845, and elected, returning on adverse majority of over six hundred votes. He was made a member of the House Judiciary Committee. At the close of his term he declined a renomination.

In 1851 he was appointed by the Supreme Court Judgeship and elected. He sat on the bench for four years, the last two years serving as Chief Justice. In 1857 he was put forward as the Democratic candidate for the Supreme Judgeship against Judge Swan, and was defeated by 3,000 votes. The Democrats at the same time secured the Legislature and elected Thurman United States Senator to succeed Ben Wade. He took his seat in the Senate in the long session of December, 1857, and served to the close of the 36th Congress.

On retiring from the Senate, March 4, 1861, Senator Thurman determined to devote himself to his private affairs. In a week, however, he was appointed by President Garfield, with ex-Senator Pugh, of Alabama, Commissioner of State Evarts, to represent the American Government in the International Congress to assemble in Paris in the spring of 1881 to consider the question of a universal silver currency. Mr. Thurman was a member of the Ohio Legislature, and was chosen President, and for four years at his own risk and without salary, canvassed one hundred counties of the State in the interest of the Democratic party, addressing from two to three thousand people in each, but it failed by two votes, and he was compelled to remain a private citizen. In 1882 another Legislature plagued to wheeze, and Thurman was elected by one vote

FARM AND GARDEN.

EXPERIENCES AND OBSERVATIONS FROM MANY SECTIONS.

A Florida Farmer Expresses Himself on the Subject of Poultry House: and Describes One Which He Claims Possesses Many Merits.

A Floridian, whose idea of a fowl house is a building that will give protection to the birds from the weather and animals, and seclusion to hens while laying, describes his plan in Florida Farmer. He thinks it a mistaken idea that a hen house must be constructed large enough for a man to enter. The house he describes can, he claims, be built cheaper, gives all needful accommodation, does not require half the labor in cleaning and is capable of being more thoroughly cleaned than ordinary houses, besides other advantages that are obvious.

FIG. 1—FOWL HOUSE, GROUND PLAN.

A is a plan of the house, showing three sills, a, a, a, of 4x7 lumber, placed on edge, and resting on nine blocks fifteen inches high. On these sills the flooring is laid (inch floor boards, or jobs necessary) b, b, are the nests.

FIG. 2—FOWL HOUSE, END VIEW.

B is a section; b, b, are the nests; f is a small sliding door for fowls to enter; c, c, are rafters, a pair at each end and in the middle, these are 4x1 lumber; d is the ridge pole, 4x1; e, e, are the roosts, and the crossed lines represent wire netting, which should be used to inclose upper part of ends, the lower part, behind nests, being made as a flap to hang for easy access to nests.

Now take some thin lumber, say 2x12, and make skeleton framings. Cover them with sacking or other stout material, and paint well inside and out. Hang them from the top as shown by the dotted lines g g. Cut out a few squares, six inches each way and fill in with wire netting for ventilation. A shutter the shape of the end of house would be serviceable to put up on the windy side on cold nights. It will be seen that the above can be practically turned inside out, the roof can be thrown open on letting the fowls out, and while they are breakfasting the floor can be cleaned. Then the house should be closed, excepting the small door, and the hens can go in and be nearly in the dark while laying, which is just what they like. This house will accommodate fifty fowls, and the under part forms a dry place for them in wet weather. It may be urged that they will not have sufficient air. This is not so. They will have about the same cubic space per head as two persons in an ordinary statroom of a steamboat and very much more ventilation. By this contrivance the minimum labor is attained, all the droppings are free of sand, and the house can be removed at will. The floor need not even be nailed if cut down the middle, so as to be in four feet three inch lengths. An open flooring of sticks can be used. The blocks might then be dispensed with, the house resting on the ground, which should be hollowed so as to let the droppings fall through. This would entail the removal of the house frequently, not every time it was swept, but say once a week.

A house on this principle, but smaller, say eight feet long, three feet six inches wide, and three feet high for about twenty fowls, would do well to place under trees in a grove, as it could be removed every few days and the droppings hoed in, thus fertilizing every tree in the house. The roosts should be made of hard wood and the edges rounded off. They should not be nailed, but let into sockets so as to be readily removed. The nests should also move easily. An occasional drenching of kerosene and some tobacco dust sprinkled in the nests will keep the place from mites. The correspondent who described the above has found pine straw the next best material to wheat straw for making nests. He does not approve of show.

Cut Worms.

Cut worms are worse in sandy than in stiff clay land. They are especially fond of young beets, cucumbers and melons, but almost any tender young vegetable attracts them. No practicable means of poisoning, trapping or destroying them in any other way than by hand picking has, so far as I know, been discovered. Examine young crops in the morning, and whenever you observe that some of the plants have recently been cut, remove a little of the soil from about the plants, and probably the depredator will be found.

The Cabbage Root Worm.

The cabbage root worm, which attacks the roots of cabbages and cauliflowers, may, according to Professor Cook, of Michigan, be circumvented with bisulphide of carbon. A small hole is made in the earth near the main root of the plant, one-half a teaspoonful of the liquid poured in and the whole filled in at once with earth, which is pressed down with the foot.

CROSS BREEDING SHEEP.

The Advisability of Crossing Fine Wool Ewes with Coarse Wool Rams.

In reply to the query "Is it profitable for the average farmer to cross fine wool ewes with coarse or middle wool rams?" Mr. Henry Lee, among other statements, made the following at a sheep breeders meeting in Lapeer county, Mich.:

We depend on three sources for the profits from sheep, viz., wool, mutton and increase. The grade of sheep that affords us largest profit with the least expense appears to be the most desirable.

To consider wool first. There has been of late a large demand for combing and medium wools at larger prices. The only way we can grow this wool is by a cross between the fine and coarser breeds, the object being to increase the size of carcass and the length of staple. What cross are we to make? Will it be on fine ewes and a Leicester or Southdown ram? Mr. Lee, judging from his own experience, says no; that the cross first named is an exceedingly poor one, and on the second named one is shortening the staple of wool with too much dryness. He thinks the safest cross to make is with a first class Oxforddown, Hampshiredown or Shropshiredown. His experience with a first class of grade ewes and a Shropshire ram has been productive of desirable results, such as increased size of carcass, length of staple and number of increase.

As regards to mutton, Mr. Lee said mutton has become an important factor in the meat consumption, so there is a large demand for mutton at high price. He made, in this connection, a statement of what he thought it would be safe to reckon and compared the product in dollars and cents between 100 medium grade ewes and their lambs and 100 fine grade ewes and their lambs, with a balance of $189 in favor of the medium grades.

On the subject of increase Mr. Lee cited his own experience, which, with fine wool rams, was a loss of 50 per cent of lambs for quite a number of years. Last year he crossed fifty ewes with a Shropshire ram, and raised forty-five lambs, a loss of only 10 per cent.

A Portable Swill Barrel.

The sketch here given of a portable swill barrel was recently described in Ohio Farmer and affords a convenient contrivance that many readers may be glad to copy.

The correspondent who made the original of the model here shown, and who has successfully used it for some time, says: "I took two wheels from an old corn cultivator and procured a disused barrel. I prefer this kind, as it is thoroughly soaked with oil and burnt the oil out of it, but not enough to draw it out of the wood. I have found it more lasting and durable, besides, the sun appears to have less effect on it than any other kind I ever tried. I sawed about four inches off of the top end and put a lid on. I had stout iron pins or gudgeons seven-eighths of an inch in diameter, bolted to the middle of the bilge, on opposite sides at a point to balance it, and swung the barrel to the frame between the wheels. These gudgeons are forged out of a heavy piece of iron, with a broad surface, so as to give strength and support for the weight of a barrel of slop.

"I took a 1½ inch axle of an old spring wagon, bent it perpendicularly 9 inches, then horizontally again, letting it project in front of and around the barrel, with just sufficient room so the barrel can be tilted back to be emptied by means of a leather loop at A, in front, at the top. The barrel swings or is carried 9 inches from the ground to pass over obstructions, and in case of mud, the wheels do not sink so deep but that the barrel will pass over clear. The gudgeons rest at the bend at a point (e) in sockets or slots 9 inches above the center of the wheel, as the wheels are not high enough to swing the barrel far enough away from the ground without this extra perpendicular bend of the axle. Have a light, flat iron bolted on the side projection of axle at (f) with two small bolts on each side, and let it come to a point at B, through which the handle is placed for propelling it. There is a leg of iron at C, welded in the center of the forward projection of the axle in front of barrel to hold up the frame and make it more convenient. D D are buckets hung on each end of a wooden lath, 1x2 inches, notched, and wired on the iron frame with light wire. Now pull up to the swill tank, fill and hang on the buckets as shown in figure, and it is ready to be distributed to the hungry porkers in their respective lots, and the labor of feeding is lessened fourfold.

"I believe a more simple one can be constructed by taking the highest spring wagon or buggy wheels and having the spindles or the ends of the old axle spoken of fastened directly to the bilge of the barrel in the manner before described, and putting the wheels on these spindles, which fastens them directly to the barrel; then a couple of thills with a cross piece can connect the forward ends, bolted to the axle with small bolts. The gudgeons are bolted on the bilge of the barrel with four small bolts."

Bee and Bee.

Pigs in the orchard are best both for the pigs and the orchard, provided there is fair pasturage.

Mr. Dunlap, after an experience of thirty years with the plum, finds that it requires to be well fed. Hen manure and manure from the hog pen are as good as any. As it requires clean cultivation, not doing well in grass, a hen yard seems to be just the place for it. Besides, the hens are the best protection against the curculio.

P. M. Augur, of the Maine Pomological society, believes in thorough cultivation for the strawberry. He would subsoil to the depth of twenty inches, and apply twenty-five cords of stable manure to the acre.

Beekeepers say that honey from apple blossoms is the purest and clearest derived from any flower. It will run like water.

Do not cut the lawn too frequently when the weather is dry.

Do not neglect to support the tomato vines with brush, if nothing else.

The first, last and always necessary item in poultry raising is good care, and no one should undertake the business who has not time to give this.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

Adopted by the State Convention at Saginaw, Aug. 15.

The democracy of Michigan assembled in convention for the nomination of state officers, recognizing the fact that the office of city is present to the people candidates whose election will bring to the administration of state affairs integrity of character, purity of purpose and industrial experience, and pledgeing our allegiance to the traditional and established principles and policies of the democratic party in respect to national politics.

We renew our expression of our approval of the administration of President Cleveland which has given to the national government of the people and has justified his renomination in response to the unanimous and spontaneous demand of the overwhelming devotion to public duty his courageous maintenance of democratic principles and his enforcement of honest, just and impartial methods of administration in all the departments of the government.

Upon the chief question of national politics, affecting the welfare of the people from the burden of taxation, we declare our unalterable opposition to the present tariff policy of the republican party. We express our approval of the last tariff message of President Cleveland as an adequate exposition of the true and time honored democratic principles which should govern the subject of revenue reform and the reproduction of the surplus in the treasury. To him is the chosen standard bearer of the national democracy in this presidential campaign and to his associate, Allen G. Thurman, a tried statesman distinguished by a life long record of public service which has been illustrated by high ability and honesty, integrity of and fruitful of benefit to the people we pledge our hearty support to the end that Michigan may once more be enrolled in the list of democratic states

We declare our adherence to the platform of the national democratic convention at St. Louis, and we approve the action of our democratic representatives in congress in their efforts to secure a reduction of tariff taxation, thereby preventing further accumulation of a dangerous surplus in the treasury and relieving the people from the burdens of the war tariff.

We believe this course only can bring the policy of the government on this subject in harmony with the constitution, the true interests of the people, the just demands of labor the prosperity of all industries and the development of the resources of this country.

The democracy of Michigan believes in the dignity of American labor; recognizes the right of wage workers to the fostering care of the government and that the legitimate industry of every walk of life shall be encouraged in its work of building up the material interests of state.

The ownership of real estate in this country by foreign corporations and non-resident aliens is injurious to American interests and should be prohibited.

We favor the adoption of measures providing for the health and safety of those engaged in manufacturing, mining and building industries, and the repeal of all class legislation under which complaints have been fostered and protected.

We demand that congress shall open to the public domain for settlement all lands granted to railroads or other corporations which have not been earned, and more particularly do we demand the forfeiture of all unearned grants of lands in the Upper Peninsula, that that portion of the state may no longer be deprived of its natural growth and industrial development.

That to the multiplication in this state of petty boards, commissions and officers, with unequal powers and surroundings as insure feeble official responsibility and respect for the legislature or people, leaving the matter of appropriations for state institutions to be largely controlled by log rolling combinations, and as well as to the lack of system we attribute the great and constant increase of expenditures, therefore we submit that the case is one demanding the reform of a legislature and state officials free to make changes which economy and good business methods may dictate.

The doctrine of home rule and local self government are cardinal principles of the democratic party. Therefore we cordially sympathize with the people of Ireland in the great contest which they are making under the leadership of Gladstone and Parnell for the right to have the management of their own affairs.

That though more than twenty-three years have elapsed since the war we should not forget that a large number of that gallant and patriotic army that preserved to us an unbroken country is still among us with increasing years and increasing disability, the result of hardships and privation and hardship. We believe the general government should deal justly with them and that liberal pensions should be granted to the disabled, not as charity, but as due them because of the services rendered to the country and their country, and we point with satisfaction and approval to the liberal construction of the existing pension laws by the present administration, resulting in a large increase in the amounts annually paid to veterans.

The Tramp in New Orleans.

Somehow I always had a sneaking sympathy for a tramp. I fancy he loves the certain roof of blue sky that is his, the unfailing coverlid of dew, the smell of clover fields and the lure of wild flowers. I cannot picture him as vicious and malicious, thirsty, but rather as a strolling philosopher, who takes a larger view of life than you or I; a cynic in rags, a satirist out at elbows, a man of the world in a battered hat and a pair of impossible boots. Go into Lafayette park any early morning and there, lying in the grass, sleeps some wretch. He has a boot on one foot and a shoe on the other, the rags about his legs are tied on in a fashion that would not disgrace a beggar of the Roman campagna; his wretched coat sits upon his slouchy shoulders with an easy grace, the devil may care kind of a fit that so plainly says "I care for nobody and nobody cares for me." A dirty wisp of a hat—"scrilled" he based about his unshaven throb, his face is flushed, his aspect is one of supreme indifference. He holds a battered tin can in his hand, having found the sesamia wasser is good for the health, and with the air of an aristocrat he drinks the regulation three cups. New Orleans is his Nice, his San Remo, his Vichy, his Carlsbad.

By and by the police get tired seeing him around and yank him off to the station, and he is sent down for twenty or thirty days for being—what? A vagrant? A tramp? Not a man of the world, a philosopher, to whom a bed is all the more, whether is be of down or deal, a strolling bocker on air, who has his eye fixed belief, and that is that the world owes him a living and he means to collect the debt.—Catharine Cole in New Orleans Picayune.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

Adopted by the National Convention at St. Louis, June 7, 1888.

The Democratic party of the United States, in national convention assembled, renews the pledge of its fidelity to Democratic faith, and reaffirms the platform adopted by its representatives in the convention of 1884, and endorses the views expressed by President Cleveland in his last annual message to congress as the correct interpretation of that platform upon the question of tariff reduction; and also endorses the efforts of our Democratic representatives in congress to secure a reduction of taxation. Chief among its principles of party faith are the maintenance of an indissoluble union of free and indestructible states, now about to enter upon its second century of unexampled progress and renown; devotion to a plan of government regulated by a written constitution strictly specifying every granted power and expressly reserving to the states or people the entire ungranted residue of power; the enforcement of a policy popular rightness, efficiency and economy; the maintenance of the rights of the states and the preservation of the union with the duty of preserving peace, ensuring equality and establishing justice. The democratic party welcomes an exacting scrutiny of the administration of the executive power, which four years ago was committed to its trust in the election of Grover Cleveland president of the United States, and it challenges the most searching inquiry concerning its fidelity and devotion to the pledges which then invited the suffrages of the people.

During a most critical period of our financial affairs, resulting from over-taxation, the accumulation of our currency, and a public debt unassailed, it has by the adoption of a wise and conservative course, not only averted disaster, but greatly promoted the prosperity of the people. It has reversed the improvident and injurious policy of the Republican party loading the people, business, and has reclaimed from corporations and monopolies, and restored to use and stored to the people, nearly 200,000,000 acres of valuable land to be sacredly held as homesteads for our citizens.

While carefully guarding the interests of the taxpayers, and conforming strictly to the principles of justice and equity, it has paid out money for pensions and bounties to the soldiers and sailors of the republic than was ever paid before during an equal period.

By intelligent management and a judicious and economical expenditure of the public money, it has set on foot the reconstruction of the American navy upon a system that forbids the recurrence of scandal and insures successful results.

It has adopted and consistently pursued a firm and prudent foreign policy, preserving peace with all nations while scrupulously maintaining all the rights and interests of our own government and people at home and abroad. The searches and seizures of Chinese laborers has been effected by the city of American labor for a better share of the rewards of industry is stifled with false pretences of enterprise to fatten at the hoard of domestic monopoly, capital is distorted with doubt, and industrial enterprise can neither be properly attempted nor prosecuted.

The Democratic party will continue with all its power confided to it to struggle to relieve these laws in accordance with the pledges of its platform between the states and people by the suffrages of the people.

We believe in the industrious freemen of our land as immense majority, including every tiller of the soil, will unanimously pronounce in favor of the proposition that the price of nearly everything they buy is increased by the favorites of an unnecessary and iniquitous legislation. All unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation. It is repugnant to the creed of Democracy that by such taxation the cost of the necessaries of life should be unjustly increased to all our people. Judged by Democratic principles, protection is a system of robbery and wrong. It enriches a few at the expense of many, and has not permitted a single year of its existence to pass without some one or more corporations or combinations of citizens by depriving them of the benefit of unrestricted competition, taxing them for governmental action is violated when through unnecessary taxation a vast surplus is raised to support the needs of an economical administration, drawn from the people and the channels of trade and accumulated as a demoralizing surplus in the national treasury. The money now lying idle in the federal treasury resulting from superfluous taxation amounts to more than $100,000,000, and the surplus collected is reaching the sum of more than $60,000,000 annually. Debauched by this great temptation, the remed

THE FISHERIES TREATY.

The Senate Still Struggling with It—The House Lack a Quorum and Adjourns.—Most after assembling the Senate went into open executive session on the fisheries treaty. Ile 10th, and voted on Mr. Morgan's resolution to patch up the Bennatar treaty. The resolution was disagreed to yeas 14, nays 37. As soon as the vote was announced Mr. Morgan's resolution was withdrawn. The agriculture bill was then taken up. After some discussion the bill was concurred in—yeas, 30; nays, 17. The sundry civil appropriation bill was presented from the conference committee on Appropriations. The Senate then went into executive session on the fisheries treaty, and the presiding officer directed that the treaty be read for amendment. Pending the debate the Senate adjourned. The House managed to pass the forestry bill, and the pension bill without division, but all efforts to dispose of any other business were defeated because of the lack of a quorum. Several votes were made to get such a lot. Tuesday of the consideration of the Nicaragua canal bill, which, if it should be passed, would be a great benefit to the commerce of the country. The House adjourned at 4:30 p. m.

A COLD-WATER TICKET.

Nebraska Prohibitionists Nominate a Ticket—Their Platform.

The Nebraska State Prohibition Convention was held in Omaha, and the following nominations made:

For Governor—George A. Bigelow.
For Lieutenant Governor—John Dall.
For Secretary of State—Martin L. Hopper.
For Auditor—John Jones.
For Treasurer—J. H. Stewart.
For Superintendent of Instruction—The Rev. Horatio Hutton.
For Attorney General—John J. Ryan.
For Commissioner of Public Lands—A. Rotzer.

For United States Senator—William F. Gimpel.

A platform was adopted which demands the repeal of liquor-license laws; assails the old parties; favors the repeal of the internal-revenue tax on liquors and a speedy and thorough reform of the tariff; demands the objective franchise for women, and the regulation of railway and telegraph companies by commissioners, and favors the restriction of labor contracts. An effort is being made to form an old-soldiers' ticket of the party.

SMASHED AT A CROSSING.

South Lawn, Illinois, Stewed with Wreckage of Freight and Passenger Cars.

The little town of South Lawn, located at the junction of the Illinois Central and Grand Trunk Railroads, twenty-three and a half miles south of Chicago, was the scene of a bad railroad wreck. The colliding trains were an Illinois Central passenger express and a Grand Trunk freight of twenty-five box cars, all loaded. Nine people on the passenger train were injured, none, it is believed, fatally. That there was no loss of life was a fortunate circumstance, as the wreckage was piled high on the track, and the wood in not serious. Two passengers were also wounded—Gen. Boulanger was not touched. The act was that of a political opponent.

POLITICS IN CONNECTICUT.

The Republicans in Convention at Hartford and Nominate a State Ticket.

The Republican State Convention of Connecticut met at Hartford and nominated the following ticket:

For Governor—Morgan G. Bulkley, of Hartford.
For Lieutenant Governor—Geo. E. Marvin, of New Haven.
For Secretary of State—R. A. Walsh, of Greenwich.
For Treasurer—E. S. Henry.
For Comptroller—John B. Gallup.

A platform was adopted which indorses the Chicago conference and platform, favoring compulsory recovery of the ballot and liberal pensions, indorsing the State liquor law, and pledging the party to further legislation to restrict corporations.

THE LONE STAR STATE.

Democrats Place a State Ticket in the Field.

The Democratic State Convention at Dallas, Texas, renominated L. S. Ross for Governor and T. B. Wheeler for Lieutenant Governor. J. W. Stayton, R. R. Gaines and J. L. Henry were nominated for Supreme Judges, the last being a new man. Stayton was made Chief Justice. The proposition for a constitutional convention was defeated by a majority of 90 in a total vote of 729.

Retirement of Count von Moltke.

A Berlin special states that Count von Moltke has been retired from active duty in the army and has been nominated by the Emperor as President of National Defense. The office was held by the late Emperor Frederick until he became Emperor William and has since been vacant. Count von Moltke continues in active duty. General von Waldersee succeeds to Count von Moltke's place in the army.

Resembled Dynamite.

The Municipal Labor Committee of Paris is arbitrating between the navvies and the masters. Premier Floquet has received deputations of workmen and employers and members of the Labor Committee. The bomb which was thrown in the Place Vendôme was similar in construction to those employed by American anarchists. It contained a substance resembling nitro-glycerine.

An Arizona Lynching.

James Stott, James Scott, and Jeff Wilson were lynched by a party of outlaws in the southwestern part of Apache County, A. T. The affair grew out of the recent war in the Four-Leaf section between the sheep and cattle raisers.

Sentenced Under the Crimes Act.

A Dublin special says Councillors Finlay and Mora, of Roscommon, have been sentenced to four months' imprisonment respectively for conspiracy in connection with the plan of campaign.

A Wine Merchant Assigns.

James Grant, a wholesale wine merchant of Montreal, Canada, has made an assignment. The liabilities are $200,000, assets not stated. Large losses by failures caused the assignment.

At the Head of the Army.

The President has issued an order placing Major General Schofield in command of the army, with headquarters at Washington.

American Party's Nominee.

The American party, in session at Washington, nominated Gen. James L. Curtis, of New York, for President.

Told In a Few Words.

In a quarrel in a saloon at Tipton, Ind., John Shaw assaulted James Gordon, fatally wounding him. Shaw was arrested.

Mrs. Priscilla Harvey, of Little Rock, Ark., has celebrated her 103d birthday.

John Wentz, a Cerro Gordo (Ill.) farmer, died of injuries received by the breaking of a hay fork.

The Lord Mayor of London, who is a tailor, has used Berry Wall and another New York swell for tailors' bills.

A counterfeiter who was caught in New York trying to pass a spurious note, swallowed the bill.

Mayor Hewitt of New York, says he will accept a renomination, as he wishes to complete reforms he has begun.

A deputation of navvies called on M. Floquet, the French prime minister, and assured the Government of taking the part of the employers against the strikers. Floquet said the Government would protect workers against all violence or interference by the strikers.

A fine natural-gas well was shot at Washington, Ind., recently and named the "Harrison."

GENERAL SCHOFIELD.

Brief Sketch of the Life and Deeds of General Sheridan's Successor.

The Mother of Young Albert Parsons Will Rear Him as an Anarchist.

(Washington (D. C.) special.)

While there is no law requiring it, the custom seems to have grown up that the President shall serve to such an extent that it has rarely been deviated from, and the next highest officer is reasonably certain of promotion to Commander-in-Chief. Lincoln served out the term of John M. Schofield, the senior Major General of the army, succeeded by Ulysses S. Grant. Gen. Sheridan, promoted, as Gen. Sherman, to the rank of General, was the senior Major General when Gen. Grant died, and his military position, as major general is, therefore, at the head of the army. Sheridan, in rank of general remains, is vested in Gen. Sherman, who is on the retired list. Gen. Sheridan was promoted to the lieutenant-generalship of the army when Gen. Sherman retired, but had only been invested in the war of rebellion of the army, which was restored by Congress on the recommendation of a joint committee of members of the Senate and House of Congress. He devoted himself principally to a military observation of the Franco-Prussian war, and on his return to the United States in 1871 he was assigned to the command of the Division of the Missouri, with headquarters in Chicago, and, in April, 1883, he became commander of the District of Missouri.

After the defeat of Hood's army General Schofield was ordered to the Department of Ohio, and commanded that province at Winchester, Va., 1865, and then advanced to Goldsboro, which he reached ahead of General Sherman, and after defeating the Confederates in several engagements, he joined Gen. Sherman at Raleigh. Gen. Schofield in his regular army for twenty at the close of the war he assumed his rank of Brigadier and Brever Major General, and in July, 1867, he was appointed to Alabama of the first military district, comprising the State of Alabama. He was relieved from that position (several months) and was appointed Secretary of War for the time being, and May 30, 1868, he was confirmed in the office by the Senate, but resigned the following March.

THE SON OF HIS FATHER.

Young Albert Parsons to Be Reared an Anarchist.

(Chicago special dispatch.)

Mrs. Lucy Parsons, the famous widow of the Haymarket victim, has begun preparing for a short summer journey to Waukesha, Wis., where she will be accompanied by her boy, Albert Parsons, who is reported to be "the spitting image of his father." Mrs. Parsons was interviewed as over

> "I suppose you want an interview about my husband's death. Albert is not my husband's son, for even amongst Anarchists we do not believe in free love. Albert is an anarchist in going on the principle of his father. The startling novelty, isn't it? Have you the New York Sun says that Albert is being reared by the education of Mr. Pinkerton's detectives? Well, I suppose that is a novelty, too. Albert is not educated for the ministry, exactly, but he is being reared for a literary career. I shall educate him as I see fit. I shall not let him go to the Sunday school employed by the Pinkertons, for fear of stuff I never said. You may put this down: I am a Socialist, but I am not a free lover. If I do I am not responsible for his training. Albert is growing up a Socialist. He is a fine lad, I will educate him all right. Albert is a good boy. He reads Shakspere, Byron, Shelley, Victor Hugo, Dickens, Chatelet, and Judge Gary is fine. I will let Albert read Judge Gary's work when he is older. Albert is my son. Let him come to see a few days ago. He was accompanied by the Secret House." DID you hear Albert?"

Mrs. Parsons turned to her visitor with a smile.

"He came along with his head down. He did not see me, but I saw him. I whistled right in his ear. He half fell out of his seat. I said, 'Get out of your seat!' 'You bloody old anarchist,' said I, 'if I had a knife I'd stab you where you stand.' He ran like a deer."

Little Albert was an interested listener. His mothers is a tall, slender woman, with a face that would be pretty if it had not been marred by the ravages of time and sorrow. She is a brunette, and her hair is bobbed, does her dressing in the high which followed the close of the war.

"Albert is a Socialist," she said, "and I am a Socialist, too. I am a Socialist, and I am proud of it. I am a Socialist, and I am not ashamed to be called a Socialist. I am a Socialist because I believe in the equal rights of all men. I am a Socialist because I believe in the equal rights of women. I am a Socialist because I believe in the equal rights of children. I am a Socialist because I believe in the equal rights of all men, women and children. I am a Socialist because I believe in the equal rights of all men, women and children to the fruits of their labor, across the steel fence which keeps Frank Ivel, Frank Ivel and the old man was severely penalized. THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Aug. 23, 1888.

ALLEN G. THURMAN was entertained by the democrats of Port Huron yesterday. The local club made arrangements for a grand demonstration.

MARSHALL FIELD, the great Chicago merchant, and D. W. Minshall, the great manufacturer of Terre Haute, have been leaders in the exodus from the republican party during the past week. "The stampede continues."

CHAIRMAN BRICE says that New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, and Rhode Island, are sure for Cleveland, and that the list of doubtful states must be revised so as to include Michigan, Minnesota, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Iowa.

ORLANDO F. Barnes of Lansing, one of the exceptionally brilliant young men of Michigan, was nominated for congress by the democrats of the sixth district, on the 21st. He is a son of the Hon. O. M. Barnes, and was elected mayor of Lansing as soon as he was a voter, and made one of the best mayors Lansing ever had.

H. B. HUDSON of Mancelona was nominated in judicial convention at Manistee, for candidate for congress, on the twelfth ballot. His opponent was Mathew Wilson of Muskegon. The two-thirds rule was adopted, and Hudson received 63 votes to 27 for Wilson. The congressional committee was elected, with power to appoint its own chairman. The convention endorsed the administration of president Cleveland, and the national and state platforms.

MR. BLAINE is credited with saying: "Don't share your earnings with strangers. Don't be crowded out by foreigners." He has probably been reading the result of the investigations of the Ford committee. But why don't he turn in and help put a stop to the cursed system by which foreigners are crowding out the American laborer, instead of helping to make it a success. He seems to think it better to throw the American laborer out of work entirely by putting a foreign pauper in his place on American soil, as is now done, than to give the American a chance for even reduced wages with a corresponding reduction in cost of living.

THE Sentinel this week says: "Mrs. John Beattie, of New Orleans, is in town, a guest of the Newman House, and will remain a few weeks. Mrs. Beattie brings the following message to the Sentinel from her husband: 'Tell Smith the south is no longer solid. I have done with democracy, and will vote for Harrison and Morton this fall, as will thousands of other democrats in the south.' Mr. Beattie, who is well known here, has been a democrat all his life. The stampede continues." We are told that when Mrs. Beattie read the item as proceeded to the Sentinel office, and the interview that followed would make interesting reading. She denied the story that Mr. Beattie was now a republican, and asserted that he would rather die than vote a republican ticket; and we are also told that she advised Mr. Smith to not send Mr. Beattie a paper containing the lying paragraph; that he will be here in a few days and answer for himself. This is only a sample of the misrepresentation to be found in nearly every issue of the Sentinel, and yet in the same paper the editor takes the correspondent of the Grand Rapids Democrat to task and calls him a liar for saying that Hon. John Nicholls has been a life-long republican. It is true that four years ago Mr. Nicholls voted for Cleveland, but in make his local canvass he was counted as a staunch republican, and had been all his life, serving in the Wisconsin legislature, and in numerous municipal offices as such. "Tell the truth," Mr. Sentinel.

Very Encouraging.

"Do you think, doctor, we will have the cholera here in New York this winter?" asked an inquisitive man of a New York health officer.

"I have studied the matter closely," replied the official with great deliberation, "and it is my opinion, from all I can gather, that if our present sanitary regulations cholera continues for six months we will not have any cholera this year."—Texas Siftings.

In a Fix.

First Art Critic (at an exhibition)—Great Scott!

Second Art Critic—I should say so.

"How under the sun are we to get up our critique?"

"I don't know. There is no way to distinguish good paintings from bad."

"None at all. There isn't a single price mark in the whole catalogue."—Omaha World.

BUTTER MAKING.

Description of the Two Methods Now Employed for Salting Butter.

Much of the excellence of butter depends on the salting, and while butter that for any reason is really inferior cannot be raised to a grade of excellence, by the salting, says The New York World, that which otherwise might be classed as good is often reduced to an inferior grade by the manner in which it is treated at the time of salting. A good deal of butter is churned to death; that is, the churning is continued to gather the butter so fine after the butter has separated from the milk that it is pounded into a creamy, pasty condition, exactly the opposite of what it should be.

A piece of really good butter, explains the authority quoted from, when properly salted will, if cut apart with a bright, sharp knife, show two clean cut, smooth and slightly moist surfaces, without any sign of a mashing down of the butter particles, and none of them should be found adhering in a sticky mass to the knife. When a knife is drawn through a piece of butter and comes out in such a condition that the blade cannot be seen, no expert is needed to determine its quality.

The two methods now in vogue for salting butter are termed brine salting and dry salting, each of which has its advocates. The former consists in making the salt into a solution before it is used, and in the latter the solution is made by adding dry salt to the water that remains in the butter after most of the buttermilk has been worked out. So far as the result is concerned the object of each plan is to surround the grains of butter with brine, until enough of the solution is absorbed to make them palatable. As the butter itself contains about 12 per cent. of water, that must be taken into consideration in brine salting, otherwise the salting will be too light. On the other hand, if more dry salt is used than the water in the butter will turn into a solution, the dry salting will be in excess and be shown in particles of salt undissolved.

To get the best results from any kind of salting the churning should stop when the butter has fairly granulated and before it has been beaten to a salvy condition by the process of gathering. At this stage the buttermilk should be drawn off and the butter be washed with cold water or cold, weak brine until it runs off clear, when either strong, clear brine may be poured on to remain until the mass has absorbed enough of the solution, or fine dry salt, about one ounce to the pound, be sifted on and be worked in so that it will dissolve. After this a light second working should be given to clear it of any buttermilk that may be drawn out by the salt.

In and In Breeding.

Judicious in and in breeding, says The Southern Live Stock Journal, does not run the stock out. The most perfectly developed and consequently valuable cattle in the world are those that have been skillfully and intelligently bred for generations with no intermixture of foreign blood. In and in breeding, to attain a high degree of success, requires the liberal use of brains interwoven with more than average judgment. Most of the ills that are predicted by agricultural writers for stock bred in and in are more imaginary than real.

The general principles of heredity and the laws of breeding are subjects of special interest to stockmen, and ought to be studied more carefully and extensively. The only way we may hope to intensify and perpetuate a desired quality with reasonable assurance of success is by means of in and in breeding. All our prominent and most useful and valuable specimens of domestic live stock and poultry were molded in this way, and it is the only way to create new breeds that will transmit their personal characteristics and excellences to their offspring with fidelity.

Experience with Barbed Wire Fence.

Ten years ago, when I first began building barbed wire fence," says J. M. Stahl, "I was almost afraid to use the barbed wire. I got the experience of more than a score of farmers who had used barbed wire quite extensively, and almost without exception they contradicted the flattering stories published in the papers of animals meeting a lingering death on the cruel wires. At first, I was careful to drive the cattle and lead the horses along each piece of new wire fence, allowing them to scent it. Now the animals have become accustomed to wire fence. I never had an animal injured on the fence. I know of but one animal in my neighborhood that has been injured severely on barbed wire fence; and the animal in question was not belonging to the same man jumped on the broken off stake of a Virginia rail fence and disemboweled itself.

The Demand for Larger Horses.

Only a few years ago 1,200 to 1,400 pounds was thought to be a big horse. Now our grade draft horses, 1,400 to 1,600 pounds, are demanded by the city market, and even heavier horses sell all the better if they can be found. Many of our best farmers have grand teams of grade draft mares that money cannot buy. Every one is worth a fortune for breeding, while the amount of work they can perform is astonishing. The farmer all want larger horses to work, and are eagerly breeding to increase the size. The dealers everywhere are actively looking for the grade draft horses all over the west, and fortunate the farmers and the communities where this popular horse is found.

Stall Feeding Beef.

Wheat bran is not a proper ingredient of a ration for fattening cattle, as it is not a fat producing food. Corn meal is the best fattening food for cattle. For each 1,000 pounds of live weight mix twenty pounds of best hay or fodder and eight to ten pounds of corn meal. Clover hay is the best, but even corn fodder will do, or you may give six or eight pounds of corn meal, three pounds of cotton seed meal and twenty pounds of hay. An occasional change or addition of other food promotes appetite and digestion, but corn meal and hay should be the main reliance.—Southern Cultivator.

On the Country Road.

To be thrifty our animal must be comfortable. This is true in summer as well as winter.

Better feed inferior fruits and vegetables to the hogs than send them to market, is the opinion of many.

Have a place in which to deposit whatever will burn. A shallow trench of proper size should be made to hold the ashes. When a burning has been made, cover the trench with boards to prevent the ashes from being blown away. By care in gathering the rubbish, a supply may be secured without outlay of money, one of the most valuable of fertilizers.

An Interesting Relic.

Eight years before Columbus discovered America an old Portuguese sailor named Diego Cam was cruising down the coast of West Africa until he came to a great river, on whose south bank he set up a big white stone and carved an inscription upon it celebrating his discovery. It was the southernmost point of Portuguese possessions in Africa, and for many years the famous Padro Padroo stood on the shore bearing silent witness to the old sailor's achievement. Years later, when all eyes were turned to the New World, the Congo was almost forgotten, and when it next attracted notice the Padro Padroo had disappeared. The spot where it stood has for centuries been known as Padroo Point. Three or four months ago Baron von Schwabin, the Swedish traveler, heard from some natives of a large fetich stone hidden in the tall jungle grass at some distance from the beach. It was only after long palavers with the chiefs that he obtained permission to visit the revered object. He found to his delight the veritable Padro Padroo, its well known inscription only partially effaced. This famous monument of a great discovery will doubtless be treasured hereafter as one of the most interesting relics of the early navigators. —New York Sun.

What Doctors Prescribe.

The subscribers to The Chemist and Druggist, London, having been asked to send to the editor 10,000 prescriptions, a digest of the answers received shows that spirits of chloroform, ail volatile, glycerine, and sirup of orange peel take high places as drugs most frequently prescribed—to these being also added bromide of potassium, which ranks second only to chloroform. Wine of ipecacuanha, sulphate of quinine, bicarbonate of soda, carbonate of ammonia, liquor ammonia, acetate, paregoric, camphor, bicarbonate, spiritus etherin nitrosi are the other members of the group of drugs which most frequently ordered. Several of these minister to the disorder of the respiratory tract, and the time of the year may have some influence on their use. This kind of information, however, is regarded as representative. The list of the statistics of some hospitals and dispensaries were taken, bicarbonate of soda, rhubarb, and gentian would, it is thought, exceed the other drugs in respect of frequency of prescription; further, spirit of chloroform and sirup of orange peel are mainly used as adjuncts. —Chicago Tribune.

Importance of Paper.

Paper is becoming an important article to all manufacturers. The latest thing is paper collars, and it has for a time taken the place of wood, being light, durable and waterproof. The paper coffin can be made for a few dollars, and with proper veneering, is capable of a beautiful finish in imitation of any costly wood. All paper articles have the advantage of cheapness, while they last about as long as wooden wares. Manufacturers are now making paper water buckets and paper dows. These are very popular. The doors are waterproof and will not shrink or crack. For several years past we have seen paper car wheels and paper rowing boats. I can't say when the next innovation will be made, for only the other day I wiped my mouth on a paper napkin, and a few hours later saw a paper dress imported from Paris. The clerk told me that French women of the middle classes wear stench patrons of the paper dress. It will not be long before we shall be building paper houses, and for half the money we now pay out for them.—Professor E. H. Smith in Globe-Democrat.

A Famous Floating Island.

The famous floating island of the Dertwent river, England, is described as a surface again after a long disappearance. This is a mass of decaying vegetation forming a layer of peat, on top of which is a thin covering of clay bound together by the roots of vegetation. It rose on the clay bottom of the lake, but sometimes some force, supposed to be in the gases generated by the decaying matter, causes it to rise to the surface. Its extent sometimes reaches half an acre, and it rises and falls with the water, until finally it sinks out of sight. It has not gone probably for several years.—New York Sun.

Progress in Japan.

In Tokio, the streets are in handsome and commodious railway station. There are a number of street car lines, and the streets are lighted with gas. Telegraph lines stretch in all directions; high schools and common schools are being established, and the university will compare favorably with many in this country. There are many flourishing factories already established, and altogether the city is more like an American than an Oriental town. —New York Tribune.

Fling Hats vs. Sandbaggers.

"I'll never forget my first experience as a footpad," said "Soape" out at the workhouse yesterday (or, "I'm not a professional footpad or robber, but once in Chicago I thought I'd go out and get in my work with a sniffed 'em. Well, we do you suppose I picked out as my first victim? A man with a plug hat. Did you ever hear of such a thing?" And Soape, N. ever was taken, fairly floored with laughter.

"Why, what's funny about that?"

"Don't you know?"

"No, what is it?"

"Well, a sandbagger—that is, a professional—never takes a man and wears a plug hat. It don't do any good."

"Why not?"

"Well, you are green. A sandbagger attempts to strike either just in front of or behind the ear. Now, this is the most effective places. Well, a pug has is so constructed that it comes down as to the points on the head it covers. The rim of the very stiff hat deadens the force of the blow, and before a second can be given the man has made off and he and her your attack has been in vain. Now you know what to do next time you are going out at night—wear a plug hat. It's a complete armor against sandbaggers."—St. Joseph (Mo.) Gazette.

Not Much.

He winked to a bootblack to step into a doorway near the postoffice, and then confidentially remarked:

"Sonny, the postmaster and I don't hitch very much, so I don't care to go in and see about my mail. Suppose I give you a quarter, and you go in and inquire for a letter for Claude Melnotte, and if you get one bring it here."

"Not much" exclaimed the boy as he drew away.

"Just why?"

"Because I worked that racket for a fellow about a month ago. They paved out a letter, and I had just grabbed it when an old duffer grabbed me. 'Write love to my daughter, will you? he bellowed. 'Want my Nellie to elope with you, eh? Ah! I'll—I'll you! And he walloped me with a cane until I had to ride home on a dray. No, no, Clara, I've learned something new."—Detroit Free Press.

The republican campaign here as elsewhere is made up of bluff and blunder, but it won't work with intelligent people.

The Sentinel might have added to the history of Col. G. E. Dunbar, of the Belvedere, that he is now a staunch democrat.

A steamer of Mackinac Island has purchased the propeller T. S. Faxton, and will run her from the Island to Manistique. John McCarthy, captain.

The Sentinel makes a deliberate misstatement in the course of which there are names on the democratic club list not authorized by the owners of those names.

W. C. Newman, of Charlevoix, is in town trying to get the township board to put a few dollars in the guards at the Third street bridge.—Petoskey Democrat.

The public schools open again next month for the fall term, and already the small boys are beginning to count the few remaining days of vacation liberty with regret.

A team at Odd Fellows' hall on Sunday next at 10.30 a. m. and 7.30 p. m., by Rev. A. P. Greenleaf, the pastor of Methodist church, return to Battle Creek. All are invited

At the Congregational church next Sunday morning the pastor will discuss the "Benefits of Church Membership." In the evening he will mention the "Plants to be Rooted Up."

Will the Sentinel give the names of some who are mentioned as members of the tariff reform club, who are supposed to be of a republican stub by their own action? Either give the names or shut up.

Voters should remember that no democrat "life-long" or otherwise, is going over to Harrison and high tariff this year, unless he is a disappointed office-seeker, or is personally interested in maintaining high taxes.

Charlevoix offers the best chance in the world for all manufacturing enterprises. No better place could be found to invest your capital. Expenses are very light, wood, insurance and living expenses being nominal.

Legrand Lamphear and those four sons will make a big mistake this year, and have the "g. o. p." for some time before another campaign is over. They are the cousin of a democrat and the cousin of a republican.

Two of our young men took a row across Pine Lake to Undine on Saturday evening and did not return until long after midnight. As they did not give an account of themselves, there must be some attraction over across.

It may not be too late to mention the fact that Mis Eva M. Rogers and John H. Willis were married at the Pine Lake house, Boyne City, by J. L. Hammond, on the 19th. Both are of Advance and well known in that and this vicinity, especially Jack, who is an old resident. Jack informs us that he now intends to settle down on his farm in Wilson township. The bride is the eldest daughter of Geo. Rogers, of Advance. All of the friends of the happy couple join us in wishing them a world of prosperity.

Since our return home on Saturday for a three weeks stay, from a prolonged struggle with the mysteries of the typographic art, we note that there has been numerous improvements. New land has been cleared by different farmers, new fences have been built, and some of our fair young damsels have taken pity on some of our batchelors, and in fact many changes have been made. The wheat and oat crop are nothing to brag of owing to the dry season, but the corn and potatoes promise to be a fair crop. Wheat is about all harvested and farmers are busy gathering in the oats and peas. We are now prepared to tackle anything from a job of dockwolloping to city marshal.

The many friends of Eddie Bird will be glad to hear that he is slowly recovering his health.

Boyne.

BOYNE, Aug. 23.—The mercury registered 36 degrees last night.

J. L. Handy who left here last spring, spending the summer in Tennessee, returned with his family and is again occupying his old residence, the Farmer house. He says the bracing atmosphere of northern Michigan for him and you may have the sunny south.

A young gentleman called at the office of Sunset Jackson last Friday evening and will remain indefinitely. Mr. J. looks more smiling than ever and doubtless is much also for formerly.

Buried—from the Methodist church Aug. 15, Mrs. Addison Sager, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Van R. Newville. Funeral services conducted by Rev. T. J. Hill.

On Aug. 18, the infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Amos Jones was buried from the M. E. church.

Mr. Frank Hale has recently purchased the Sheboygan mill property and will proceed to fit up the mill for sawing out a new lot of logs. This mill is of large capacity and has lain idle for a long time. As Mr. White is an experienced mill man, this will give an increased business to Boyne.

Rev. J. Pedrick has again commenced the manufacture of shingles in the Boyne City mill.

More than one virtuous republican will fail to support the machine ticket prepared for this county this fall.

Witsen.

Harvesting has begun.

Mark Sedgeman has a new drive well.

W. E. Wagner, clerk of the probate court of St. Louis, Mo., arrived last Friday, and is at the Fountain City House for the hay fever season.

W. G. Northrup, of Milwaukee, visited friends in Charlevoix and vicinity last week. Fourteen years ago he was a resident of Banks township.

Mrs. H. G. Edwards leaves today for Manton, Mich., on receipt of a telegram from her daughter, Mrs. Chas. Stoupal, that her husband is ill.

N. B. Sheridan, of Glen Arbor, was in town Wednesday, looking after his business interests. On Tuesday he sailed up to East Jordan in 14 hours.

Mrs. Simpson, who visited her sister, Mrs. Chas. Sea, a few days last week, left Sunday for the upper peninsula where she will join her husband.

Peyton Ranney, a prominent member of the Charlevoix resort association, has been spending a few days at Ionia as a candidate for the state legislature.

Miss Maud Loveday of East Jordan has accepted a position as teacher in a Colorado Presbyterian convent. She is calling on her numerous friends before starting on her western journey.

Miss Mary Wakefield, now in Florida, intended to return to Aichigan during the fall and force epidemic, but we understand that at Jacksonville she was prevented from leaving the city.

W. H. Totten, of Howell, has been visiting Arthur Beattie for the past two weeks, and he is well pleased with the country that he has bought the Blanchard farm in Norwood, and will make that his permanent home and business.

Misses Emma Bross, Rebecca Steele and Laura Greek, three young ladies of Evanston, Ind., who have boarded at Mrs. Beattie's for several weeks, left last week for their home. They report themselves as being well pleased with our town and climate, and say they gained six, eight and ten pounds respectively in weight while here.

Disappointed Rimrods.

Some days ago a number of sportsmen went according to the lake to a renowned fishing excursion. The party was composed of a well known engineer, one of the artists employed on a popular magazine, a printer, a young literary man, and others of lesser note. The programme, as laid down on the start, was, that deer, bear, elk and other game should be shot by the hunters, sketched and engraved by the artist and engraver, and that a full account of the trip should be written by the literary man, set up by the printer, published after the party came back, and sold in monthly numbers, forty-eight in a set, at twenty-five cents each. The nimrods took ammunition enough with them to kill all the game from New Brunswick to Manitoba. After a week of tramping they succeeded in bagging a hedgehog and a crow, and in capturing two bass, "a great many of which would weigh a pound." It is unnecessary to add that the apparatus for sketching, engraving and type setting, which formed no inconsiderable portion of the baggage, was not unpacked.—Rochester Post Express.

THE CAMPAIGN.

An Eloquent Speech by Senator Daniel W. Voorhees at Terre Haute.

A Scathing Review of the Republican Record on Financial Legislation for Twenty-five Years.

The Party Which Makes and Cherishes Great Millionaires Shown Not to Be the Friend of Labor.

MY FELLOW-CITIZENS: I propose tonight to show that the history of the Republican party on the subject of taxation is the history of premeditated, concerted crimes against the laboring people of the United States. It proposes to show that the Republican party has been guilty for a century approximate to more than a quarter of a century of robbery to the candid observer as a vast, well-planned, well-executed conspiracy for the establishment, the growth, and the permanent power of monopoly, of arrogant corporation wealth, of idle, undeserved, enormous capital, and of all the enormous profits that result from the combination of these independent to such an un-American system. This system has by law enabled the privileged few to rear from the sweat and tears of toil not their own palaces of marble fit for kings and emperors, and to uphold their massive millions in the great world of show and parade on both sides of the ocean.

The Republican conspiracy to fasten the bane of the money power in the body or American labor and to enable gigantic usury and legalized robbery to sure the blood of every American industry, has been in full step when in authority, to make the under currency in 1861 the greenback, the immediate result of which was to discriminate against and degrade in the money markets of the world by being made nonnegotiable for duties and imports and for interest on the bonded debt of the United States. It will be remembered that this currency was issued over our protest without a single amendment and design, nor more far-reaching, oppressive and destructive to the rights of labor in its results than this. A national currency, made a legal tender for the payment of every laboring man, woman and child, and for the privileges, offerings, blood and tears of every laborer, under and after which the faithful laborer was refused and dishonored all the way from the Government itself for the very purpose of depressing and degrading the value of labor and its products. This was done, as described at the time, by Thaddeus Stevens and others, in order to enable the powerful institutions, the promoters of the gold days of Wall street and elsewhere, to buy up the government bonds at from forty to ninety-five cents on the dollar—for government bonds, bearing interest in gold, and from the first at par with gold, and for the several years past from 10 to 30 cents above par. Dr. you wonder and ask me for a moment how much this stupendous job of robbery, which I have described, cost the people of this country in paying something for absolutely nothing? It has been often demonstrated by the simplest rules of arithmetic that the Indian brokers and heavy capitalists, during the years of the war and immediately after, made a fortune by speculating in government bonds worth 100 cents and more on the dollar in gold coin, received a naked speculation bonus, for which they paid not one farthing, of many $1,000,000,000.

I do not believe any other people on the globe, except perhaps the Russians, would have tolerated such robbery, or, in the language of Congress of July, 1866, whereby the plain, explicit, and clearly understood letter of the legislative contract for the payment of the bonded national debt was openly and contemptuously set aside, and other and different terms inserted, fraudulently and without authority of law, in place of the 'six-twenty-five' bonds. By one dishonest stroke of a dishonest pen, guided and aided by the dishonest leaders of a great party, the debt which labor had so pay was swollen in per amount, and extended in time, to the great benefit of the bondholders, of which number, earth, and hell will in due time and in their own way take judgment. It constituted a black and infamous forgery by writing into the face of an already duly executed and binding obligation a most unrighteous falsehood. The great conspiracy of 1866 was thus fully set up, and the robbery of the laboring people of this country was begun. It committed a crime against the American people of which honest men, and all the good men of both parties, will very lake jurisdiction. It committed a crime against the laboring people of every nation and which will for the privileges, offerings, blood and tears of every laborer, under and after which the faithful laborer was refused and dishonored all the way from the Government itself for the very purpose of depressing and degrading the value of labor and its products. A FEAST OF FIGURES.

Something That Will Prove of Interest to the Voters of All Political Parties.

How the Tariff Taxes Affect the Industries in Which the People Are Mostly Interested.

(From the Grand Rapids Democrat.)

There is but one way to get at a pro or unsettled question of political economy, and that is to go immediately before the people and that is to cash vouchers to take paper and pencil and candidly figure out in what it affects him, how it affects his town, his county and his State.

For the purpose of enabling each voter to do this we give the following list of articles on which duties are levied by the tariff taxes in various ways and based on the amount of money and the raise or duty paid. The last column gives the number of cents duty on each dollar's worth of goods imported. Many this table will astonish, and some will, we hope, cause a change of views by this tax. The figures are taken from the American Almanac for 1886, edited by A. S. Syndford, Librarian of Congress, page 81 to 84, and are for the year ending June 30, 1885:

	Value of Imports	Duties Paid	Rate of Duty

FARM AND GARDEN.

TIMELY TOPICS CONSIDERED IN A PRACTICAL MANNER.

Labor Saving Devices Invented, Tested and Described by Wide Awake Farmers—A Fodder Stand Worthy of Imitation—A Simple Corn Crib Ventilator.

Numbered with other seasonable farm conveniences that have been invented and tested by ingenious farmers is the one represented in the annexed cut. This is a device for drawing fodder or corn and fodder. Its great advantage, says the Indiana correspondent who described it in Rural New Yorker, is that a very large load can be put on it. It is also claimed for it that the contrivance can be conveniently loaded by one man, and that it is very cheap.

A CHEAP FODDER STAND.

A A are scantlings or poles of any desired length, each having two two inch holes for the standards, C C C C, and three two inch holes for the cross pieces, B B B. The standards may be as high as one may wish. The cross pieces should be the width of your wagon.

E is a board two inches thick, and ought not to be less than fourteen inches wide and twelve feet long, with a three-quarter inch hole in one end and with cleats nailed across to step on.

F is a piece of scantling two by four inches, spiked to the side pieces just in front of the bind standards, having a three-quarter inch hole in the middle. E is attached to F by a five-eighth inch bolt dropped through the hole in the end of E and middle of F; the other end of E drags on the ground. The bottom of F should be made of loose plank laid on the cross pieces B.

Take an armful of fodder, walk up the plank, lay it across the bed at the front end, put the next armful on top of the first with the butts in the opposite direction. Begin unloading at the hind end of the wagon, and continue to load till the space between the standards are full. In this way it is not necessary to step on the fodder at all.

FIG. 2—CORN CRIB VENTILATOR.

The corn crib ventilator shown at Fig. 2 was also originally described in the journal from which the above was taken. The illustration is so plain as to require little description. At the bottom of a crib a spikehole face board is nailed, then pieces of joist four or five feet long spiked to it. As the top a six inch plank is placed and the boards are nailed at the sides. The crib is eight feet wide.

The French Coach Horse.

The popularity of the French coach horse is rapidly increasing to meet the demand for fine coach horses in this country. A prominent exporter of large carriage and coach horses said recently on the subject: "My opinions and experience of twenty-five years in the handling and shipping of all kinds of horses is that there is one kind of horse that is profitable for the farmer to raise besides the draught, and that is a fine, large carriage horse with kneeing style, size, quality and action. This kind of a horse has been almost totally neglected, and there never was such a scarcity as today of suitable goblings for the eastern markets and for export. Just think of it! It takes us six months to get a shipment suitable for European markets, and our last shipment averaged in cost over $500 per head. Now, I believe that gentlemen pay in this country for nice, high stepping pairs. There are two profitable breeds for the farmer—the draught and coach horse—and I believe the French coach horse comes nearer the wants than any breed yet introduced to America."

The Wool Taste in Mutton.

C. M. Clay, of Kentucky, writing on the very common belief that when sheep are fitted for mutton with the fleece on them the mutton is rendered unpalatable on account of the wool taste, says it is all nonsense about the wool affecting the taste of the meat. He explains that "the bad taste is caused by the excretions of the bowels going into the circulation when the sheep are killed that gives the wool flavor. The intestines must be taken out as quickly as possible; then you may wrap it in wool and lay it on the ice for days, and if there be any wool taste I will eat the sheep, skin, wool and all." Indiana Farmer, commenting on the above, says that if mutton is treated as Mr. Clay says it does need be no concern as to the wool taste.

Foot Rot in Sheep.

As soon as lameness is perceived the animal should be examined. All loose and diseased horn must be cut away with a sharp knife, and any excessive growth of horn at the toes removed, so that whatever pus or matter is found beneath the horn may be able to escape. Many remedies are recommended with which to wash the diseased parts. One method is to wash the foot clean after the diseased parts have been cut away with carbolic soap and warm water twice per week, and after each washing apply the following mixture: Oxide of copper, four ounces; aqua ammonia, acetic acid, three ounces, and honey, eight ounces. This mixture can be applied with a little blue or tow.

The Four Courses of Chicken.

At first the chicken stuffed and roasted brown, With apple sauce and Zinger all complete, And then the Prisoner, all covered over With thickened butter, pour'd with lambs lard to take the bones. And then what may be left is done up into pies, with pastry tops Just fitted to the dish. Last course of all Of this eventful bird is chicken soup—The process having cut up the remains Of chicken, lard, tails, necks bones and everything.

TWO PLANS FOR KEEPING GRAPES.

How to Preserve Late Varieties at Small Expenditure of Labor and Money.

There are a number of methods in use for keeping the late varieties of grapes so as to lengthen the season for this fruit. These methods all depend for their success on the same conditions. In the first place, it is desirable that the fruit shall retain its bloom, hence great care in handling it is necessary to prevent the branches coming in contact with each other. It is also necessary that imperfect or bruised berries be clipped from each bunch.

Following are two simple but effective systems that may be utilized to advantage, whether the amount of fruit to be saved be large or small. Both plans admit of the free circulation of an even temperature around each bunch and prevent the same from rubbing against each other.

The first method is to take new sloe or soap boxes, or any other box of about the same size, and nail cleats on the inside of the ends or sides about one inch from the top, and between them bars at various distances, as required by the varying length of the bearing shoot cutting. The bars are made by nailing a small strip on top of each. As late as possible, cut off the bearing shoots containing the bunches, with pruning shears, and shorten them so that they will go between the end of the box and the top part of the bar, resting on the bottom part, thus hanging their bunches in their natural position. By this method the boxes can be handled without shaking the shoots off the bars, carried to the light, each bunch examined as winter advances, decaying berries or bunches removed, and the best kept without any moldy taste, as is so common when they are packed solid.

The second plan is equally simple. All that is required are two or more iron or wooden hoops, two lengths of wire to every two hoops to hold them in position and some string and the contrivance is complete. When hung up it is the easiest thing in the world to trim out decayed or useless berries; in fact, the stock of grapes can be kept in good condition without even shifting the contrivance at all.

The Value of Red Clover.

The value of red clover is too well known to need much said about it. It can grow easily in any of the southern states, and land should be planted with clover to rest and fertilize it, and by thus rotating between clover for two or three years and cultivated crops two years, the condition of the land would be gradually improved, larger crops secured, and the clover would pay better while it occupied the land than almost any crop that could be grown, to say nothing of the great saving of expense in buying fertilizers, necessary under the present system of continually using the ground with the same crops.

Simple Remedy for Thumps in Hogs.

A correspondent in Southern Live Stock Journal writes: "Allow me to give a remedy for thumps in hogs: Give one tablespoonful of vaseline, petroleum jelly (not carbonized). Repeat every twenty-four hours as long as necessary. The great advantage of the remedy, aside from its efficacy, is the ease with which it is given. It is a job to drench a hog, but this vaseline slips down so easily that there is no time for strangulation. In extreme cases it is best to blister under neck and between front legs with cantharidal collodion.

Manure and Compost Piles.

The importance of saving manure and preventing its waste is generally understood, but the work is not generally performed in a systematic and economical manner. If manure is not drawn out and spread on the fields as fast as it accumulates, it is frequently thrown out or wheeled out and discharged in irregular heaps, where it it chances to become too dry by heating, or is washed into too liquid a condition by rains, the defect cannot be very easily corrected. If the liquid which has been saved is to be spilled or poured on, it is often done too irregularly.

A MODEL MANURE PILE.

Fig. 1 in the cut represents, says Country Gentleman, a manure pile where these objections are avoided. When the manure is wheeled out, the foundation is laid or the base formed in the shape of a regular parallelogram, by driving stakes at the corners; and if the pile is a large or long one, inserting stakes occasionally at the sides. A wide plank, as shown at Fig. 3, allows the wheelbarrow to discharge its load, and one or more pieces of plank laid on the top facilitate the work. In this way the manure is wheeled out and placed where it is wanted, with less labor than for an irregular heap. It is not necessary to make this heap very high, if suitable length or breadth is given to it.

Such a pile may be made more or less into a compost heap, by spreading even alternating layers of any absorbent, such as turf, loam, peat, &c. The thinner these layers are the more perfectly the ingredients will be intermixed when the heap rots down. Manure which is well worked together and pulverized after decomposition is more valuable than manure in unmixed chunks or lumps, and is more evenly spread on land.

A very important requisite in saving and in manufacturing manure is to preserve the right degree of moisture in the heap. If a large quantity of straw litter has been used, it will need some liquid addition, either by leaving it exposed to rains or by turning the liquid manure upon it. These requirements, which will vary greatly with circumstances, will decide whether to place the manure heaps under spacious sheds or otherwise. This care will be particularly needed in the smaller heaps for garden use. In Fig. 1 hopper like holes are represented, which have been cut with a sharp spade after the heap was completed, into which water or other liquids may be poured to impart the right degree of moisture, to be ascertained by inspection.

This systematic management will easily admit the small addition of other fertilizers in thin layers, such as ground bone, plaster, lime, ashes and guano, to give additional strength. The manure thus manufactured will be of great value for many purposes, although a large proportion will be most conveniently and economically applied by spreading at once on the fields as it accumulates from the stables.

BENEDICT VINDICATED.

The Government Printing Office—The Majority Report of the Investigation.

MR. CHAMBER concluded his speech in the Senate on the Louisiana election frauds, the 2d. The resolution pertaining thereto was laid aside without action. A resolution was adopted by the Senate by unanimous vote, the 2d, that the United States be represented in the Paris Exposition by a commission of five, to be appointed by the President. The Senate took up the resolution reported from the Judiciary Committee, the 2d, relating to the suppression of polygamy in Utah. Senator Jackson Miss.) municipal election in Utah had concluded that the Senate adjourned. In the House Mr. Rice of Ohio (Dem.) presented the majority report of the special committee that has been investigating the Government Printing Office. It is a comprehensive defense of Mr. Benedict's management and a comparison between the Republican and Democratic methods, seeking to show that there has been much economy and good service under the latter. Mr. Benedict assumed charge, it is generally understood, at a time when a change was imperative, and very high praise is made against him. A House resolution to dispense report on the army appropriation bill after a vote of 30 to 61, and further instructed on the Republican side, was defeated. The House passed the Senate bill authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Rapid Transit Canal, seventh (Kan.) bill relating to the Indian Territory, bill relating to the forfeiture of lands in Wisconsin are subject to the operation of the act of May 5, 1864, granting to railroad companies the odd sections of land within the public lands of the United States. The House then adjourned, the 2d, after a long and tedious session. No progress was made, however, as the point of order against the Speaker's constitutive decision of a question of fact, though the point of order against Lou Frazier's election was sustained.

FATAL BOILER EXPLOSION.

Fourteen Men Killed Outright and Many Others Injured.

The Whitney Paper Mill, at Menasha, Wis., caught fire in the engine-room about midnight, and an hour later, when several hundred persons were watching the flames, a superheated steam rotary boiler, suddenly cooled by streams of water thrown by the firemen, exploded, and the entire mass, weighing about ten tons, was blown through the throng a distance of about 300 feet, killing fourteen men outright and injuring about as many more. The dead were all poor workmen, and were buried at the city's expense. The mill, which was valued at $65,000, and insured for $31,000, will be rebuilt.

ST. LOUIS' MAYOR HONORED.

He Receives the Democratic Nomination for Governor.

The Missouri Democratic State Convention, in session at Jefferson City, nominated this ticket:

For Governor, Mayor David R. Francis of St. Louis; Lieutenant Governor, Stephen H. Claypool of Jasper County; Secretary of State, Alexander Dockery; Auditor, J. M. Seibert; Treasurer, B. Nowell; Attorney General, John M. Wood.

The platform indorses the St. Louis ticket and platform; indorses the Mills bill; condemns trusts and monopolies, and deplores the death of Governor Hendricks.

Racing for Congress.

The Hon. Benjamin Butterworth has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the First Ohio district.

John A. Caldwell, Judge of the Circuit Police Court, has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Second Ohio District.

The Democrats of the Ninth Kentucky District have nominated Thomas H. Paynter for Congress.

The Republicans of the Congressional Convention, Third Indiana District, nominated Col. Stephen D. Bayless of Salem.

The Republicans of the Fifth Ohio District have nominated Wilson J. Vance for Congress.

Republicans of the Seventh Michigan District have nominated Gen. William Ketchum for Congress.

Republican conventions have been held in the Fifth and Sixth Congressional Districts of Maryland. Sidney E. Mudd, of Port Tobacco, Charles County, was nominated in the Fifth, and Louis E. McComas, of Hagerstown, Washington County, was nominated in the Sixth.

The Rejected Fisheries Treaty.

The President sent a long message to Congress, the 23d, in regard to the rejected fisheries treaty, and recommending that power be given the executive to suspend the laws allowing the transit in bond across United States territory of goods going to or coming from Canada. In the House the message was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Killed by His Rival.

James Pedro was shot and instantly killed at Indianapolis, Ind., by Edward Huffman. Both men had been paying attentions to a young woman, and jealousy is supposed to have inspired the crime. Pedro and the girl were to have been married. Huffman was captured after a long chase and lodged in jail. He claims the killing was accidental.

A Disappointed Editor.

Night Editor Bennington, of the New York Herald, was to have been married to Miss Lottie Fanning, of Allegheny, Pa., but a short time before the hour for the ceremony the young woman married another adorer, Dr. E. C. Marcalo, hospital steward of the Western Penitentiary. A stormy scene followed her announcement to Lennington of her marriage.

HOARD HONORED.

The Granger Elements Triumphed in the Wisconsin Republican Convention.

The Wisconsin Republican Convention met at Milwaukee, and nominated their State ticket as follows:

Governor—W. D. Hoard.
Lieutenant Governor—A. W. Ryman.
Secretary of State—Ernest G. Timme.
Treasurer—Philip Cheek, Jr.
Attorney General—Frank Cantwell.
Superintendent of Education—O. R. Thayer.
Insurance Commissioner—Adley Petersen.

W. D. Hoard, the nominee for Governor, is a farmer of Jackson County. Against him were pitted nearly all the prominent politicians of the State, but he was selected on the first ballot. A platform was adopted which indorses the Republican national platform and candidates, praises Republican administration of State affairs, and eulogizes Gov. Rusk.

POLITICAL DOINGS.

Republicans and Democrats Name Their Favorites for Congress.

The Democrats of the Fifth Missouri District have nominated John C. Tarsney, of Kansas City, for Congress.

Phil C Coghlan, Jr., has been nominated for Congress by the Union Labor party in the Eighth Missouri District, and Michael Radford in the Tenth Missouri District.

Robert M. Hardey has been renominated by the Republicans of the Seventh Pennsylvania Congressional District.

Gen. John E. Roller, a rich lawyer of Harrisburg, Va., has announced himself as a candidate for Congress in the Seventh Virginia District as a protectionist against the Hon. Charles O'Ferrall, the Democratic candidate.

J. P. Bolliver has been nominated for Congress by the Tenth Iowa District Republicans.

The Republicans of the Eighth Wisconsin District renominated Nels P. Haugen at Menominee for Congress.

The Democratic Convention of the Second Alabama Congressional District have renominated H. A. Herbert by acclamation for his seventh successive term.

The Ninth Indiana District Republicans renominated Joseph B. Cheadle, at Lafayette, for Congress.

Congressman Conger has been renominated by the Republicans of the Seventh Iowa District.

The Fifth Ohio District Republicans nominated Col. Wilson Vance for Congress, at Fostoria.

The Hon Tom N. Braxton, a rich and popular farmer, was nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Second Indiana District, at West Baden.

Judge Owens, of Logansport, was renominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Tenth Indiana District, at Rochester.

THE GOVERNMENT'S FINANCES.

The Appropriations Made by Congress for the Present Fiscal Year.

A statement has been prepared at the Treasury Department in regard to the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, made at the present session of Congress in the regular annual appropriation bills. It is as follows:

	As passed by House.	As passed by Senate.
Bills finally passed	$326,735,150	$323,135,150
Sundry civil appropriation bill	32,000,000	32,000,000
Army appropriation bill	24,620,300	28,956,300
Navy appropriation bill	30,000,000	30,000,000
Deficiencies (pending House)	3,725,003	3,740,003
Deficiency (pending in House)	3,551,614	3,530,434
Totals	$420,707,045	$419,229,737
Permanent and indefinite appropriations	115,646,799	115,646,799
Total appropriations	$536,353,844	$534,876,536
Estimated revenue (including $37,865,738 for postal revenue)	$460,562,734
Estimated deficiency	$75,791,110
Estimated surplus	$26,000,300

based on House appropriations, and $14,692,219 on Senate appropriations.

IOWA POLITICS.

The Republican State Convention at Des Moines Select a Ticket.

The Republican State Convention of Iowa met at Des Moines and placed in nomination the following ticket:

For Secretary of State—Frank D. Jackson.
For Auditor—J. A. Lyons.
For Treasurer—O. P. Twombly.
For Supreme Judge—C. T. Grange, Allamakee County.
The Attorney General—J. T. Stone, Council Bluffs.
For Railroad Commissioners—F. T. Campbell, Spencer; Smith John Mahin.
Electors at Large—Ex-Governor Stone, Col. Stephenson.

A long platform was adopted which indorses the Republican national nominees and platform; commends Gov. Larrabee's administration, declares adherence to the principles of legislation in behalf of railroads, and indorses the railway legislation of the present legislature; congratulates the people on the temperance legislation and the results of the prohibitory law; favors gold, silver, and greenbacks as currency; denounces acts of the Democratic Congress and administration, and laments the death of General Sheridan.

INCREASED CONFIDENCE.

The Business Situation of the Country Improved.

Bradstreet's, in its review of last week, says:

Special telegrams furnish evidence of increased confidence East and West, as to the prospect for the autumn's trade. There is also a moderate improvement in distribution at New York and Philadelphia in dry goods and in wool, as well as at St. Louis, New Orleans, Chicago, St. Paul, and San Francisco, towns. At Kansas City orders received are larger than the previous week's operations, which were expected to prove a great deal. Reports concerning the crops are more favorable than heretofore, as are a trifle more views from England and France. It is more than likely that United States, Russian, and Indian reserve stocks of wheat will be drawn upon to the extent of 45,000,000 to 75,000,000 bushels this year. The Texas cotton crop sends rain, and business in the cotton belt is improving. Business at Pittsburg, Cleveland, Cincinnati, St. Louis, St. Joseph, St. Paul, and Detroit. The New York Produce Exchange is unsettled and lower on favorable wheat prospects, though early in the week it was higher. The Dun's Journal summarizes the failures for the month of August, much of which was in railroads for January to date are about doubling the first half of 1886 as against 1887, and comparing the first half of 1886 as against increases of 7 and 11 per cent. The reports of failures for August, 1887, in the United States and Canada has been little more than half as many as last week, and little more than half as many as last July. To date it is 1,000 in advance of last year.

WESTERN WAYS.

Masked Men Deal Out Summary Justice at Guide Rock, Neb.

Billy Cole has been lynched at Guide Rock, Neb. Ever since the shooting of Thomas Montgomery and Charlie Grant at Talbott's Hall, at Guide Rock, the friends of the wounded men have sworn vengeance, but the prisoner was so closely guarded to prevent any attempt at lynching that it was thought best to wait until the officers should be convinced that there was no danger, and so relax their vigilance. The officers fell into the trap laid for them, and the vigilants were successful in carrying out their plot and Cole was strung up. As soon as he was dead the masked men quietly disappeared, leaving no clew as to their identity.

A NOTED MAN'S DEATH.

Governor Morris Passes Away at Barnsdale-on-the-Sound.

Governeur Morris, a member of the famous old family of that name, died at Barnsdale-on-the-Sound, L. I., aged 75. He was a grandson and namesake of the famous Gouverneur Morris, who was the youngest member of the first Continental Congress, and founder of the American system of money. He was one of the earliest projectors and constructors of the Erie railroad, and he was also one of the originators of the Illinois Central and Iowa system of roads. His mother was a niece of Thomas Jefferson.

JUDGE WILSHIRE DEAD.

The Ex-Chief Justice of Arkansas Dies in Washington.

Judge William W. Wilshire died at his home in Washington recently from exposure while on the train. During the war he served in the Union army as a major of volunteers. He was appointed Chief Justice of Arkansas in 1868, which office he resigned three years later. He was elected on the certificate of election to the Forty-third Congress, but his seat was contested and his competitor was declared elected. In 1874 he was elected to the Forty-fourth Congress.

GEN. BOULANGE ELECTED.

He Receives a Majority of 34,723 in the Department of Somme.

A Paris special states that Gen. Boulanger has been elected to the Chamber of Deputies in the Department of Somme by a majority of 34,723. He also headed the polls in the Charente and Nord departments. The announcement of the figures caused great excitement in Paris.

Allectrative Blaze.

At Rondout, N. Y., fire destroyed a malthouse belonging to Niedlinger, Schmidt & Co., and two large ice-houses owned by the Brewers' Ice Company of New York. At South Rondout a portion of Hiltenbrandt's lumber yard was burned. The total loss is estimated at $200,000.

A Wife Murderer Hanged.

Alexander Wood was hanged at Blackfoot, Idaho, for the murder of his wife in March, 1885. He was sentenced to be hanged July 31, but, with Williams, who was hanged on that day, broke jail and was not recaptured until the time had gone by.

Shot His Wife for a Burglar.

Isaac Spencker, a merchant of Kansas City, Mo., was aroused by his wife early in the morning, and informed that there were burglars in the store. A moment later a shadow crossed the door, and Spencker fired, fatally wounding his wife.

A Bloody Affray.

At a party in Bloomfield, Pa., August Blettner and Frank Waltzer, two German, quarreled about a young lady. Waltzer assaulted Blettner with a knife, inflicting a fatal wound. During the affray the girl was badly cut on the wrist.

Railroad Matters.

FOR THE LADIES.

A Palatable Olla Podrida Prepared Specially for Our Fair Readers.

Fashions in Dress, Notes on Housekeeping Affairs, and Other Topics of Interest.

[NEW YORK CORRESPONDENCE.]

A depiction of summer fashions for children is incomplete if mention is not made particularly, and to make pleasant pictures for readers generally. Nothing seen in a round of the watering places is more agreeably striking than the modishly clad youngsters. Charming that would be grotesque on a woman are unceasingly picturesque on the belle of a single decade, and no experiment of toilet seems too bold for adoption on her behalf. One of the prettiest of the misses in a hotel at the seashore just now is a fatherless child whose frolics are all in mourning. There is a fad among the little folks, by the way, for lambs as pets, and this child at the time of the sketch, was lugging a lamb nearly as long from head to heels as herself. But it is her frolic in a black-and-white dress as an example in juvenile mourning. The black collar, cuffs, and lower border of the white dress were made of lustreless crêpe. Many object to all indications of sadness in a child's clothes, but the fashion is nevertheless followed to some extent. It is either black is worn the material may be India silk, cambric, or nuns veiling, but never crape. Clear white is the dress mourning, if it be a bleak white. Cream-white is far more indicative of mourning than pink would be, according to many, as it may be a blue shade of white. Nainsook white dresses are hemstitched, and embroidered, or with tucks and insertion, but never with an embroidery or lace. Mourning hats for children are trimmed with lace, white grosgrain ribbon or dead white flowers. The stockings with these toilets must be plain black, or white and black striped.

But black and white stripes in themselves do not mean bereavement, this summer, any more for youngsters than for grown women. They appear in all sorts of fabrics and are made up in all sorts of ways. The larger girl in the second picture wears striped flannel made up in a sailor-like suit, and her cap is a white crocheted Tam-o'-Shanter in the Jersey suit would not strike you as being clad in a costly way. The suit was felt and her frock gingham. The hat is of straw, and the visible articles upon her would not aggregate ten dollars. But they cost her able-pursed father forty times that sum, if one of the expert hands of a Fifth avenue modiste. "I was an everyday costume for Adele—something simple, but be-coming," said the mother. She made no mention of price. Why should she? Monsieur looked critically at the girl. A plenty of blonde hair, banged across her forehead and hanging thick over her shoulders, was the distinguishing characteristic. The pretty white felt hat would look well on that head. The gingham frock of red and white would harmonize with the hair and the hat, besides, that particular shade of rose was a very fashionable one and had not yet gone out into the summer down at Nonquit, where a great Brazilian died. A colony of artists have placed there, and have peopled that a number of city children's faces is in sight there, and many of the aspects of the youngsters have tempted the pencils of my artistic acquaintances. The sympathetic lines of the mothers, perhaps, to special endeavors, will be the chief little girls and boys are often fit for pictures.—Chicago Long Life.

Fashion Notes.

MILITARY braiding remains in vogue.

CHINA crape is liked for dinner-gowns.

BRIGHT red will be much worn in the fall.

YACHTING dresses are made in Directoire style.

SLEEVES are steadily growing fuller in the shoulder.

PLAIDS are no longer made on well-made underclothing.

THE tones of shoes are more pointed than they were last summer.

COMBINATIONS of mohair and watered silk are very fashionable.

STRIPED flannel for petticoats are now liked better than plain ones.

SHIRRED sun bonnets of white lawn are worn by some handsome girls.

A PRETTY best summer dress for a small boy is of cream-white flannel, trimmed with a white sailor hat with a blue ribbon band.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

WHEN the fisheries treaty was taken up in the Senate on the 17th, the Chair ordered, on the motion being made, that the debate on the treaty should close at 6 o'clock on the 20th, the day the treaty having the last day to run, and that on the last, at 12 o'clock, the Senate should sit upon the treaty, all amendments should be disposed of, ratification, if ratification should be agreed to, to be the last question. Some time in debating a resolution requiring the removal of all obstructions to navigation in the Mississippi River above Vicksburg, the resolution was finally referred to the Commerce Committee, by a vote of 29 to 25. The Senate then took up the resolution reported from the Judiciary Committee, the 20th, relating to the suppression of polygamy in Utah, and after a long debate, in which Senators Hoar, Edmunds, and others participated, the resolution was passed. Further action on the Fisheries Treaty was then postponed, and the Senate adjourned. In the House, the Speaker announced the new committee on the Mississippi Levees, and the House then proceeded to the consideration of the Senate bill to dispose of the surplus in the Treasury, for general pension legislation, but the votes on closed the fate of a quorum. The House then adjourned, the 20th, after an exciting session, during which the Speaker decided against the point of order that the Senate bill should be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and that the Speaker's decision was sustained by a vote of 127 to 61. The Senate, the 21st, by a vote of 37 to 15, passed the House bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Rapid Transit Canal, in Dakota. The Senate passed a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for certain lands in Wisconsin, which had been granted to the State for the benefit of the Menomonee Indians, but which had been sold by the State before the patents were issued. The Senate then took up the Fisheries Treaty, and after a long and animated debate, the Senate adjourned without action on the treaty. In the House, the Speaker announced the following committee of conference on the Senate bill to provide for the disposition of the surplus in the Treasury, namely: Messrs. Morrison, Springer, and Randall, on the part of the House, and Messrs. Beck, Coke, and Platt, on the part of the Senate. The House then passed the Senate bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Rapid Transit Canal, in Dakota, without a division, and passed the Senate bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for certain lands in Wisconsin, which had been granted to the State for the benefit of the Menomonee Indians, but which had been sold by the State before the patents were issued. The Senate then took up the Fisheries Treaty, and after a long and animated debate, the Senate adjourned without action on the treaty. In the House, Mr. Urland, from the Committee on Rules, reported back the Senate bill to provide for the disposition of the surplus in the Treasury, with a resolution providing that the Senate bill be taken from the Speaker's table, with the House amendment to the Senate bill to pay the bounties of the soldiers of the late war, and that the House insist on its amendment and request a conference thereon, and that the Speaker appoint the conferees on the part of the House. Mr. Springer, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back the Senate bill to provide for the disposition of the surplus in the Treasury, with a resolution providing that the Senate bill be taken from the Speaker's table, with the House amendment to the Senate bill to pay the bounties of the soldiers of the late war, and that the House insist on its amendment and request a conference thereon, and that the Speaker appoint the conferees on the part of the House. LANSING has eight democratic clubs and a democratic marching club 500 strong.

ROSWELL LEAVITT, of Bellaire, was nominated for state senator by the republicans, at Traverse City, on Tuesday.

HAVE you, as a democrat, done anything towards supplying some doubtful voter with a paper that will post him on the tariff question—the only issue in this canvass?

IRON men are not all protectionists. E. S. Noble of Elk Rapids is out for Cleveland and tariff reform. He insists that a lower tariff will not necessarily reduce wages.

THE campaign text book for 1888 is now ready, and will be furnished on application to the national democratic committee, 10 West 29th st., New York City. Price $1.00. In quantities of five or more 50 cents each.

"DON'T be deceived" by the sophistries of protectionists. The whole system is one of bonus to the manufacturer, and the manufacturer will not pay one cent more in wages than he is compelled to when buying his labor in the open market of the world. Study for yourselves, and "don't be deceived."

ALLEN G. THURMAN opened the campaign in Michigan last Thursday with a speech which the yeoman can read as easily as the college president, and which will touch the heart of every thinking man. In that speech the humblest workingman must find the same thoughts that have disturbed his own mind. And to cure the times the simplest reformer will see that Thurman has only the good old remedy of fair dealing, equality and fraternity among men. With the clear mind of a genuine statesman Thurman has touched only on the issue of high or low taxation. It is this question which divides the two great masses of thought in the United States.

H. B. HUDSON, of Manceloma, who has been nominated for congress by the democrats and greenbackers in the ninth district, is about fifty-five years of age. He served as a Michigan volunteer during the war, having been a member of the regiment which captured Jeff Davis and on duty at the time of the capture. After the war he continued his profession as teacher and began the study of law. He was elected prosecuting attorney of Allegan county as a republican, and filled other important offices. In 1877 he joined the greenback party and a few years latter removed to Manceloma, where he has since been elected prosecuting attorney. Mr. Hudson is a popular man, always running ahead of his ticket, a brilliant orator, a close reasoner, and he will give Mr. Chipman a hard campaign. Mr. Hudson was chairman of the recent greenback state convention held in this city.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

A Democratic Revolution.

ELMIRA, Aug. 27.—For the first time in the history of Otsego county the democrats of Elmira township, have made a public demonstration. It was a grand success in every respect. Two Cleveland, Thurman and Burr banners are now floating in the air, one of them from the finest little pole ever raised in the state, 115 feet high and as straight as an arrow. The people turned out and gave us a fine crowd. Hon. H. B. Hudson, of Manceloma, fusion candidate in the ninth district for congress, made a most telling speech in the afternoon, and J. Maurice Finn of Grayling, in the evening portrayed the fallacy of the present tariff. The sounds of victory are in the air in this heretofore republican stronghold.

ORGANIZED FOR VICTORY.

Harmony and Enthusiasm Prevails in the Fusion Camp.

On Tuesday the democratic party of Charlevoix county met in delegate convention at the village hall in Charlevoix, to nominate candidates for county officers.

At the same time the greenback party met at Bartholomew's opera hall for the same purpose. A basis of fusion was agreed upon, and a very satisfactory ticket nominated.

The democratic convention was called to order at 11 o'clock by A. D. Cruickshank, chairman of the county committee, and G. W. Cronter made chairman, and N. N. Card secretary. Committees were appointed as follows:

Credentials—M. M. Burnham, F. E. Bossinger, J. Milo Eaton, O. D. Hilton, W. H. Ellis.
Permanent Organization—J. Milo Eaton, Frank Martinek, Marion Hoskins, Wm. E. Heasley, Wm. C. Grandy.

The committee on credentials reported delegates present as follows:

Bay—Edward Starmer, Christian Snyder.
Bear Lake—Daniel Harrington.
Boyne Valley—Pierce Kinsella, Fred Kaden.
Chandler—Wm. E. Heasley.
Charlevoix—A. D. Cruickshank, G. W. Cronter, J. Milo Eaton, Alex. Cameron, C. H. Ball, Chas. E. Swallow.
Evangeline—Geo. Cudworth, R. M. Cadwell, John Webster.
Eveline—Henry Nowland, John Cobiente, A. B. Noyes, Robert Hood, A. O. Allison.
Hayes—Wm. McNally, Wm. C. Grandy, H. S. Newson.
Hudson—George Lee.
Marion—Arthur Beattie.
Melrose—W. H. Ellis.
Norwood—Jas. O'Brian, O. D. Hilton.
Resort—Not represented.
South Arm—M. M. Burnham, F. E. Bossinger.
Albert Greenman, Frank Martinek, Robert Murphy, S. G. Isaman.
Springvale—Not represented.
Wilson—A. R. Nowland, Marion Hoskins.

Report accepted and adopted.

A committee of five to confer with the greenback convention was appointed, consisting of Messrs. Greenwood, Kinsella, Starmer, Herrington, and Webster.

Convention then adjourned to 2.00 o'clock p. m.

On reassembling after dinner the conference committee reported that the greenback convention desired to nominate sheriff, register of deeds, prosecuting attorney, surveyor, and one coroner.

The convention then went into secret session, excluding all but delegates for a discussion of the basis of division of the ticket. The result of the session was the appointment of a new committee of conference. After the conference, the committee reported an agreement as follows: The democrats to nominate judge of probate, sheriff, clerk, treasurer, and one coroner, and the greenbackers to nominate register of deeds, prosecuting attorney, circuit court commissioner, surveyor, and one coroner. This division was agreed to by the convention.

The convention then proceeded to the nomination of their portion of the ticket by ballot, W. H. Ellis and W. E. Heasley acting as tellers.

The ballot for sheriff gave A. J McLeod 19, Ash F. Herron 12, J. B. Palmiter 1.

For Clerk, A. P. Heasley received 27 and P. Walsh 5.

For treasurer Ben Weaver received 33, there being no opposition.

A motion was made to nominate M. M. Burnham for judge of probate by acclamation. Mr. Burnham objected. The ballot gave Mr. Burnham 30, with no opposition.

For coroner, W. C. Grandy, of Hayes, was nominated by acclamation.

J. Milo Eaton was appointed a committee to notify the greenback convention of the nominations made, and ask their acceptance and ratification.

A committee from the greenback convention reported their portion of the ticket as follows:

Register of Deeds—Orlando Blair.
Prosecuting attorney—E. H. Shepard.
Circuit court commissioner—Jos. M. Clark.
Surveyor—R. K. Robinson.
Coroner—R. Findlay.

On motion the report was accepted and adopted.

Delegates to the senatorial convention were appointed as follows:

C. H. Ball, Charlevoix.
M. M. Burnham, East Jordan.
H. S. Newson, Hayes.
A. P. Herron, Boyne.
E. Shay, Bay Settlement.
W. H. Ellis, Clarion.

Delegates to the representative convention are as follows:

G. W. Crouter and R. W. Kane, Charlevoix.
S. G. Isaman, South Arm.
A. E. Martin, Evangeline.
M. Hoskins, Wilson.
E. C. Plettenpless, Bear Lake.

A new county convention was named as follows:

Bay—Ed. Starmer, Fred Van Auberg.
Bear Lake—E. C. Plettenpless, John Corpon.
Boyne Valley—M. Dickinson, O. H. Marsh.
Chandler—W. E. Heasley, John Mackie.
Charlevoix—A. D. Cruickshank, A. Cameron.
Evangeline—A. E. Martin, J. C. Schaub.
Eveline—A. B. Noyes, Ara Smith.
Hayes—W. C. Grandy, I. Stauffer.
Hudson—W. Gillet, Robert Brodie.
Marion—John H. O'Neil, Geo. Anderson.
Melrose—N. N. Card, J. H. Messler.
Norwood—E. Cook, O. D. Hilton.
Resort—John Williams.
South Arm—F. E. Bossinger, M. M. Burnham.
Springvale—A. P. Heasley, Hiram Mallett.
Wilson—M. Hoskins, Ash F. Herron.

The convention adjourned, after which the county committee held a meeting and elected A. D. Cruickshank chairman and J. Milo Eaton secretary.

So far as we can learn, the ticket is entirely satisfactory, and the candidates go into the canvass without the internal divisions and dissensions that have heretofore split the party to pieces.

The greenback convention met at 11.00 o'clock, at the opera hall, and was called to order by E. H. Shepard secretary of the county committee.

J. B. Palmiter was made temporary chairman and Oscar Tillotson temporary secretary.

Committee on credentials was appointed and a recess taken.

The committee on credentials reported the following delegates:

South Arm—J. B. Palmiter, Orlando Blair, A. Cadwell, James Shear, John McTavish.
Evangeline—E. H. Shepard, J. D. Palmer, A. J. Hall.
Wilson—John Newville, W. C. Burdick.
Hudson—A. L. Simons.
Boyne valley—Robert Findley.
Resort—R. H. Carley, E. S. Morford.
Hayes—Thos. Murray, Oscar Tillotson, Sylvester Mynheer, Joseph Lewis.
Marion—Michael Nowland.
Charlevoix—James Washburn, John Bell, J. M. Clark.
Melrose—Peter Karbahn.
Melrose—Mel Houghtin.
Four townships not represented.

Report accepted.

Oscar Tillotson was made permanent chairman, and Orlando Blair, secretary.

They then proceeded to name a new county committee as follows:

Evangeline—E. H. Shepard.
Hayes—Thomas Murray.
Hudson—A. L. Simons.
Melrose—Geo. L. Mecklland.
Marion—Michael Nowland.
Bear Lake—George Forsythe.
Boyne Valley—Robert Findley.
Bay—John Karcher.
Charlevoix—W. B. Taylor.
Eveline—Peter Karbahn.
Norwood—Mr. Mebstyn.
Resort—E. H. M. Gill.
South Arm—W. F. Palmiter.
Springvale—Fay Andrews.
Wilson—Van E. Newville.
Chandler—Clark Rogers.

James B. Palmiter was made chairman of the county committee and Orlando Blair secretary.

Delegates to the senatorial convention were appointed as follows:

Ben Houghtin, E. R. Morford, Orlando Blair E. H. Shepard, John Bell.

Delegates to the representative convention were appointed as follows:

Robert Findley, Peter Karbahn, Levi Lewis, Wright C. Burdick, Rufus M. Carley, A. J. Hall, W. A. Taylor.

In case a full delegation would not be present at the conventions, those who go were given power to cast the full vote of the county.

The convention then proceeded to nominate by acclamation their half of the ticket as agreed by the committee.

For prosecuting attorney, E. H. Shepard of Boyne, received the nomination.

For register of deeds, Orlando Blair of East Jordan, was nominated.

For Surveyor, Enoch K. Robinson of Boyne Falls, was nominated.

For circuit court commissioner, J. Clark of Charlevoix, received the nomination.

For coroner, Robert Findley of Boyne Falls, was nominated.

The convention then adjourned.

Protection, Germany, and Sunday Labor.

The N. Y. Mail and Express (Rep.) says: "The report from Prussia, covering thirty administrative districts, and relating to over half a million establishments and a million and a half of workers, shows that more than half of the establishments, and over two-fifths of the hands are at work on Sunday." This is one of the beauties of "protection to German labor," Germany being a high protective tariff country.

A movement is on foot to organize a Northern Michigan Agricultural, Horticultural and Industrial society. Are the citizens of the Traverse region ready for such a step? Let us hear the editors of this vicinity express themselves in regard to the matter. Will it not be of great benefit to us? Our columns are open to the discussion of this subject. We understand citizens of Petoskey, East Jordan and other places are favorable to the movement.

W. E. Warren, a railroad contractor, from New York City, arrived yesterday, to look over the line of the D., C. & E. R. R. with a view of making a contract for the whole line. He has looked over the line toward Petoskey, and this morning starts toward Bellaire.

Charley Swallow has a great memory. He met Capt. Clark of Chicago, on the street Friday evening, a man whom he had not seen in twenty years but as boys went to the same school in New York state, and knew his voice instantly. Well, they had quite a long talk.

Capt. Alfred Taylor who has been running the Walker Cryder line between Petoskey and Harbor Springs this summer, was in town Tuesday and states that the boat will probably run the balance of the week when she will probably lay up. Capt. left yesterday for the Soo.

The business men of Cheboygan have taken steps to secure if possible the construction of a railroad from their city to Levering, the G. R. & I station a few miles north of Petoskey. A committee has been appointed to visit Grand Rapids and lay the matter before the citizens and the G. R. & I. officials.

F. L. Kilderhouse of Frankfort, has opened the Bridge Street house and will undertake to make it equal to the best in this region. He will be assisted in his labors by E. B. Hodge who is well acquainted in this vicinity, and will be able to introduce many of our people to the new proprietor.

From what we have heard of Mrs. Beattie since the last JOURNAL was issued, the editor of the Sentinel is well come to his list of "valued friends." During our "early training" we were not permitted to indulge in the billingsgate reported of the egotist and "valued friend," consequently we cannot return his compliments.

F. Lubow had an exhibition in Geo. W. Miller's window one day last week, a revised birds-eye view of Charlevoix, showing in detail nearly every building in town. The recent new buildings are given, including the new Baptist church now in process of construction. Lubow is a natural artist, as the numerous examples of his work will prove.

A. Buttars, F. A. Smith, and Geo. A. Gage are incorporators of a company to handle in Michigan the American Shaved Shingle Machine, with headquarters at Charlevoix. The company are looking for a site here to place two of these machines. The company receives a royalty on all shingles manufactured with their machines, and the Michigan mill will be open market for 15 cents a thousand more than sawed shingles. Here is a chance to assist in establishing an important industry,—one that will bring a goodly number of dollars to Charlevoix pockets.

At the Hilton school house last Saturday evening the democrats of Norwood township held the most harmonious caucus ever held in that township. About 40 men were present, and after the delegates were named, a short time was given to discussion of the political situation. A club is to be organized, and regular meetings held. The following action. O. D. Hilton and Edwin Cook were appointed a committee to provide the speakers and furnish a pole raising at some time in the near future. The caucus was adjourned three cheers for Cleveland, Thurman and tariff reform. The work goes bravely on.

Mrs. Cran of Undine, has gone to Wisconsin for a visit to her old home.

Another Malicious Falsehood.

The Sentinel says "Mr. Hudson has been in many years one of the greenback wheel horses, and in his own county is probably the weakest man that ever ran for an office." That statement cannot be explained by the plea of gross ignorance, it is a deliberate falsehood. In 1884, Mr. Hudson was elected prosecuting attorney of Antrim county by a large some majority, against a majority of 345 for Blaine in the same county. Lying won't save you; "tell the truth, Mr. Sentinel.

An "Old Timer" Instead of a "Fledgling."

An item in Monday's Daily Reporter stated that Col. G. E. Dunbar, of Charlevoix, was a recent convert to democracy, and that gentleman corrected the item the next day with the following note:

CHARLEVOIX, Aug. 27, 1888.

Editor Daily Reporter:

I learn with much surprise through the columns of your paper this morning that I was for many years a consistent republican. It will also be news to my friends. I have always voted the democratic ticket, and so now, as I have been for years, decidedly opposed to being taxed for the special benefit of "our infant industries." And a firm believer in the doctrine of "the greatest good to the greatest number" therefore a democrat. Respectfully yours,

G. EDWIN DUNBAR.

The Puma Hunting Dear.

"The way they get deer," said the old man, "is a caution. Sometimes they lay up along the runs, or on a high rock, and in a bound or two land right on them, without making much fuss, as a stranger man would believe. I'm sticking to facts when I tell you that I have measured forty foot fairly of a mountain lion, and I've heard tell of bigger ones yet. I was up in one of the canyons last winter, and there is a fall of fifty feet. I had the dogs started a lion and chased her up to the fall. It was sheer rock on each side, and she went over it and landed in the bush at the pool—a leap that would have killed any other animal. I've found deer at the bottom, that must have jump and never knew what hurt them.

The leaping capacity of the puma is beyond question, remarkable; and from an elevation it has been known to clear a greater distance than that of which the hunter told us.—C. F. Holder in Amateur Sportsman.

Strewdness of a Boarder.

A gentleman came to me some months ago and, showing good references, said that he had just come to the city, was in reduced circumstances, but had a good situation with a large concern here and would pay board when he was. This was readily granted, and he has ever since boarded with me, but notwithstanding he has borne himself in every way as a gentleman, he has never yet quite paid me up. When his pay day comes he always pays me a portion of his indebtedness, but still there is a balance due me which he has no apparent use, he insists on my keeping a balance due him next time. I asked him the other day what he meant by this and why he did not square up. His answer was that he kept behind in his payments on principle—that he did it to cultivate my courtesy and consideration in the hotel's treatment of him. He said that his debt he owed me was a constant lever which commanded good attention and further indulgence, on the principle probably that people are "send good money after bad," and that he never intended to square accounts until he was ready to leave. I wonder if the rule of selfishness is at the bottom of all our social and business intercourse, as this man's theory would seem to indicate?—Hackleyer in Globe-Democrat.

No Drug to Cure Insomnia.

I have recently met with several cases of insomnia due to over taxation of the American nervous system, and have been requested to prescribe some drug that would be effective to produce sleep and be at the same time harmless.

No such drug exists.

There is not one medicine capable of producing a deep voluntary life that has been working ten hours at high pressure, except to be more or less poisonous. Complaints of cerebral trouble in some form, or opium, has increased in this country to an incredible extent, is still growing, and a large number of Americans go to bed every night more or less under the influence of opium. Sometimes it is not restful nor restorative, and nature stupidly seeks her penalties for violated law, more severe in these cases than in most others.

At the Dinner Table.

The American Anthropologist has positive views about a perfect dinner, thoroughly good in variety, cookery, service, esthetic appliances, delicate chemistry, roses in winter, ice in summer, and guests with educated palates, is the prize and expectation we have of the highest civilization. "Savages eat when they can get food, and eat as long as the food lasts. Civilization may be traced by the shortening hours of refection." That is doubtful, for the rules quoted from the age of Francis I. of France, are better than those now in vogue: "Rise at 5, dine at 9, sup at 5 and couch at 9." The question of grace at meals is traced to the pre-Christian and heathen habit of placating the gods, offering them a share of the food. Herbert Spencer would refer it to the custom of offering a part of each meal to deceased ancestors, and members of the family. Almost all customs cannot be secured new meanings since their origin. —Globe-Democrat.

A Spirited American Lady.

I was recently told a good story about a spirited American lady, for whom a titled female friend had undertaken the delicate mission of inviting for her a number of guests to fill her house at Aescot during the race. Among those guests were numbered seven male actors of the British aristocracy. Two of these personages believed as gentlemen should do, and were all courtesy and amiability to their hostess. The other five acted as the British cad is apt to do under any circumstances, and persistently snubbed the lady under whose roof they were staying. On the return of Mrs. X——to London, she was asked who her guests had been at Ascot. "I had the pleasure of entertaining two gentlemen and five men," was her answer. This reply got abroad, and every one of the seven called upon her afterward to express separately and individually the hope that he had been one of the two gentlemen.—Cor. Philadelphia Telegraph.

A STRONG ARGUMENT.

Hon. J. D. Caton Explains Why He Favors a Revision and Reduction of the Tariff.

An Excess of Protection That Does Not Benefit Labor but Is Instead a Burden Upon Industry.

The Veteran Jurist Approves the Mild Measure of Reform Recommended by President Cleveland.

HON. J. D. Caton, whom a former generation knew as the Chief Justice of Illinois, and who enjoyed a judicial fame and had a degree of confidence and respect which succeeded to any man, stood on the tariff question because he had been misreported in an interview by a Chicago newspaper. He is being quoted among those that of his younger years, but he letter is addressed to and published in the Burlington Hawkeye. The venerable judge says:

CHICAGO, ILL., Dec. 1, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: I am sorry that an interview with me should appear in several particulars I find misrepresents my views rather egregiously. It is not true that I approve the President's recent message in stating that I did not approve the action of the last Congress in recommending a reduction of the tariff so as reduce the income as to meet the expenses of an economical administration of the Government; but in doing this a due regard should be had to protection to the industries. But I do not believe it is true that the great body of the American people are in favor of a protective tariff, which is a conservative recommendation. As it is, there are not wanting those in the ordinary walks of life who would scarcely be deceived by the deliberate purposes of free-trade measures and who would oppose a free-trader, which means, and is so intended to and the free schools of all tariff duties was not recommended of all foreign goods. This advocated by a small portion of the people. There is no free trade in the country. The President is not in favor of free trade. In his opinion, if any tariff duties are needed that the present tariff shall be maintained.

To make sense of the advocates for a high tariff is that it enables manufacturers to pay higher wages to their operatives than they could afford to do were they obliged to sell their goods in competition with free foreign goods, that American laborers must be protected from the effects of the pauper labor of Europe. This is the happy cadence in which the advocates of a high tariff seek to catch the votes of our laboring men. Now, I believe it better to let not tend to increase the wages of those skilled workmen engaged in what may be performed by the ordinary laborers who are engaged in the production of goods the price of which is fixed by the amount of the tariff and upon the imported goods. It is only those skilled workmen whose wages are enhanced by the tariff, while the wages of the common laborers, such as mechanics, agricultural laborers, miners, or the rest are not increased a penny by reason of the tariff, whatever they may be. I am convinced when employed by others not engaged in the manufacturing of articles not enhanced The tariff does not prevent importation in any way from the pauper labor of Europe. The wages these paupers are held up and down in the throes of all wage-workers in America to frighten the laborer, and yet I believe it is important to inquire what kind of skilled workmen engaged in the special manufacture of articles are actually enhanced by the tariff, hope to the great mass of laborers room on our farms, in all of our cities, towns and small villages, in all of our mines, in the lower and in the country, and in all the thousand and one ways in which the common and unskilled labor are employed, but one of all these from does the tariff protect from the pauper labor of Europe by a single cent increase of their wages. The protected manufacturer, if he is an honest man, and I think he may say not one in ten thousand, he will tell you that he pays his employed the same wages in all the other walks of life. How false is the cry, then, that the tariff is for the benefit of the laboring man! How false is the cry, then, that the tariff is to protect the American laborer from the pauper wages, when not one in a thousand can possibly receive any benefit from it.

I, for one, cannot believe that upon who also the high tariff to protect American labor? really all those engaged in the production of goods, which is and the pauper labor of Europe, no sympathy to spare for the great mass of laborers who quietly toil on and grope without their sympathy or protection. This cry that the tariff is needed to protect the laborer from the competition of foreign labor by increasing their wages for the labor which is left them, but let facing times with half of the workers idle it is disturbed more than a thousand I fel, for not one in a thousand, but one in many thousands. But, enough of this subject. We have lost the time of the tariff. Look at the labor, your carpenters, your masons, your hod carriers, your barn-makers, your teamsters, and in building up your city and in building up your country, and in carrying on its commerce, and point out a single one of all these who are increased by a single cent by reason of the tariff, and if you say there is a farthing in a thousand, point out how in what way it is in creased.

If you find one in five thousand of all these laborers who can point to the tariff as in any possible way increasing his daily wages, then you will find that one engaged in some single branch of a protected infant industry, and you will find that the other 4,999 laborers are receiving two or three times the wages which the great multitude of laborers around them are and with which they are prosperous and contented.

Here, then, you may find an infinitesimal proportion of the laboring men of your city whose wages are increased by reason of the tariff. And these are the laborers that have been telling all the time that the tariff was needed to protect the laborer from the pauper labor of Europe, and who shall blame them if they take their stand with the party of nullification when their claims for all the benefits which the tariff has conferred upon them are so small? Is it their monopolies and all this order of labor by building their employers to take aggregate fortunes from the laboring people by taxes which will only be granted in case of a war, a war of aggression against the rights of an inferior race?

"This may truly be called the aristocracy of labor, to which is applied the strictest laws of primogeniture, in which the common laborers of the country are actually taxed to pay a tribute. Here you have illustrated the influence of the tariff upon the laborer, and the operation of it is conceived. It enhances the wages of but very few to an extravagant extent. While the great multitude it has enriched and position forces without in the lesch increasing the pay of laborers. What is this tariff? It is a policy which gives to the home producer of goods the power to take from the pocket of the consumer of them a tribute equal to the duties imposed from abroad. Who pays this subsidy? Every consumer of these protected goods. Every man who buys a hatchet, or a hammer, a pair of shears, or a knife, or a razor, or any article of iron, pays a higher price for it by the amount of the tariff paid upon the material, or on the manufactured article. Inquire of any of your neighbors who are in the habit of purchasing such goods, and they will tell you that more than 40 per cent. of these tariff duties are paid by laboring men, either farmers or laborers in towns, men who earn their living by their own hands, and the price of nearly everything they buy is increased by reason of the tariff. The laborer, whether he be a farmer or not, has to pay a tariff on the iron and steel, and even the timber which he uses, and this of necessity he must add to the price of the implements, so that the entire burden must fall upon the farmer, who is the great, if not the only, consumer of all the iron and steel of all harvesters or cultivator which need but as per cent. of the tariff on the stock entering into the former, the saving of that 10 per cent. on the cost of his implements would be a loss which he would appreciate, and it would be worth an effort on his part to have it taken off. Now, I ask, is the tariff is an enforced tax and is not but by him who pays it as the burden of a direct tax is felt; that the consumer will pay 10 to the dealer in the increased price of what he buys as well as any tax, then he would to take a Tribune, and see grin it to a tax collector. Think then, if you can, of the impudence of those who explain why we have paid these millions of subsidies every year to protect our domestic manufactories from foreign competition—our home labor against foreign pauper labor. If but 10 per cent. of the tax levied upon the consumers of imported goods ever reach the Treasury on its way from the pockets of the payers to the pockets of the recipients of the subsidy, no one in Congress would dare to vote for the subsidy. All just history shows that the average Congressman has such a horror of the very name of taxation, that he would not vote for a tax equal with anathema, when it is called by its plain, simple name; but give it another name, a sweet sounding name, and he will vote for it with avidity, though it be ten times a subsidy, ten times a tax, and the money be wasted, or worse, worse than wasted.

"I have long stated facts which I invite any candid and truthful man to contradict, and yet these facts alone the President would seem to have been justified in recommending a reduction of the tariff and the establishment of free trade. But he did not do so, and I cordially agree with him. He did not think it would be wise or just to suddenly withdraw all protection from the manufacturers who, under the stimulating influence of the war tariff, had been encouraged and invited to embark their capital in enterprises, the business of which they had never before dared to attempt. These enterprises have been largely successful, and have created a business which had raised up from the necessity of the times, and which, if the tariff should be suddenly cut down, would be left without the ground overwhelmed in ruin, which would be a great, if not a universal, calamity. Recognizing this fact, the President did not propose to withdraw upon which they had so long relied, or even the greater part of it, but only a small portion, and that, indeed, just enough to stimulate them to efforts of self-reliance, to invent or adopt improvements in machinery, and greater economy in their business. Some enterprises had been fostered by subsidies as injurious to the many of them from a fifth to a quarter of a century until now they have become rather giants than dwarfs, and can stand alone without assistance. His policy was to feel them something. Yes, largely yes, but not so much as to cripple with anybody is undoubtedly true, as that these are realizing great profits and filling up large coffers, which, under the stimulating influence of the war tariff, had been encouraged and invited to embark their capital in enterprises, the business of which they had never before dared to attempt. These enterprises have been largely successful, and have created a business which had raised up from the necessity of the times, and which, if the tariff should be suddenly cut down, would be left without the ground overwhelmed in ruin, which would be a great, if not a universal, calamity. Recognizing this fact, the President did not propose to withdraw upon which they had so long relied, or even the greater part of it, but only a small portion, and that, indeed, just enough to stimulate them to efforts of self-reliance, to invent or adopt improvements in machinery, and greater economy in their business. Some enterprises had been fostered by subsidies as injurious to the many of them from a fifth to a quarter of a century until now they have become rather giants than dwarfs, and can stand alone without assistance. His policy was to feel them some-which Mr. Watson had overlooked which made protection, at least, for a time, a necessity to avoid a greater calamity, and for these reasons I have already referred. JOHN DEAN CATON.

GROVER WILL GET THERE.

According to Chairman Brice Mr. Cleveland Will Carry a Great Many Sure Republican States.

Chairman Brice has a very hopeful view of the Democratic prospect. In a conversation at national headquarters in New York recently, he said:

"I am glad to be able to say that we have just received cheering reports from nearly every section of New York, Ohio, Indiana, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Iowa, and Michigan.

"These reports relate to the desperate attempt made by the Republicans to create a diversion in the Democratic ranks, by the publication of the letter which the Republicans seem to have agreed upon a decided unfavorable in those States, and they have tried every means at effecting their purpose—by frauds, pamphlets, subsidized newspapers, and quite supreme wisdom, and when done it would require infinite power to convince all that the action of Congress was for the good of the country. We must then be content with the best we can do.

"I furthermore express as a point which I have already considered, and which I believe to be of great importance, that in connection with our tariff, I state that soon after the publication of the Mills bill I received a letter from a gentleman in Pittsburgh with a personal friend, Mr. Watson, of Glasgow, Scotland, who is a manufacturer of glass, and who imports my silver ore from foreign countries. Watson I remarked to him that he was a free trade Democrat, and that he would be glad to see a reduction of the tariff would be made, and that he would be glad to see a reduction of the tariff would be made, and that he would be glad to see a reduction of the tariff would be made

There are a great many practical building cisterns which give preference to the circular in the accompanying illustration.

An advocate of cisterns as near the shape as possible described recently in Ohio Farmer his cistern, which he makes 8 feet in diameter. To make a compasses, take a strip of lumber 2 inches wide and 4 feet 4 inches long. Bore a ¼ hole 3 inches from each end. This gives you a compasses 4 feet long. Put a pin in one end, to drive into the ground, and a sharpened pin in the other end to make the mark with. Level the surface, drive the pin straight 18 inches, and, raise a circle 8 inches long in diameter, thus giving you a 4 inch shoulder (width of a brick) all around to start the arch on. Dig down from this last circle 3½ feet, gradually widening again to 8 feet. Then commence to lay up in and dig 6 feet deeper, gradually drawing to 6 feet in diameter at the bottom. Finish out the bottom 4 inches lower in the center, to collect the water when cleaning out the cistern. The cut shows a section of the hole when finished. A is top of the ground; B, the 4 inch shoulder, 18 inches below the surface; C, the bulge, 8 feet in diameter and 5 feet from surface; D, the bottom, 6 feet below C, and 11 feet from surface; E, the center of bottom, 3 inches lower than side at D. The jug shape gives the bulge of the water nearer the top, making it easier to pump.

To build the arch commence on the shoulder, at B. Lay the brick in lime mortar, ½ lime and ½ sand. Set the first course of brick thoroughly in mortar, leaving the edge next the bank, to give direction to the arch. Build the arch up until the hole at top is 2 feet in diameter and should finish above the surface of the ground, at O. Cover the outside, or perside of the arch bricks with lime mortar half an inch thick, and the arch is complete. The cistern is now ready for the cement.

Make one bushel of good cement and two buckets of well screened sand. Mix well together, dry, and then add the water and mix to a mortar that can be laid on without running. Commence cementing on the side, at the bottom, being careful not to let the mortar get the least bit hard before putting on; cement hardens rapidly after being wet. Plaster the sides over up to top of arch, 3 inches thick. When nearly dry apply a half inch coat of lime, smooth cement made of half cement and half sand. Now cement the bottom like the walls. Before covering the arch with earth, spread a coat of cement ½ inch thick over the fine mortar on outside of arch; make this coat 3 cements and 1 sand. Fill in the earth and pack it down hard. The arch being six inches above surface of ground will prevent surface water from flowing in. Such a cistern will require 800 bricks, and two barrels of cement, one of lime and the sand, costing about $6 for all.

Two cisterns were built as described and finished in two days, at a cost less than $12 each, and have been in use for 20 years or more. This size holds over 100 barrels of water.

A GOOD CISTERN.

Receipt for Packing Butter.

A good receipt for packing butter is as follows: Churn the butter as nearly sweet as possible and work out all the buttermilk. Make a brine strong enough to bear an egg, and use pounded of sugar and one of saltpeter, bring to a boil and strain. Keep in a new jar; add butter from time to time as made, wrapped in cloths. When the jar is full, weight down and keep in a cool place.

Hanging Barn Doors on Rollers.

The great convenience of sliding or rolling doors on the barn out buildings, says Country Home in well known and in every farmer with a little ingenuity can construct them himself, it can be no reason why these should not be generally adopted.

FIG. 1—BARN DOOR ON ROLLERS.

Fig. 1 represents the sliding doors completed, as applied to the barn; Fig. 2, the manner of applying the rollers to the door and track.

FIG. 2—BARN DOOR ON ROLLERS.

The rollers, track and other trimmings may be obtained at any hardware store. The track is first securely fastened to the edge of an inch or two inch board, about twelve or fifteen inches wide. This is then firmly nailed or spiked to the building, parallel to and even with the top of the doorway, and should extend the width of the door on each side. In order that the doors may run easily, the track should be as level as possible, and open one board. The manner of fastening the rollers of the doors is clearly shown in the engraving, Fig. 2. The doors are placed upon the tracks at the end of the latter, and are prevented from running off by placing a block at the end of the track or upon the side of the door. The track should be protected from the weather by some kind of covering. Two narrow boards nailed together similar to an eaves trough, and fastened to the building above the track, will answer, form a protection from snow, etc.

THE FARMERS' GRIEVANCE.

Paying a Tax on Everything Necessary to Carry on the Work, but Affording Protection in Return for the Product of the Land.

When Bounce was in his 24th year he began courting a farmer's daughter, and before ten months had waxed and waned he married her. While he was in its teens, he had become infatuated with the life of a farmer, and his delight was, to sing with gusto the song ending with the words, "To reap and to sow, to plow and to mow, and be a farmer's boy." Now that he was married, he communicated his desire to his father-in-law, who said: "Yes Bounce, the life of a farmer is full of poetry and luxurious ease. Looking back on my past life, all of which was spent upon the farm, I cannot think of anything that could be more exhilerating and less free from fatigue than the work of a farmer, except that of that dog yonder on the treadmill. I have been on the farm, man and boy, for sixty years, and have nothing to show for my life's work but the same old farm, minus the stumps and stones that I began life upon. Everything we use from a harrow tools to a reaper and binder is taxed by the government at Washington, but no tax is laid for our benefit, and no thought is given to us by the men who make the laws. Only yesterday I was reading the tariff list to see where it protected the farmer, but there was nothing protected on the farm but sheep wool, and even that is no benefit to the farmer, because, as a general rule, he raises but few sheep and the price of the wool is fixed by city buyers who control the price both in buying from the farmer and in selling to the manufacturer. There is a tariff tax on potatoes, and cabbage and hay, which they say is for our benefit, but when you, when these are plentiful, the tax cannot help the farmer, and when they are scarce we have to buy them and pay the tax. The men who own coal and ore mines and the men who manufacture what the farmers use, have their combinations to restrict production and raise prices. They can stop the mines and the factories whenever it pleases them to make additional profits, but the farmers cannot shut down the farms for there is seed time and harvest and the work must be done at any cost. The farmer's margin of profit is so small and his crops so uncertain that they dare not combine, even if their number were so limited as to enable them to do so. We must compete with the farming world, and whether the price of our crops is fixed by speculators in New York, Chicago, or London, we are powerless to help ourselves. Most of the farms broadcloths are mortgaged and so would this have been had I not leased a portion of it to a gentleman who was prospecting for coal. He paid me a bonus which kept me out of debt, but all farms are not mineral lands, and if they were, the great excess of minerals would prevent a rise in the prices of farm lands. The bankers are shrewd businessmen, and they last year employed experts to appraise the value of farm land in some of the western states. It was found that in ten states the total sum of farm mortgages amounted to the enormous sum of one billion two hundred and ninety-five million dollars. Here is the statement of the Chicago Tribune which you may read. It shows the amount of farm mortgages in ten western states as prepared by Mr. Harris, a banker living in Chicago: Ohio, $350,000,000; Indiana, $175,000,000; Illinois, $200,000,000; Michigan, $125,000,000; Wisconsin, $100,000,000; Minnesota, $70,000,000; Iowa, $100,000,000; Nebraska, $25,000,000; Kansas, $55,000,000; Missouri, $100,000,000.

"Now, Bounce, the average rate of interest on these mortgages is about ten per cent, and as the average farm does not yield three per cent on the investment, these farms will, in all probability, be sold and the former owners become tenants to a landed aristocracy, such as exists in Europe. Why don't the farmers economize, you say! They do as far as possible, but they are tariff taxed to death on everything they buy. Look at this list of articles I bought for your wife to assist both of you in housekeeping, and in making a good appearance on the Sabbath:

"One cooking stove, tariff tax, 45 per cent; one heating stove, tariff tax 45 per cent; one dozen knives and forks, tariff tax, 50 per cent; one dozen glass goblets, tariff tax 59 per cent; one half dozen spoons of thread, tariff tax, 40 per cent; one package of needles, tariff tax, 35 per cent; ten yards of oil cloth, tariff tax, 50 per cent; one half dozen tin dishes, tariff tax 40 per cent; one dozen cups and saucers, tariff tax, 55 per cent; one hair brush, tariff tax, 30 per cent; one broom, tariff tax, 30 per cent; one clock, tariff tax, 30 per cent; one Holy Bible, tariff tax, 25 per cent; two pairs cotton stockings, tariff 40 per cent; two pairs woolen stockings, tariff tax 63 per cent; one woolen dress pattern, tariff tax, 68 per cent; ton of coal, tariff tax, 75 per cent; chamber suit, tariff tax, 35 per cent.

"There, look at that. It is down in regular order, just as I bought the things from time to time, but that is not one-half of the tariff tax—for I have not taken into the plows, harness, and oil. The nails I drive in my hog pen are taxed 49 per cent; and the very buttons on my old clothes are taxed 25 per cent. Last spring I wanted to put up a little marble headstone to my wife's grave, and the tariff tax on the marble was 53 per cent. The sugar I put in my coffee is taxed 82 per cent, and the soap I keep for company in the square room is taxed 36 per cent.

"No, Bounce, don't be a farmer unless you can first see your way clear to have these taxes removed. I have been a republican all my voting days since the party was first formed. I learned to love Lincoln, Sumner and Garrison, and these men all favored free trade and low taxes when the war would be over. I voted for Arthur and he asked congress to lower the tariff, but these new republicans, with the assistance of some democrats, are determined to make the taxes higher, and give us free tobacco and whisky. They will talk to you about rebellion and the old flag, but you can't eat either of them, and they won't pay for seed or labor, and if you get into debt they will not pay the judgment nor release the mortgage.

"Bounce did not go into farming that year. JOHN L. BUTLER.

THE MESSAGE BEFORE THE SENATE.

Mr. George Indorses and Mr. Cullom Criticises the President.

THE President's retaliation message was brought up in the Senate, the 30th, and Mr. George proceeded with his remarks begun the previous day. He denied Mr Edmunds' assertion that the President had the right to suspend the section of the Revised Statutes allowing the transit in bond of foreign goods across the United States territory, and that such autocratic power was decided unanimously by the committee on ways and ways. Mr. Cullom protestates in Europe and Asia. Mr. Cullom said that the British provinces would become a part of the United States in time, and that the retaliation message might be fairly taken as evidence that ever the President had a leaning toward Canada. He was ultimate. He argued that the secretary of the Treasury already had the power to suspend the transit of goods from Canada to the United States ports for exportation, and he thought such rules and regulations would make the amendment. The Senate adopted the following amendments to the bill: Providing for a supervising board; increasing from $20,000 to $30,000, the appropriation for harbor defense; increasing the appropriation for a gun factory; and providing that the total annual from already to $650,000; increasing the appropriation for steel for gun and armor plate to $1,000,000, and inserting the word "American" before the word "foreign." The substitute for the Senate bill for the relief of Foreign Affairs committee, as a substitute for the Wilson retaliation bill, which was recommitted, reported by the committee and afterward reported to the House. The substitute is practically identical with the original measure, with the exception that the section attempted to confer the Oklahoma bill was stricken out. Several amendments had been reported the point of no quorum was raised and the House adjourned. The Senate agreed to the conference report on the bill for the sale of the Fort Wallace military reservation in Kansas.

DISMAY AT JACKSONVILLE.

The Increase of Yellow Fever Driving People from the City by Thousands.

A special dispatch from Jacksonville, Fla., under date of Thursday, October 2, says: August 30, says: 'There are twenty-six new cases of yellow fever and three deaths. People are quitting the city in thousands, and efforts are being made to reduce the population as much as possible number. Mississippi has decided to admit no strangers within her borders who are not possessed of a certificate of health, and Birmingham, Ala., has ordered a strict quarantine against Atlanta. A refugee camp will be established by the government in the mountains of North Carolina."

PAID HIS DEBT WITH A BULLET.

John McKee Shoots His Brother William for Demanding $15 Due Him.

William McKee, who resides on the farm of his brother John, in Jefferson Township, Ind., near Huntington, was preparing to move, when John drove out to the farm. William asked him to pay $15 he owed him. John refused, and attempted to drive away when William caught his horse and told him he would have to pay. John drew his revolver and fired two shots, one striking William in the chin and lodging in the back part of the head. The wounds are mudcrow was arrested and placed under bonds.

A RICH YOUNG MURDERER.

The Last Millionaire E. H. Standford's Son Stays a Man at Louisville.

Frank Standford, son of the late millionaire E. D. Standford, once President of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, shot and killed Dan Walker, a teamster at Louisville, Ky. Walker had been beating a woman of ill-repute and pursued her to the street, where he struck her several times. Standford and Charles Patten were standing near the low saloon from which Walker came, and, as Walker turned away, Standford shot him in the back. Standford and Patten were both arrested.

Started for Congress.

The following Congressional nominations have been made: L. B. Caswell, by the First Wisconsin District Republicans (renomination); Captain John W. Hannah, by the Twelfth Missouri District Democrats; O. Patrick McAuliffe, by the Sixth Virginia District Republicans; John D. Blackburn, by the Fifth Virginia District Republicans; Thomas B. Fenton, by the First Indiana District Republicans; Captain Charles E. Belknap, by the Fifth Michigan District Republicans; John McLaughlin, by the Union Labor party of the Eighth Illinois District; Otway J. Cosgrove, by the First Ohio District Democrats; C. W. Gerard, by the Second Ohio District Democrats; Thomas Fortcesh Illinois District Democrats indorsed Bert Stewart, the Labor nominee. Thomas E. Rockwerth, nominated by the Third Michigan District Democrats, declined the nomination.

Stung to Death by Bees.

A team of horses belonging to Eliza Harris, a farmer living near Findlay, Ohio, was stung to death by bees. A boy drove the horses past a bee've, when the insects came out in a body and attacked the animals. In less than ladify minutes after the attack was over both the horses were dead.

Members of Parliament Arrested.

A Dublin dispatch says that the police of Wexford have arrested Mr. John Redmond, member of Parliament for Wexford; his brother, Mr W. Redmond, member of Parliament from Fermanagh; and Mr. Edward Walsh, editor of the Wexford People. They are charged with offenses under the crimes act.

CHOOSING CANDIDATES.

Congressional Nominations Made by the Various Parties.

J. H. McMillin was nominated for Congress by the Third West Virginia District Republicans.

O. A. Mathews was nominated for Congress by the Republicans of Dakota, at Watertown, over Gifford, on the seventeenth ballot. Mathews is a young lawyer. He was Speaker of the last Territorial House.

The Hon. James B. Reilly, of Pottsville, Pa., has been nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Thirteenth Pennsylvania District.

The Hon. James McCabe, of Warren County, Indiana, was nominated for Congress at Lafayette, Ind., by the Democrats of the Ninth District.

The Republicans of the Fourth Michigan District have renominated Julius C. Burrows for Congress, at Dowagiac.

A. E. Morrison, of Perry, Iowa, has been nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Seventh Iowa District.

David B. Emmer has been nominated for Congress by the Democrats of Pennsylvania, in convention in Berks County.

The Republicans of the Ninth Kentucky District have nominated Major Drew J. Pearce of Lawrence County, for Congress.

Daniel L. Brinton has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Third Maryland District.

The Prohibitionists of the Eighth Illinois Congressional District have nominated J. E. Rober, of Wheaton, for Congress, at Joliet.

NEW MEN AT THE FRONT.

The Hawkeye Democracy Name Their State Ticket.

The Democratic State Convention of Iowa met at Des Moines, with a large representation. The ticket is mostly composed of new and young men, and the nominations were made principally by acclamation. The ticket is as follows:

Secretary of State, George C. Helmsley of Jackson County; Auditor of State, Daniel J. Dickman of Montgomery County; Treasurer of State, Amos Case of Chickasaw County; Judge of the Supreme Court, Patrick H. Smyth of Burlington; Attorney General, Joseph C. Mitchell of Linn County; Clerk of the Supreme Court, John A. Day of Jackson County, Charles T. Lund of Kossuth County, and Herman Wills of Clinton County.

A platform was adopted which indorses the St. Louis platform and candidates; commends Mr. Cleveland's administration; congratulates Iowa upon the passage by the National House of Representatives of the Mills bill, and arraigns Iowa Republicans for abandoning their repeatedly expressed belief in a reform of the tariff laws; reaffirms, as a cardinal doctrine of the party's faith, the doctrine that "corporations created by state authority are subject to state control;" and declares the party's opposition to prohibition as "injurious to business and the cause of temperance." A resolution lamenting the death of Sheridan and extending sympathy to his family was unanimously adopted by a rising vote.

CROP AND TRADE REVIEW.

A Better Feeling in All Directions, with Highly Favorable Crop Reports.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade reports a better feeling in every direction. It says:

Crop prospects improve, manufacturers are gaining confidence, and dealers no longer speculating on a falling market, keenly appreciate the clearly encouraging, larger in volume than a week ago, but still very moderate in view of extensive repairs which must precede such strengthen belief that the corn crop will be not only large, the yield of which cannot be estimated, and the yield of wheat may be quite large, the yield of which not below recent estimates, and the yield of cotton may be much larger than has expected. Yet the prospect is not as bright as was expected, though prices are lower than ever before, and the cotton crop is phenomenally active, and an advance in price has been agreed upon. For the first time in eight years leather dealers are no longer selling on a declining market. In the iron and steel trade the outlook is not so bright, but better prices are firmer, as many points, with an increasing demand, but scarcely anywhere is there complaint of closeness, and collections are reported as more satisfactory than for some at this season. In the dry goods trade the movement is especially noted in Chicago, and brings full average business in cotons in a progress, with a sense last more satisfactory movement, and prices are firmer, in men's wear goods of worsteds, and in carpets. Failures last week numbered 214, as compared with a total of 225 for previous week.

WESTERN DEMOCRATS.

Congressman McShane Heads the Democratic State Ticket of Nebraska.

The Nebraska Democratic State Convention, held at Lincoln, made the following nominations, the ticket being made up of the different nationalities:

For Governor, Congressman John A. McShane of Douglas; Lieutenant Governor, John S. Dale of Cedar; Secretary of state, Lewis Bliss of Kearney; Auditor of State, W. H. Palmer of Otoe; Treasurer, James M. Patterson; Attorney General, W. H. Munger of Douglas; Commissioner of Public Lands and Buildings, H. Jensen of Hamilton County; and Superintendent of Public Instruction, M. Jensen of Cuming County.

The platform denounces the Republicans for allowing Pinkerton men to be employed in the State; favors State control of railroads and the enactment of laws against trusts; opposes convict labor; favors high license; indorses the Mills bill and the President's fishery policy, and denounces the two Republican Congressmen from Nebraska for their vote against free lumber and free salt.

GOV. THAYER RENOMINATED.

The Republicans of Nebraska Place in the Field a State Ticket.

The Republican State Convention of Nebraska met at Lincoln, and after a tedious struggle nominated the following ticket:

For Governor, John M. Thayer; for Lieutenant Governor, G. D. Meiklejohn of Nance County; for Secretary of State, Gilbert Laws; for Treasurer, Jacob Fossler; for Attorney General, Jesse L. Ricketts; for Commissioner of Public Lands and Buildings, John Steen, of Saunders, and for State Superintendent of Public Instruction, George R. Lane of Washington. The nominees for Presidential Electors are: At large, Lorenzo Crounse, Ira Bennett, and H. C. Russell; of the Congressional districts, M. M. Butler, of Cass; Second District, James McNeeny, of Webster; Third district, Charles F. Iddings, of Lincoln.

The platform indorses Harrison and Morton and arraigns the Democratic administration; pronounces in favor of nine-hours a legal day's work; and concludes as follows:

Insofar, That the Republicans of Nebraska in the Congressional contest, in the interests of this State that the existence of the question, Shall the manufacture and sale of Intoxicating liquors as a beverage be prohibited? be made to the voters of the State.

WRITER MILLER CHOSEN.

The Senator Selected by New York Republicans to Head Their Ticket.

The New York Republican State Convention met at Saratoga and placed in nomination the following candidates:

For Governor—Warner Miller.

For Lieutenant Governor—S. V. R. Cruger.

For Court of Appeals Judge—Isaac Ramsey.

The platform indorses the platform and nominees of the Chicago convention, pledges the electoral vote of New York to the Republican ticket, and declares the rejection of the fisheries treaty and the President's disposition of the Canadian question, "a confession that his administration has been grossly negligent of its duties in the protection of American fisheries;" favors "a foreign policy which shall do no wrong to the weakest nation and shall brook no indignity from any power on earth;" censures the Hill for vetoing a measure intended to purify the ballot and for vetoing the high-license bills, and approves the high-license measure of the Republicans in the last Legislature.

A LABOR TICKET.

The Union Labor Party of Kansas Name Their Candidates.

The Union Labor party of Kansas, in convention at Wichita, made these nominations:

Governor, F. P. Elder; Lieutenant Governor, S. B. Todd of Meade County; secretary of State, M. J. Albright of Kingman County; Treasurer, Samuel Sill of Sumner County; Auditor, H. Sargent of Douglas County; Attorney General, W. T. Wright; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Miss Nichols; M. M. Ryan of Jefferson County; supreme Judge, A. J. White of Augusta County.

The platform adopted indorses the Cincinnati platform; commends the action of the opening of Oklahoma to homestead settlement; denounces the Pinkerton police and demands their suppression by law; favors the abolishment of all interest on debts; demands "prohibition, not prohibitions," for United States soldiers, and opposes giving the soldiers "yellow dog" and "black snake" 1300 a year; demands woman suffrage, and denounces Ingalls as a traitor to the republic.

UNION LABORING MEN.

They Meet in Convention at Wilkesbarre, Pa., and Nominate a Ticket.

The Union Labor State Convention of Pennsylvania was held at Wilkesbarre, and the following nominations made:

Auditor General, Thomas H. Windle, of Philadelphia; Supreme Judge, A. Wilson, Pittsburgh.

The platform was adopted indorsing the Cincinnati platform; demanding free homesteads; favoring uniform series of school books to be published by the State and furnished free to school children; the election of President and Vice President, Senators and Postmasters by a direct vote of the people, and a uniform taxation of all corporate and personal property at its cash value; demanding the abolition of the poll tax and the adoption of the Australian system of voting, and a prohibition of the immigration of immoral, criminal, pauper, and contract labor.

PLEDGES THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

The Democratic Delaware Pledge Cleveland the State Electoral Vote.

The Delaware Democratic State Convention was held at Dover. John P. Penington was renominated by acclamation for Representative in Congress and Presidential electors were chosen. The platform indorses President Cleveland's administration and approves his utterances and attitude on the fisheries question, concurs in the National Democratic platform, ratifies the nominations of Cleveland and Thurman, and pledges them the electoral vote of the State, and approves the efforts of Congress to reduce taxation.

SIGNAL SERVICE BULLETIN.

The Weather Favorable to Harvesting, and Crops but Slightly Damaged.

The Signal-Service weather-crop bulletin, issued the 27th, says:

"The weather for the last week was especially favorable for harvesting and farm work in the Northern and Northwestern States, and rapidly in the central and northern portions of Dakota and Minnesota, from which region the reports indicate that the damage to the spring wheat crop by the late rains will be now largely overcoming. In the north-eastern portions of the corn belt the weather was favorable, but growth of the plant was retarded by the low temperature. Very light frost is reported in Michigan, Northern Illinois on the 23d, probably causing no injury to the crops. High winds damaged corn in Central Kentucky, Indiana, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and New Jersey, but the attending rains will doubtless improve the crop."

Political Gossip.

Senator Allison of Iowa has promised to take the stump for the Republican ticket.

The Pennsylvania Democratic State convention, at Harrisburg, renominated Hiram Meyer of Allegheny for Auditor General.

The Minnesota State conference of prohibitionists and labor-reformers, at Faribo, tion at St. Paul, nominated Ignatius Donnelly for Congress.

New Postmasters.

The following nominations of Postmasters have been confirmed by the Senate:

Indiana—B. L. Miller, Goshen.

Iowa—L. Brown, Spirit Lake; P. H. Hilmer, Mapleton; M. Cooper, Forest City.

Michigan—J. Pigeon, Bad Axe.

Kansas—J. W. Pugsley, Cawker City; D. C. Corbin, Phillipsburg; Mrs. Sarah J. Wright, Ft. Riley; J. Madigan, Wallace; E. P. Stevens, Richfield.

THE PACIFIC NORTHWEST.

A Marvelous Opening Up of Industries and Settlement Through the Advent of Railways—A Country Rich in Agriculture, Timber, Minerals, Stock, Water-Power—Unsurpassed Climate and Wonderful Scenery.

PORTLAND, Oregon, Aug. 22, 1888.—In the mind of the observer who takes but fugitive glances from the car window in hastening from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the impressions created may not be altogether favorable, but the man who comes and looks for facts will be favored by a constant succession of surprises. Its agricultural resources; its mineral wealth; its timbers its manufacturing possibilities; its grain; the close association of water-power and raw material; its climate and a fair share of those superb creations of nature which distinguish Switzerland and make the delight of the intelligent traveler thus gives a gratifying thoughts, assuring him of its future prosperity and prosperity.

WHERE IS OREGON?

It is the State of the Pacific Northwest, and has the ocean for its western boundary. It is bounded on the north by Washington Territory on the east by Idaho, and on the south by Nevada and California. It has an area of 96,000 square miles, or over sixty times the size of New Jersey and New England combined, and is capable of supporting a population of 10,000,000 souls. If you have never been there, admit that you know nothing or very little about it. Oregon is noted as a country of marvelous resources, but there is a difference in the resources east and west of the Cascade Mountains. On the coast there are four counties, Clatsop, Tillamook, Coos and Curry, wet and the dry—while in the eastern part of the State there are three counties of temperature, the winter, however, rarely ever the mercury goes below zero, and the summer is cooler and more equable than in the Atlantic States. Its climate is unique in one respect, in that it is the only one in the union that the rainfall is excessive, but strange, because it is not so in the south every South Atlantic and Gulf State to have from five to twenty times more of rain than Portland, where the annual average is fifty-four inches. The reason is because of the law of the Upper Mississippi Valley. In the spring there are rains in the south, but when the showers are lighter, come oftener, and the sun shines between. In the north it is just the reverse, as usual to the rainy seasons on the Atlantic coast, and it has never lived in a country in such opportunities. The man who goes to a distance, leaving friends and relations, and no one should attempt to make the venture, unless he is able to do it without injuring or jeopardizing the general welfare of himself and family. Of the thousands of the possibilities of this section, thousands are coming to it, and the opportunities for the rooms can be seen a fifth display of the products of the soil, and the visitor will be astonished at the abundance and variety without fee. Reliable information and copy of the Resources pamphlet free.

WHAT OF PORTLAND?

It is the metropolis of the Pacific coast, in the commerce, and has a population, including environs, of 50,000 souls. Its business is most picturesque; the views in its elevations from the heights west of the city, or from the Portland Park, which can be reached by cable cars, are truly inspiring. Here nature has lavished her gifts in profusion. The business is largely conventional. In the north-west corner of the city is the Willamette River, which joins the Columbia River, which rises in Rocky Mountains, and flows through Washington, Oregon, and Washington Territories, and is navigable for ocean steamers for 100 miles, and for steamers of light draught for 1,000 miles, and the source of the Columbia River is the great lake of the Rocky Mountains, and the Columbia is reached by deep-water steamers, and is the great outlet for the grain, lumber, and other products of the country. The Columbia is the great highway of commerce, and is the great highway of the Pacific Northwest, and the Columbia River is the great highway of the Pacific Northwest, and the Columbia River is the great highway of the Pacific Northwest, and the Columbia River

Democratic Senatorial Convention.

A Democratic Senatorial convention will be held at Traverse City, on Wednesday, Sept. 12th, at 2 o'clock p. m., to nominate a candidate for state senator for the 26th senatorial district and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention. Each county is entitled to delegates as follows: Antrim 5, Charlevoix 4, Grand Traverse 7, Leelanaw 4.

H. C. DAVIS, Secretary. Chairman.

Democratic Meetings.

A. D. Cruickshank, John Nicholls, and others will address the people on the political issues, as follows:

At Barnard School House, in Marion, Friday Evening, Sept. 7.

At Maple Grove School House, in Hayes, on Tuesday Evening, Sept. 11.

The News says "there is probably no democrat in the district who could poll his full party vote against Gen. Cutcheon this fall." Hats! What reason has any democrat for voting for Cutcheon? There is not one.—Cadillac Democrat.

ONE would believe by reading republican papers generally, and the last Sentinel in particular, that the union is not really saved, and that the south is as rebellious as ever. It is this constant repeating of the wounds of the war that makes the south solid against the republican party.

BECAUSE the democratic candidate for congress was "only a private," the Cadillac News alludes to him invariably as Mr. Hudson, while his shoulder-strapped nominee is always spoken of as Gen. Cutcheon. Very well, but we should have deemed it more honorable to enlist and go to fight than to carry a commission to boss other boys in the ranks.—Cadillac Democrat.

LABORING men must not forget that "protection" is a system of taxes levied on imports for the purpose of increasing the price of certain commodities in our own country so that the home producers of such commodities can get higher prices for what they sell to their own fellow countrymen. "Protection" raises the price of commodities. That may be to the advantage of those who buy labor and sell commodities. But how can it be to the advantage of those who sell labor and buy commodities?

THE duty of $2 a thousand feet has been worth $35,000,000 to some of the "lumber kings" of Michigan and other states, but we believed it was better that they should not make so much money, and that the struggling farmer on the prairies, who now lives in sod houses, should be enabled to get lumber so cheap that they could build nice, comfortable dwellings.

The democratic party said: "Here stand a crowd of poor people, and we say that they shall not be oppressed. The government does not want the money, and why not stop this drain?"—R. Q. Mills.

THE American Catholic News takes issue with the Irish republicans who are trying to deliver the Irish vote to Harrison and Morton under the direction of James G. Blaine. At the close of a paragraph exposing the hypocrisy of some of these fellows, the News says: "The Irish-American voters will be gratified to have the opportunity of slapping these individuals in the face with straight democratic ballots. Next November will settle for ever the pretensions of these busy nobody and will make it clear, beyond cavil, that no man has the Irish vote in his pocket for transfer C. O. D. The Irish-American is not a slave, but a man of thought and independence, and when his vote has been cast next election day it will be seen that he has shown his independence, his capacity for thought, his love for American institutions, and his repudiation of those who claim to be his masters. His ticket will have on it the names of the electors of Cleveland and Thurman.

IS the forty-seventh congress (1881) the republican party created a tariff commission. They claimed that a tariff was so intricate that politicians could not make an acceptable one, although they have been at the business for a hundred years. They said we must have a learned commission to deal with these delicate things, and so with much care they got together a learned body of experts. Every one of them was a protectionist, and they listened to protectionists from all parts of the country, and what was the result? They recommended an average reduction in duties of from 20 to 25 per cent, which they said in their report would not hurt anybody or anything, but would prove beneficial to manufacturers, laborers, and everybody else. One of these commissioners was the late Edward L. Hayes, president of the Woolen Manufacturers League, and another was Robert P. Porter, now editor of the New York Press, who is aghast at the wickedness of the democrats in trying to reduce the tariff an average of 7 per cent.—R. Q. Mills.

WHILE putting down the tories with their thinly-disguised protection under the name of fair trade the liberals said, "Well, if the people of the United States prohibit trade with us by law, we must look elsewhere for our breadstuffs;" and so they tried India. The Marquis of Ripon found 200,000,000 of people living under a protective tariff in full force not only against the world but against England. These tariff laws were repealed under the influence of the Marquis, and free trade was established. Railroads were built, lands before then deemed barren were made tillable, and the interior was put in connection by rail with the sea. The result is marked. Where in all India ten years ago hardly a bushel of wheat was grown, that teeming land of over populated labor today exports nearly 100,000,000 bushels yearly. That was the amount exported last year. Every bushel of that wheat comes in competition with the American farmer, lessening his sales and cutting down his prices at home. For this malign result we have to thank our protectionists, the fires of whose furnaces and mines depend on the very sales abroad they have labored so hard to destroy.—Frank H. Hurd.

Has the reader ever reflected upon the effect the protective tariff law has upon the sale of our surplus abro ad? Why can we not sell our wheat in Canada? We cannot because Canada imposes a duty of twenty-five cents a bushel on all grain sent there. This is in retaliation. In France lately the duty was raised on American grain to an almost prohibitory point. In Denmark, Norway and Sweden, since the first of January, a high rate of duty has been imposed, making the importation into those countries almost impossible; and we are practically excluded from Germany, Spain, Portugal, Mexico and South America. And why? Sir John A. Macdonald, the premier of Canada, gave the reason in a few words. When the Hon. Benjamin Butterworth of Ohio proposed reciprocity, Sir John said, "No we have tried for it, but the United States government has always refused. It has its tariff against us, and we will retain ours against it." Does any sane mind believe that we can legislate against all the world, and not have the world retaliate by legislation against us? Just so high as we build our Chinese wall against them, so high will they build walls against us. The farmers, our great body of producers, should know their own surplus, which must be sold abroad in trade, is shut off from the markets of 150,000,000 of people throughout christendom by the blind selfish law enacted for the benefit of a few at home.—Frank H. Hurd.

MR. NORTON made the ridiculous statement that there was no surplus in the treasury.—that there was but about thirteen millions of cash now in the treasury not required for immediate use. It seems impossible that he could have made this statement in ignorance. The Chicago Herald says that the statement of the public debt for Aug. 31 will show items of $100,000,000 gold reserve, about 26,000,000 small change, about $55,000,000 of various kinds of certificates not outstanding, and about $106,000,000 of cash balance, which would be a legal tender of payment on the interest-bearing debt. The money which congress has so monstrously appropriated is the levy of 1889—that is, the income running from June 30, 1888, to June 30, 1889. So far as this income has been used in July and August, it ought to affect the present surplus not more. The surplus July 1 was $189,314,416. This must remain, barring the payments on the principal on the interest-bearing debt, which has been very small—this, even if every cent of the income for 1889 were now lived up to. The surplus is there. It can be stolen, but it cannot be lied out of the vaults.

Workingmen, Paste this Above Your Hearths.

In one of his "key note" speeches delivered at Augusta lately James G. Blaine said:

"When President Cleveland delivered his message, he had something to say to the American people about the danger of "surplus." I think there have since been no democratic paper in the country, whether they understood the meaning of the word or not that have not been constantly warning the people as to the horrible danger of "trusts." [Laughter.] Well, I shall not discuss trusts this afternoon. I shall not venture to say they are advantageous or disadvantageous. They are largely private affairs with which President Cleveland nor any other citizen has any particular right to interfere.

And this is the message which James G. Blaine, the idolized leader of the republican party, sends out to the workingmen and producing masses of the country!

Hands off the Trusts! They are above the people, above congress, above the President!

This is the answer which the republican party makes through its chief spokesman to the people who are groaning under the exactions of the tariff-nurtured monopolies and trust combinations!

Well, we are not surprised at such an answer. It's a mighty mean father that won't defend his own offspring!—Lansing Journal.

Coming Out for Cleveland.

Word has been received that the leading Scandinavian newspaper published in Minnesota, the Svenska Folkes Tidning, has committed itself to the cause of tariff reform, and advises its readers to vote for Cleveland. "We Norsemen," so says the paper, "are not hasty in forming, but firmly adhere to our conclusions. There was a time when only paper came Swedish newspapers existed, and scarcely a Scandinavian democrat could be found. Now, for the first time, many of our countrymen will vote the democratic ticket. This year a tidal wave has set in that is turning the great majority of Swedish voters over to Cleveland's support."

His Neighbors are Pleased.

The citizens of Manceloua took occasion, Monday evening, to formally congratulate Hon. H. B. Hudson upon his nomination for congress, and proceeding to his home united in a demonstration calculated to please him. The band was out, and in the crowd was nearly every citizen of the place, regardless of political preference. That Mr. Hudson is a worthy choice is evidenced by his great popularity at home as well as by his record in the past.—Cadillac Democrat.

Ben Butler and the Tariff.

Apropos of the announcement that Ben Butler is coming out in advocacy of a high protective tariff, the Boston Transcript reproduces the following from the General's remarks to an interviewer in 1883:

I am one of the largest woolen manufacturers in the United States. I do not say this boastingly, but to show that I am not selfish in the views I hold. The cloth I wear (placing his hand on his sack coat) is of my own manufacture, and I notice several gentlemen around me who wear the same. On these goods there is a tariff of sixty per cent. Reputable orators and newspapers tell you this tariff is to protect the mill laborers. Twenty per cent, will pay all the wages. Sixty per cent, do you suppose becomes of the other forty per cent? These same republican orators and newspapers tell you it goes into the United States treasury. Not a dollar reaches there. Every cent goes into my pocket (slapping his pocket vigorously to give emphasis to his words). And every one of you is paying this bounty to the woolen manufacturers. The whole tariff scheme is an imposition and a fraud on the American people.

The Congressional Campaign.

The Democratic Congressional Committee met at Reed City, Tuesday, and organized by selecting Arthur Jones of Muskegon as chairman and P. T. Glassmire of Manistee as secretary. It having been decided to place the responsibility of the campaign in the hands of an executive committee of six, three from each of the allied parties, and Mr. Hudson, congressional candidate, being requested to appoint five democratic members, his choice of Peter Jackson of Manistee, Arthur Jones of Muskegon, and M. T. Woodruff of Cadillac was approved. The executive committee will meet at Le Roy Monday.—Cadillac Democrat.

A Safe Investment.

In one which is guaranteed to bring you satisfactory results, or in case of failure, a return of purchase price. On this safe plan you can buy from our advertised druggist a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. It is guaranteed to bring relief in every case, when used for any affection of throat, lungs or chest, such as Consumption, Inflammation of Lungs, bronchitis, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Croup, etc. It is pleasant and agreeable to take, perfectly safe, and can always be depended upon. Trial bottles free at F. G. Hines & Co's drug store. 1

Guard Against the Strike.

And always have a bottle of Acker's English Remedy in the house. You cannot tell how soon Croup may strike your little one, or a cold or cough may fasten itself upon you. One dose is a preventive and a few doses is a positive cure. All throat and lung troubles yield to its treatment. A trial bottle is given you free and the remedy guaranteed by G. W. Beaman, drug gist. 1 1892

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. F. G. Hines & Co., Druggists. 1

Last Saturday evening a party of gentlemen from Charlevoix assisted in the organization of a Cleveland club at Hilton's school house. The meeting was well attended, and the addresses by A. D. Cruickshank, John Nicholls, and others, were listened to with marked attention and frequent applause. The club has already a membership of over forty. The stampede continues.

Mr. Norton claims that foreign paupers are coming to this country at the rate of a million a month. Is it any wonder that the American laborer demands free goods when he is forced into competition with such an increased pauper labor? But Mr. Birch claims only half a million a year, instead of a million a month. Republican speakers should either agree among themselves for facts, or compare notes before they begin to talk. If Mr. Norton is correct, what will be our population at the next census? Look up your figures Mr. Norton; don't make such unsupported assertions.

At the annual school meeting Monday night, L. D. Bartholomew was elected moderator, and R. W. Kane director, for one year, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Oscar Upright. The sum of $1,800 was voted for teachers' salaries; $150 for incidental expenses; $150 for janitor; $275 for fuel; $225 for rent of high school room in village hall; $50 for the purchase of an electrical apparatus for the use of the high school; and $10 for taking the census. The director's report of the assessor showed a balance of $631 on hand.

The Crouter Monument

Dr. G. W. Crouter has placed a handsome mottled marble monument on the corner of his lot in the cemetery. It is about six and one half feet high, of substantial proportions, and is ornamented in deference to Mrs. Crouter's expressed wish. The inscriptions are as brief as consistent with completeness and every letter is perfect in workmanship. The appearance of the top is as a bible stand covered with appropriate drapery, on which is piled two large books. All the details of mechanical work are complete in style and finish and the whole is a credit to Dr. Crouter and an ornament to the cemetery.

THE OLD ROMAN.

Masterly Speech by Judge Thurman, Delivered at Port Huron, Mich., Aug. 22.

The Sophistries of the Protected Manufacturers and Their Political Allies Swept Away.

Why Laboring Men Above All Others Should Support the Party That Demands Tariff Reform.

Port Huron (Mich.) special.]

Ex-Senator Thurman arrived here on the Pacific Parlorr on Wednesday last, and was respondent of Portsmouth (Va.) Star. The 15,000 thousand people, augmented by several were cut in twos, and as the people crowded the street and filled the windows, the crowd blocked the street so that the wheel to Fine Opera House a speakers' stand had been erected. Judge Thurman was escorted to the stand by an escort of the principal streets, which were elaborately decorated for the occasion, and wherever it was introduced to a true concourse of people, who welcomed him with great applause. Arches and bunting had adorned the old Roman

I presume there is not a person within the sound of my voice who does not know what is meant by the tariff. And yet it may not be amiss for me to state, for the sake of perfect clearness, what I mean by it. A tariff, my friends, is nothing in the world but a tax—a tax upon the people, levied upon the products of foreign countries. Now, I do not mean to say that every article of commerce that comes into the United States from abroad is a proper subject of taxation, for there are many articles which materially raise the price and thereby diminish the consumption of a large portion of the manufacture of a like nature, when we can produce it ourselves. For instance, when I was a boy, I used to see—for I have lived long enough to see—when, about $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 of tea was imported into the United States annually, and yet we never produced a pound of tea. Now, I do not say that every article of commerce that comes into the United States should be taxed, for there are many articles which we can not produce at home, and which, if taxed, would be a tax upon the people, without any compensating advantage to the government. Now, the duties upon tea and coffee, which were quite heavy, yielded a revenue to the government of more than $20,000,000 a year, and yet they were not felt by the people, because they were so small in each family that they were not felt. Why, I remember when I was a young man, I used to go to Philadelphia, and I could buy a good cup of coffee for 12½ cents, and I could get a good meal of victuals for 12½ cents, and I could get a good lodging for 12½ cents

The Delusion of "Malaria."

Another delusion is malaria, so called. The word malaria means bad air. The diseases that are attributed to this cause are frequently common in districts where there is no stagnant water or anything else to taint the atmosphere. It will be remembered that during the autumn of 1881 there was an unusual number of people who were attacked by these diseases in southwestern and west-central Missouri and also eastern Kansas, when there had been no rains of any consequence for months, and that, too, in districts far removed from decomposing water or any other substance. The cause or causes of these diseases were surely not in the air, consequently should not be attributed to malaria. It is more probable that during the dry, hot weather of summer the; the heat that is radiated and the electricity that is generated by the sun have an enervating influence on the system—that from the nerve centers this influence reaches the muscular system, principally through the pneumogastric nerve, and the stomach being the most delicate and intricate of almost any of the involuntary muscles, is the principal sufferer from such nerving influence. Indigestion follows as a symptom, and an increase of bile brings what is called biliousness and malaria.

I hope my medical friends, and I claim many as such, will pardon the presumption on my part of the discussion of a subject that comes more within their province than that of mine. But the conclusion has been forced from observation that reach over a period of many years as a surveyor in the west. I have observed that there were more cases of sickness of this kind during, or immediately after, the season in which there were the greatest number of electric showers or electric disturbances as shown by the surveyor's instruments. I conclude, then, that heat and electricity are the prime causes of "malaria," and that they weaken the stomach and, in a large majority of cases, produce the diseases usually attributed to this cause.

I give the thought to the profession with the hope that it will offend none.—Edwin Walters in St. Louis Republic.

Constipation

Demands prompt treatment. The results of neglect may be serious. Avoid all harsh and drastic purgatives, the tendency of which is to weaken the bowels. The best remedy is Ayer's Pills. Being purely vegetable, their action is prompt and their effect always beneficial. They are an admirable Liver and After-dinner pill, and everywhere endorsed by the profession.

"Ayer's Pills are highly and universally spoken of by the people about here. I make daily use of them in my practice." —Dr. J. E. Fowler, Bridgeport, Conn.

"I can recommend Ayer's Pills above all others, having long proved their value as a cathartic for myself and family."—J. T. Hess, Lattsville, Pa.

"For several years Ayer's Pills have been used in my family. We find them an for constipation and indigestion, and are never without them in the house."—Mrs. Gressler, Lowell, Mass.

"Four boxes of Ayer's Pills cured me of liver complaint."—E. L. Fulton, Hanover, N. H.

"I have used Ayer's Pills, for liver troubles and indigestion, for many years, and always found them prompt and efficient in their action."—L. N. Smith, Utica, N. Y.

"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I used not a dozen boxes but a complete cure."—D. Burks, Saco, Me.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years and consider them an excellent family medicine. I know of no better remedy for liver troubles, and have always found them a prompt cure for dyspepsia." —Jas. Quinn, 60 Middle st., Hartford, Conn.

"Having been troubled with constipation, which seems inevitable with persons of sedentary habits, I have tried Ayer's Pills, hoping for relief. I am glad to say that they have entirely cured me. Of any other medicine, I arrived at this conclusion only after a faithful trial of many years."—Samuel T. Jones, Oak st., Boston, Mass.

WILL TAKE A VOTE.

The Chinese Exclusion Bill to Come Up for Final Action in the Senate.

ANOTHER attempt was made in the Senate to pass the Chinese exclusion bill, on the 6th inst. The vote was unanimous—yeas 37, two less than a quorum. Upon a call of the Senate thirty-nine Senators, and 2/3 a quorum—responded. Messrs Stanford and Stockbridge explained that they had refrained from voting because they thought the Senate should delay final action until it ascertained whether the facts on which the bill was unanimously reported, that the vote should be on the 7th. The only Senator who voted nay, Jones, of Nevada, and Senator Paul, Mann, has been formally reported to the Senate as being sick. Mr. Gorman, Md., has reported a bill to refund Jay Gould's Texas Pacific railroad land grant, and asks for national reservoirs in the West for irrigation purposes.

A VETERAN ACTOR DEAD.

Lester Wallack Passes Away at Stamford, Conn.

Lester Wallack, the veteran actor, is dead. He was stricken with apoplexy while reading the paper at his country residence—Stamford, Conn., and remained unconscious until he died. Lester Wallack was born in New York in 1820, during one of his father's visits to the city. His father, John Wallack, the celebrated comedian, made his first appearance in 1811, at the old Broadway theatre, and with his father played the old Wallack theater in 1861, with Tom Taylor's "The President," he played the part of De la Rouge. He identified the theatre on the death of the elder Wallack, the new Wallack theater was opened Jan. 3, 1882. The testimonial benefit to Mr. Wallack last winter, which netted $20,000, is well remembered.

Wallack in 1864. Two years later the Wallack theater was opened Jan. 3, 1882. The testimonial benefit to Mr. Wallack last winter, which netted $20,000, is well remembered.

MINNESOTA REPUBLICANS.

They Place in the Field a State Ticket, at Minneapolis.

The Republicans of Minnesota met in State convention at Minneapolis, and nominated this ticket:

Governor, William R. Merriam; Lieutenant Governor, Albert Ames; Secretary of State, Hans Mattson; Auditor, William W. Braden; Treasurer, Joseph Bobleter; Attorney General, Moses E. Clapp; Judge of the Supreme Court, James Gilfillan, Loren W. Collins.

The platform adopted by the convention indorses the national candidates and a protective tariff; but favors a readjustment and gradual reduction of tariff duties; promises to continue efforts to regulate the sale of liquor; favors honest civil-service laws; commends Gov. McGill's administration; demands the enforcement of the interstate railroad law; denounces the fisheries treaty and the failure to admit Dakota to the Union; favors liberal pensions; declares hostility to trusts; indorses the Australian system of voting; demands the immediate revision of the naturalization laws; condemns political outrages in the South, and sympathizes with the Irish home-rulers.

WESTERN POLITICS.

Colorado Republicans Nominate John A. Cooper for Governor.

The Republican State Convention of Colorado met at Denver, and made the following nominations:

Governor, John A. Cooper, of Denver; Lieutenant Governor, William J. Smith; Treasurer, W. H. Meyer, of Pueblo; Auditor, Louis Schwabacher, of Breckenridge; Superintendent of Schools, Prof. Fred Dick, of Trinidad; Associate Judge (long term), Charles H. Hurt, of Colorado; Supreme Judge (short term), Victor A. Elliott; Regents of Schools, Jos. Jay, David Moore of Denver, J. F. Chisholm of Clear Creek, James Gallow of Montrose.

A platform was adopted which indorses the national platform and candidates; favors old pensions for Union veterans; advocates laws to protect labor; opposes Chinese immigration and that of contract labor; denounces Cleveland's administration; approves the rejection of the fisheries treaty and condemns the President's retaliation message; demands an unlimited coinage of silver; favors stringent State railroad legislation, and asks for national reservoirs in the West for irrigation purposes.

Amsden for Governor.

The Democrats of New Hampshire met in State Convention at Concord, and nominated Charles A. Amsden for Governor. Electors were chosen and the convention adopted a platform indorsing the national platform and nominees, declaring for tariff reform and free raw materials, favoring the regulation of the liquor traffic, and denouncing the Republican party as a conspiracy to protect trusts.

Named for Congress.

The Republicans of the Thirteenth Missouri District have renominated Congressman Wade.

Miguel A. Otero has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of New Mexico Territory.

Congressman Tarney has been nominated by the Democrats of the Eight Michigan District.

Mr. Thurman Ill.

Allen G. Thurman was taken suddenly ill when about to commence to address an immense audience at Madison Square Garden, New York. His illness was caused by over exertion, and is not considered serious.

Increase of Railroads in the South.

The Manufacturers' Record presents special statistics as to the development of the railroad interests of the South during the last eight years. In 1880 the South had 20,612 miles of railroad, costing with equipment $690,800,000, while at the present time it has 39,000 miles, costing $1,450,000,000, a gain of 18,000 miles in track and $750,000,000 in the amount invested in railroads.

Want a Deep Water Harbor.

The Deep Water Convention of del-egates from Western States has closed at Duluth. Resolutions were passed to ask Congress to make appropriations for a permanent deep water harbor on the Texas coast, and to institute a system of reservoirs for the storage of water on Western lands, for the purposes of irrigation.

The Republicans of the Seventh Missouri District nominated Judge W. W. Edwards for Congress.

RUN & CO'S REPORT.

Frosts Have Done Considerable Damage to Spring Wheat.

Dun & Co.'s crop and business review for last week is as follows:

Crop reports have become exceedingly conflicting and difficult to reconcile. Disparaging accounts are published asserting that frosts have cut down the yield of spring wheat very materially in Dakota and Minnesota, and at the same time the government reports are greatly favorable. Such conflicting accounts from all quarters have helped an active speculation, with sales of 84,000,000 bushels of wheat for future delivery, prices of only half a cent higher this week. These facts lead to the suspicion that gloomy reports are being used to unduly depress miller interests, and that the actual outcome may be very much better than now estimated. Corn is a fraction lower, with sales of 9,000,000 bushels, and oats 2 cents higher, with sales of 3,000,000 bushels. In provisions, also, there has been a live speculation, an advance, and a reaction, the transactions being 100,000,000 pounds. The dry goods market has been active and buoyant. At some points collections were slow, however. The month's great number of reports note more than usual tardiness for the season, and complaints of slow collections. Yet there is a noticeable increase in confidence as to the immediate future of business in all quarters, and the failures which reports are received, and looking at returns show a continued increase in exchanges. The number of failures number 225, as compared with 205 last week and 212 the week previous. In Canada the number for the week of last year the figures are 22 against 18 failures, the failures numbered 973, against 777 last year.

RUSSELL AT THE HEAD.

The Massachusetts Democrats Name Their State Ticket.

The Democrats of Massachusetts met in State convention at Springfield and nominated this ticket:

Governor, William E. Russell, of Cambridge; Lieutenant Governor, Q. A. W. Cox, of Lowell; Secretary of State, William S. Gaspard, of Lee; Treasurer, Henry C. Thatcher, Attorney General, Samuel O. Lamb, of Lynn; Auditor, William A. Wilbur, of Milford; Judge of Supreme Court, Oliver Stevens, of Boston, George M. Ashley, of Pittsfield.

A long platform was adopted, which eulogizes Cleveland and Thurman, indorses the St. Louis platform, attacks the Republican party, declares for a reduction of taxes, and approves the Mills bill and the President's tariff message, denounces trusts, indorses the President's fisheries policy, sympathizes with Irish home-rulers, recommends more stringent anti-contract labor laws, demands the repeal of the State poll-tax qualification for suffrage, and liberal treatment of Union veterans and their widows, promising support of well-considered temperance legislation, and declares fidelity to legislative and judicial precedents and cardinal Democratic principles of personal liberty.

CLEVELAND INDORSED.

The Democrats of Connecticut Non-nate a State Ticket.

The Connecticut Democratic State convention was held at New Haven, and the following ticket nominated:

For Governor, Luzon B. Morris of New Haven, for Lieutenant Governor, Senator Kirkham of Torrington, for Secretary of State, Henry Roraback, for Treasurer, James S. Hoyt, of Hampton, Nicholas Staub of New Milford, for Comptroller, Henry C. Lodge, A. E. Burr of Hartford, for Attorney General, Simeon E. Baldwin of New Haven.

The platform adopted indorses the President and his tariff message; congratulates the Democrats of the House upon the passage of the Mills bill; denounces any duty upon raw material as a burden upon both the manufacturer and the consumer, and devotes an entire plank to the evils of the duty on wool; indorses the President for "placing the commercial relations of the people of the United States and Canada upon an equality;" declares in favor of the secret ballot, and favors a revision of the Constitution so that State officers may be elected by a plurality vote.

MORGAN IS THE MAN.

The Wisconsin Democrats Nominate a Ticket.

The Wisconsin Democratic State Convention met at Milwaukee and nominated the following ticket:

Governor, George W. Morgan of Milwaukee; Lieutenant Governor, Adolph Ruhl of Sheboygan; Secretary of State, Frank J. Larson of Eau Claire; State Treasurer, Theodore Kronshage of Dodge; Attorney General, Charles E. Estabrook; Railroad Commissioner, Herman Nelser of Shawano; Superintendent of Public Instruction, E. D. Coe of Brown; Commissioner of Public Lands, Anson Squier of Polk.

The platform adopted indorses the administration of Cleveland, reaffirms the platform of last May, indorses the St. Louis platform and declares for a reduction the issue of the campaign, and opposes sumptuary laws.

DEMOCRATS WIN.

The Election in Arkansas Results in a Victory for Democracy.

A Little Rock, Ark., special states that the Democratic State ticket was elected by increased majorities. The amendment calling a convention to draft a new State constitution was voted down. Both branches of the Legislature are strongly Democratic. The ticket elected is as follows:

Governor, John P. Eagle; Secretary of State, Noah Fisher; Attorney General, Jeff Davis; Treasurer, William I. Woodruff; Auditor, Sam W. Dunlap; Land Commissioner, Paul M. Dillon; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Lloyd E. Thompson; Chief Justice, S. R. Cockrill.

NEBRASKA POLITICS.

The Laboring Men Meet in State Convention and Nominate Ticket.

The Union Labor State Convention of Nebraska was held at Hastings, and this ticket nominated:

Governor, David Butler of Pawnee County; Lieutenant Governor, Thomas Darnell of Brown County; State Auditor, Thomas J. Mathews of Island; State Treasurer, D. C. Sandall of Nemaha; Attorney General, A. J. Cornish of Douglas; Commissioner of Public Lands and Buildings, F. M. Tanner of Custer County; Superintendent of Public Instruction, M. H. Wood of Gage County.

A REPUBLICAN VICTORY.

Returns from the Vermont Election Indicate a Republican Gain.

The Republican ticket was elected in Vermont by a majority of about 27,000, the returns indicating Republican gains. Congressmen Grosvenor and Grout are re-elected by good majorities. The Senate will be solidly Republican, while the House will show an increased Republican membership. The Republicans gained strength at Burlington and in Franklin County.

A Negress Swamped.

Harriet Davis, a young negress, charged, with two other persons, with stealing $700 from a white woman, was taken by masked men from the Sheriff at Geneva, Ga., tied to a tree, and scourged; but, maintaining her innocence, she was again returned to the custody of the Sheriff.

A Life Prisoner Pardoned.

Elmer B. Thomas, a veteran soldier and life prisoner in the Ohio Penitentiary, has been pardoned unconditionally after serving four-ten years. He was very anxious to get out in time to take part in the Grand Army encampment and in the parade with his old company.

Hawkeye Thieves.

A gang of thieves are working around Mason City, Iowa. Twenty head of cattle have been stolen and the express office at Plymouth robbed.

THE YELLOW SCOURGE.

AN APPEAL FOR MONEY, NURSES AND DOCTORS.

The People of Jacksonville, Fla., Sorely Afflicted and in Immediate Need of Aid—Nearly Four Hundred Cases of Yellow Fever Reported.

JACKSONVILLE (Fla.) special:

At the New York Yellow Fever Headquarters at Jacksonville, Fla., on the 5th inst. furnished the following special:

There were forty-three new cases of chills and fever reported to the Board of Health, and there are now no people of the United States has been issued.

To our friends and fellow-citizens of the United States:

We, the authorized representatives of the citizens of Jacksonville, recognizing the fact that the yellow fever is prevailing in our city, and that our funds are insufficient for our people with the many cases of absolute destitution, we feel we have no alternative but to appeal to the humanitarians and the generous, and owing to the absence of our Mayor, who is ill, we, the undersigned, have taken the responsibility upon us, and we now think that we are justified in asking our fellow-citizens of the United States to send us help in the shape of money, nurses and doctors, and we now ask that the money be forwarded to the Mayor of this city, or to the undersigned, who will gratefully receive the aid that they have offered and the help they have promised, and we have to assure all of those who have offered to help us that we will do our best to make the most of every dollar and every hour of their time and money. We request that a committee be appointed to receive and disburse the contributions, and we, as a committee, request the President of the United States to call a National Board of Health.

President County Board of Health, J. E. Lee; President City Board of Health, P. McQuaid.

Acting President Yellow Fever Association.

The cry for help has gone forth from the yellow fever stricken city of Jacksonville, Fla., to the people of Memphis and Shelby County, and the response from the people of Memphis and Shelby County in these days says the number of cases reported was exceedingly small, and that the yellow fever is not a matter of fear. There are a few cases of the fever in the city, and if the people of the South want to help the people of Jacksonville they can do so by the exercise of patience and forbearance. It is a fever that is not contagious, and there are a few cases

A NEW YORK hatter has abandoned Cleveland to his fate, and declares that he and his 700 employes will vote solidly for Harrison and Morton. He pretends to lay it all to the Mills bill, but it is plain—knowing they will lose—that he is trying to catch the trade of republicans who bet hats on the election.

The tariff on sugar is a purely revenue tariff—making, together with that on cigars, wines, silks and jewelry, our legitimate tariff revenue. But the Mills bill reduces the tariff on refined sugar by 20 per centum ad valorem, and upon raw sugar by 35 per cent. The saving to the consumers will exceed $20,000,000 per annum. If this bill were a law the enormous and atrocious sugar trust would be pulverized.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

JUDGE HILTON says that if the Mills bill becomes a law he will start up the six woolen mills in Albany, belonging to the Stewart estate, which were closed six years ago because they could not be run on a profit. Thousands of men and women were once employed in the mills. Judge Hilton says that as soon as he can buy the foreign wools, which he is compelled to mix with the domestic product, as cheap as the English manufacturers can, he will operate his mills to their fullest capacity. He believes that if our manufacturers are given free raw materials this country can again successfully compete with England for the commercial primacy of the world.—Mason Democrat.

The real issue in this campaign is between democracy, labor and the people on one hand, and republican capital and trusts on the other. Let not the working man allow himself to be deceived by the false cries of the republican managers hungry for the spoils and trickster as to the means by which they may obtain them. Let the issue be understood, and let no amount of republican "protection" literature and oratory fooled on mistatements and meant but to deceive, divert the people's minds from that issue. It is a simple one, and can be easily grasped and remembered. It is democracy and the people against republicanism and the cormorant combinations of capital and monopoly.—Catholic News.

THE Hartford Times says: A Methodist minister, whose church is within five miles of the Connecticut capitol, was asked this week if it was true that so many republicans in his fold were going this year for prohibition. He answered with almost vehement emphasis, that the reports as to his and other churches had not done justice to the truth. "Why," he added, "in my church almost the entire number of members who are republicans will vote for Fisk; and it is so in other churches of our denomination. There are whole conferences of Methodist republicans who will die year vote with the prohibitionists. They cannot and will not stand the free whisky platform put up at Chicago, nor the Bob Ingersollism that seemed to rule the convention; we have got through with the republicans and the election returns will show it."

"IRISH FREE TRADE."

Hon. Frank Hurd Exposes a War Tariff Fraud.

In a short and able article in The New York World Hon. Frank Hurd gives the true history of certain events which have been shamefully misrepresented by the advocates of the war tariff. Their usual statement of the case is briefly this: "Ireland once had many flourishing industries, but England forced free trade upon her and reduced her people to poverty and misery."

There is not a word of truth in the statement. On the contrary, the whole fight of the Irish patriots from 1785 to 1850 was for freedom in trade and religion. Catholic emancipation and the repeal of laws restricting trade went hand in hand; the same men fought for both: Bright, Cobden and their allies in England, Daniel O'Connell and his colaborers in Ireland. Every Irish patriot was and is a free trader; every British friend of Ireland was and is a free trader. The first violation of the treaty of Limerick was in the passage of laws forbidding the Irish to trade with France and the American colonies. On this point all historians agree, though they differ as to almost everything else, whether Celt or Saxon, Catholic or Protestant, from Macaulay to Pendergast, and from Froude to Father Tom Burke. The result was the ruin of Ireland. And all those laws were passed by "war tariffites"—that is, British Tories—for it was before the days of Adam Smith and common sense and England had no free trade policy.

But the American revolution broke out, the French war followed and England had to conciliate Ireland, an independent Irish parliament was created and a measure of free trade was secured. Mr. Hurd states the result thus:

"In the sixteen years which followed—from 1782 to 1798—the progress of the Irish people under the new policy was wonderful. Lord Clare, not often ready to speak a friendly word of Ireland, wrote in 1798: 'There is not a nation on the habitable globe which has advanced in cultivation and commerce, in agriculture and manufacturing, with the same rapidity in the same time.' It is apparent that this British 'free trade' for which the Irish parliament had asked did not destroy Irish industries. On the contrary, it gave them the first healthful impetus they had received for more than a century. From that time until 1846 the same laws substantially governed both the Irish and English industries. But these laws were severely passed for the purpose of protection. Of course the baleful influences of this system were more serious in Ireland than in England, because of the severity of the repressive laws by which the former had been governed in the preceding century. That the Irish people realized the burdens which protection imposed and were hostile to the continuance of the policy was shown by the position they took with reference to the repeal of the corn laws."

If free trade injured Ireland, why was every Irish patriot a free trader? There is not an exception. Here is an extract from the speech of Daniel O'Connell at Covent Garden theatre, Feb. 21, 1844:

"If protection were useful anywhere it must be peculiarly so in Ireland, which was nearly altogether an agricultural country. But how had it operated on the wages of labor there? Four pence a day was considered good, six pence bountiful, and the agricultural laborer was in ecstasy with eight pence. Such was the effect of the corn laws in Ireland. And even at these prices there was want of employment. Ireland, then, was with them heart and soul in the cause. She had always been with them on this question. * * * Yes, Ireland was with them, and the reception which I have met this night, when heard in Ireland, would excite no little sense of gratification in that country. [Loud cheers.] Oh, that shout—it will not be confined to the walls of this theatre—ringing through the metropolis, it will be carried over by the eastern winds to Ireland. It will be heard on the banks of the noble Shannon; it will mingle with the flow of the Nore, the Suir and the Barrow, and will bring back as its response an answer that the people of Ireland will not endure to see their fellow subjects of England 'starved by the cupidity of the protectionists.'"

In 1846 the repeal of restrictive laws began; by 1850 it was complete. Of course freedom has not done as much for Ireland as for England, because there is not so much of it, but here are some of the events:

"In the linen mills in 1850 21,121 persons were employed, in 1870, 56,848. In 1850 Ireland's exports were valued at £36,611, in 1870 at £60,875. In 1850 102 vessels, with 17,573 tonnage, were registered in Irish ports; in 1870 there were 174, with a tonnage of 58,245. In 1850 there were 18,208 vessels, with a tonnage of 2,358,168, engaged in trade between England and Ireland, and in 1869 there were 52,807, with 11,565,874 tonnage. The estimated capital in Ireland in 1851 was £95,386,000, while in 1861 it was £277,843,000. The whole history of Ireland since 1850, as I am able to state from an examination of statistical tables to which I have had access, justifies the following remark of a distinguished observer:

"'Throughout the whole country agriculture has made remarkable and felicitous progress. Above all, the condition of the poorer classes has passed through a happy change. The cotter class has, in a large measure, been converted into the agricultural laborer, and the rate of wages has increased enormously. Tried by every conceivable economic law—amount of production, return of industry, proportion between the burdens of land and its profits, remuneration of labor, accumulation of all kinds of capital—Ireland is vastly improved beyond what it was in the last generation.

"Much, of course, remains to be accomplished to make Ireland a prosperous country. True prosperity cannot come to a people oppressed by a cruel and system, which robs the laborers of their earnings for absentee landlords, while at the same time they are denied the right of local self government. But the improvement which has been commenced under free trade will grow in steadily increasing proportions under the same policy when landlordism shall have been overthrown and home rule established.

"During the period which has elapsed since the adoption of free trade the political condition of Ireland has been vastly improved. The emancipation of Catholics, commenced at an earlier date, has been fully accomplished. The Irish church has been disestablished. Rents have been reduced. The land laws have been modified in the interest of the tenant, and an agitation for home rule has been begun which, I believe, will not and until Ireland has won her own parliament. Does any one imagine that such measures could have been adopted by the generation which imposed upon Ireland the restrictions of the seventeenth and Eighteenth centuries? Who shall say that all these reforms are not largely due to that liberal spirit which free trade always begets and which is ever at war with the selfishness which would repress commerce and by chains give the power of a man to control as he pleases his own toil his own life.

What Ireland needs is not less freedom, but more; not a loss of commercial freedom, but a gain of freedom of land. How can it benefit Ireland to fasten monopolies upon America? How can we and Ireland more effectively than by admitting her products on fair and reasonable terms?" In conclusion Mr. Hurd says: "If the American duties on Irish linens, laces, poplins and certain kinds of woolens, the manufacturing of which can never be carried on here, were removed. Ainge would get cheaper goods, the markets of 60,000,000 people would be opened to Irish products, and a prosperity would come to Ireland which would terminate the sad emigration which makes exiles of her people in every land under the sun. I know of no way by which Irish-Americans can more effectively aid their kinsmen across the seas than by reducing the duties upon foreign goods imposed by the American tariff.

"Fourth—The Irish people ask the sympathy of the world with their aspiration to govern themselves. Their demand is for a larger liberty and the better have which a legislature acquainted with Irish local needs may enact. They ask for the removal of restrictions, for the abrogation of unwise laws and for the enjoyment of rights which power and prerogative have taken away from them. In what respect is the demand of the tariff reformer different from this? He asks for the enjoyment of his natural right to do as pleases with his own earnings, the removal of the restrictions which the law has imposed upon him and the repeal of the unwise laws which have interfered with his liberty. How can Irish-American who ask for American sympathy for their kinsmen refuse their assistance to their fellow countrymen who are engaged in a similar struggle?

"The forms of oppression are varied. Ill gotten wealth, monopoly and class legislation pursue different paths in different lands. But their aim and end are the same everywhere. The foe of their tyranny in one land ought to be its foe in every other. The cause which in one land strengthens the hands of a people struggling to be free in another is unworthy of the sympathy of lovers of liberty everywhere. The hand which would break the fetters of Ireland ought not to rivet the chains of America."

Wool and Woolen Mills.

High tariff papers are sorely pushed to find arguments in support of their theories. Anything having the most remote bearing upon the tariff is set down to the malign influence of the Mills bill.

The Santa Rosa woolen mill will shut down because it cannot be operated to advantage. When it was built it was in the center of a wool producing district, but the sheep pastures of Sonoma county having been converted into paying orchards and vineyards, the sheep disappeared. So it is proposed to remove the plant and machinery of the mill to Goneville, to be near the wool supply.

It would be as reasonable to charge this loss to Santa Rosa to the Mills bill as it was to charge to that measure the lockout of their operatives by the Pennsylvania iron masters who wanted to beat down wages. But high tariff papers in this city allege that the action of the iron masters was forced upon them as a precautionary measure, in view of a threatened change of tariff. Of course this was not the reason, but the statement was boldly put forth to aid the iron and steel trust in their attempt to lower the pay of their already poverty stricken workingmen.—San Francisco Examiner.

The Two Keynotes.

The Republican keynote, as supplied by Mr. Blaine, is that wages can be voted up or voted down. "The wages of American labor," he proclaims, "cannot be reduced except with the consent and the votes of the American laborer himself."

There is not an intelligent workingman in the United States but knows this is ridiculous nonsense. The wages of American laborers have been reduced many times, under the "highest tariff in the world," not only without their consent and vote, but against their energetic protest and determined strikes.

Trade unions and other labor organizations have done more to force up and to keep up wages than have all the laws that were ever passed.

The Democratic keynote is that taxes which were voted up to meet the heavy expenditures of war should be reduced down to meet the lessened requirements of peace.

Taxes have been voted up and voted down. Wages never were. Let workingmen choose between fiction and facts and relieve themselves of unnecessary taxation.—New York World.

A Weighty Fact.

There is an immense crop of war tariff fallacies this year. Monopoly dies hard and will evidently lie with the last gasp.—Pittsburg Post.

The American Tory Party.

The presidential campaign, in its essence, is a struggle between the privileged classes and the industrial classes of the country. The Republican party, in all vital points, is a reproduction on this side of the Atlantic of the Tory party of Jonathan Edwards. The distance between the two organizations is well worth examining, for it presents to the reflecting mind some extremely pertinent suggestions. The English Tories have always made it their watchwords to keep a people struggling down to be free in another is unworthy of the sympathy of lovers of liberty everywhere. The hand which would break the fetters of Ireland ought not to rivet the chains of America."

Blaine's Awkward Task.

Before he shall begin his campaigning for Harrison, Mr. Blaine will have to place himself through a course of training and practice. He is accustomed to a repast of the salt tax, the lumber tax and the sugar tax. These things are abhorrent to the protective mind. But he is more strikingly at variance with his party as to free whisky. He is opposed to the repeal of the whisky tax as a movement morally vicious and sure to uproot the system of high license. These opinions do Mr. Blaine credit, but they will mar his usefulness on the stump.—Philadelphia Record.

A Queer Idea, Indeed.

It is a queer idea that 60,000,000 of intelligent and energetic people, with a vast and rich domain and unlimited natural resources, are unequal to the creation of industries in competition with the overcrowded and partly exhausted countries of Europe. It is still a queerer idea that they have created those industries by piling taxes upon what they buy from other countries and transferring the products of the labor of one class to another class by the process of law. But the people will not be fooled much longer with those absurdities.—New York Times.

Are They Children?

The Tribune, telling Dr. Storrs on the back, tells him he is "too manly a man to be deceived by such a trick as to wage war against free trade and the saloons." Embarrassed by the compliment, the Congregationalist children. The Tribune can't consider the writers of that free whisky Chicago platform.—New York Post.

The Laws of Trade.

We might pay subsidies until every cent of a steamship could run his vessel in ballast and yet find that we could not increase trade to the extent of making one same foreign pay a dollar for an American jackknife so long as he could buy an equally good one elsewhere for 90 cents.—Providence Journal.

Changed Its Mind.

In the platform of 1856 "the Republican party pledges itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff and to reduce the surplus." In the platform of 1888 it declares it will do nothing of the kind.—Albany Argus.

CHAIRMAN MILLS.

In an Eloquent Address He Defines the Position of the Democratic Party.

It Has Always Been a Friend of the Laboring Man and the Enemy of Monopoly.

The Great Issues of the Present Campaign Presented in a Masterly Manner.

Speech of Hon. Roger Q. Mills, Delivered at Chicago on the 25th of August.

We present below the salient points of the very eloquent address of Chairman Roger Quimby Mills, of the Wave and Mesca Committee:

"Ladies and gentlemen, fellow-citizens and citizens of the State of Illinois, no words can express my gratification as I stand among the representatives of the unconquered Democracy of the Northwest. I stand before you to discuss the great issues now submitted to the arbitrament of the ballot-box by the great arbiter of American finance. I will not, in the presence of the same given by the great chief of the Republican party, Mr. Blaine, when he first landed upon our shores, that the New York 'is an old back to skin again." Nor will I come and from entire party to day stands where its grandsires stood a hundred years ago. It stands where our fathers stood when they made the real not the shun from tyrant of labor. We have before us the same issues that our fathers met, and the same enemies had when the war ended, which left the field of Appomattox God, and declared that this country should forever be one, united, one and indivisible. When our armies were disbanded and our fathers came home again, the people were bringing into the Federal Treasury more money than was needed for the economical administration of our Republican friends felt the responsibility upon them to reduce taxation and to restore the money of the people to channels of business circulation. How did they do it? The professed friends of the people, the Republicans, repealed the tobacco tax, and decreased the whiskey tax. Thus from a tax imposed upon the products of domestic manufacture of 50 cent per gallon. They increased that to 90 per cent. Of his protection, taking the money from the people to use the benefit of the Government, which it was taking in excess of that amount out of the pocket of the people. They repealed the tax that was taking, $50,000,000 of the profits of the manufacturer, lolling in his palace, and put on the clothing of the people, and my friends, it is a question of labor from cradle to grave, and I am glad to be with this again. They found a tax upon railroads, the vast system that is spanning the whole country with millions upon millions of dollars, and they took off the tax on the income of the railroad, and increased the tax on the food of the people.

"Now, I find a tax on income, and out of 50,000,000 people in the United States, only 7,000 have an income over the amount exempt for income support, bringing into the Treasury of the United States government $70,000,000 of a net annual income of $600,000,000; but it was so hard that it was a tax upon the income of the poor laborers that were cutting cordwood from their lots and putting them in their pockets, they could not stand it any longer, and in one short year—yes, as the flags of the Confederate battalions were furled forever, the Congress of the Union arrayed—they turned loose to their wives and their children—timing home to their ties away. And what did they do for the big men? They took all the bank tax away; they took off all the taxes from the express companies; they took all the tax of the telegraph companies; they taxed everything that the people had, and taxed upon wealth; but they have piled it from six high upon labor and toil, and they organized strength in this country, something that was never heard of until the Republican party organized it in 1860. Now, I am glad to be a Democrat outside in on the Republican party is doing business at the old stand and in the old way. It is the party of the people. It is the party that Thomas Jefferson organized in the year 1800 to fight the aristocracy of the Federalists party, who were the old Federal party. Jefferson, the great Democrat, organized the party, devoted to the people and the principle of self government, who believed that they ought to be cared for by the Government as a father cares for his children to keep them from falling into the ditch. Jefferson was the great Democrat, who said that the people were capable of self-government, and that the Government was not the father of the people but the servant of the people. And so when the Federal administration, the Federal party, the Federal Government, in process to keep them from criminal, it was it was wrong, passed a law authorizing the President to take the United States to send all foreigners that were initiated in his judgment to the benefit of humanity, beyond to break their bonds and set free slaves. Jefferson, the great Democrat, said, 'Oh, for shame upon him if he dared to believe that he was a free-born American citizen and to discuss the admission into of th Government that he had created; but when he was naturalized and brought into the line of the Democratic party, which he organized.

"Now, I want to show you what the policy of the Democratic party is on this great question of tariff. Jefferson, the great Democrat, said, 'Let the people believe that the taxes imposed upon them are the inalienable rights, as Jefferson declared in the Declaration of Independence, rights which were secured to them by constitutional restriction against encroachments upon them on the part of the tyrant, and they will be satisfied.' Jefferson, the great, to look at the proceeds of your toil, except such as may be necessary to support an honest and economical and efficient administration of the Government. Now, then, we find that with those taxes taken off, and the money left in the pocket of the people, they have placed upon the cattle foods, as my friend has told you so fully and so clearly, a tax of 20 per cent, which goes into the public treasury over and above all that is required for the support and maintenance of the Government. When I stand during my first term, I made a speech in the House of Representatives, and I stated to the Republicans that if they would repeal the tax on the cattle food, we would give them a tariff on wool, because, because anyone who knows anything about finance will tell you that the value of all property, the value of all labor, the value of all products, is measured by the value of the cost of money in circulation. If there is a full amount in circulation prices are high, and the price of labor is high, but if you extract from the channels of trade all the money there is in circulation there is nothing left, and there would be nothing in the tariff and wool would be stripped and it would be stripped, and it would be stripped, and it would be stripped, and it would stalk through our ruined land. Now that money has got to be taken out of the Treasury and given back to the people. We have not got any money to spare. We have not got any money to spare off. The Republican look. It all of three years ago. All the burden of taxation to-day rests on the people, on articles consumed by the masses, on articles produced by labor—on articles of necessity. The revenue is more necessary to the Government than it was before the war. There are 15,000 miles of railway drawing 200,000,000 a year for government. That does not pay one dollar for its protection to the Government. Now, I ask the Republicans, if they have caused a sigh through our House in the time of peace, what will be the sigh of the poor laborer when the Democrats come to take the pocketbook of life to the poor. We have sent to the Republican Senate, and at the last session they did not know what to do with it. My friends, they always have been in the dark deep something, and I know one instance that they have sent to the Senate for the one sent from the House. Don't say anything, don't say what you believe in, because there is great joy around you. I know that the Senate has bill the House sent; stated on the House floor, that the Senate, the Republican party had yet seen enough to distinguish one sweetness. If the people were to give it to them. They said that we must have a bill, and that the Northern party in the House of Representatives, the Republican party, the party of Abraham Lincoln, Thaddeus Stevens, and true Democrat William H. Morrison of Illinois (applause), when I was one of his friends, and he never had a more devoted partisan, now did I ever have a more true friend, and I tell you that the people of the country, but unfortunately for me I was a Democrat, and I was a Democrat, a Democratic President, who was holding the flag of the people in their sight and enabling them to secure by their relief to be the help of the people. President who appealed to the people of the United States, and who, in the last days, he answered by shaking the very ground which stood upon, as you are shaking it to-day, that 'this is our party to save it.' Yes, my friends, they do not pass it the people will say you deserved get the right to be the party of the nation. You ask me why this Treasury has got to be taxed? Why, everybody admits that. The Democratic House has sent you a bill to reduce the taxation to the amount of $70,000,000; now if you do not like that, give us something better. No, they say that they can not. Why, they can not, they can not, they can not. Mr. Blaine said: 'Don't you say a word about it.' Have we the little boy who was idiotic; his mother told him, 'Don't you say a word about it.' Have we body says to the Republican party, 'Don't say a word about and they will never find out you are a fool; idiots don't know how to talk, you have been unfortunate keep your mouth shut. One day your mother said, 'Now, I will do so, what is your name?' The boy said, 'Nothing.' My little son, where do you live?' He did not know a thing. 'My little son, what is the name of your father?' He didn't say anything. 'My little son, what is the name of your mother?' He did not say anything. This disgusted the fellow, and he said, 'Certainly, I will do so.' 'Oh, he says, 'mother, he has found it out, and I never opened my mouth.'

"Now, some of the chiefs said we must avoid that; that we must. We must frame a bill and we must do it. We must do it, and we must do it. We must do it to the people so that, how, then, they are selling between cyclia and Charybdis, and there is a whirlpool on one side and on certain pass so of rocks in the other, and a Democratic party, and a Democratic President, and an opinion, being as with individuals in a change, if the Democracy shall be so dazed as to be blind, of course we and the employment of labor. Now what are you going to do? If they do not take the tax off of necessities of life, if they do not take the tax off of necessities of life, if they do not take the tax off of necessities of life, if

JEWISH FUNERAL CUSTOMS.

Many of Their Most Ancient Rites Still Observed—Peculiar Ceremonies.

In their funeral rites and observances the Jews have preserved many of the most ancient customs of their race. They still rend the upper garments in token of bereavement, as Jacob did when informed of the death of his favorite son; they still seat themselves for seven days on the ground in sign of mourning, as Job and his friends are represented in the Scripture to have done. They still call the mourners' meal, as their ancestors did in Palestine; they kindle the memorial light to comfort the departed soul, as they did, in all likelihood, ages before Judaism was known; and they still recite in public the mourners' prayer, every repetition of which—according to rabbinical notions—helps the deceased a step further out of purgatory. In the west as in the east these customs are practically the same—we mean among the great bulk of observant Jews. The very wealthy and the more highly cultured members of the synagogue are in these things, as in many others, a law unto themselves.

The Jews rigidly exclude all relatives from the chamber of a dying co-religist. Only strangers should be present when the soul leaves the body. As soon as death occurs all the vessels in the house containing water are emptied. On the continent, in places where Jews reside, the emptying of the water vessels in the public roadway is the usual mode of notifying that a death has occurred. The practice had its origin, we gather from the rabbinical books, in an Old World superstition that standing water in such circumstances became the abiding place of certain evil spirits whose presence in the house was prejudicial both to the dead and to the living. In the interval between death and interment the Jews lay the corpse upon the bare ground with the feet toward the door. The body is covered, but nothing—saving occasionally a little straw—may be placed under it. Then the two big toes are tied together. On Sabbaths it is not, however, permitted to remove a body on to the floor; it would be work. But as it is sometimes necessary that this should nevertheless be done, rabbinical ingenuity has contrived a means of accomplishing it without violating the sanctity of the day. A loaf of bread is placed upon the corpse, and the two together are lifted to the ground. It is held that only the bread has been moved, and this is permitted on the Sabbath.

Two or three hours before the interment takes place the ceremonial purification of the body known as the tahara takes place. It consists merely in pouring seven definite measures of warm water over the body, while repeating the words: "I will pour upon you cleansing waters, and ye shall be cleansed of your uncleanliness; for of all your iniquities I will purify you." The body is then placed in the coffin attired in a white cotton gown known as a kittel. This kittel is, in northern Europe, presented to a bridegroom by his bride on the day of their wedding, and is worn by him on certain occasions, such as the Day of Atonement and the Passover Eve celebration. It is made by the female relatives of the bride, but she herself must not take part in the sewing of it. In Poland, Galicia, and in Russia the bridegroom always wears the death garment under the wedding canopy during the performance of the marriage ceremony. Besides the kittel, the body is enveloped in the praying scarf or talith used by the deceased during life. When this is done the relatives are summoned. One by one they draw near and bend over the coffin; a friend takes a sharp knife and makes a slit in one of the outer garments of the mourners—on the right side if the deceased be a parent, on the left if a child. The mourner himself then rends the garment, according to the custom of the country. In the east the Jew tears the vestment close across; in England it is only torn a couple of fingers' breadth. The rent must not be sewn up for a month and the mourning garment must be worn for a parent full eleven months. The Spanish and Portuguese Jews rend their undergarments as well.

Except among the German Jews—as they are called—in this country, the last office of the dead are performed by the members of what are termed "Chevrah Kaddisha" or "Holy Brotherhood," an organization formed in every orthodox congregation only for this purpose.

Just as some relatives are excluded from the death chamber, so are females prohibited from attending a funeral or interment. Why this should be so it is difficult to say. The custom of excluding women on such occasion is certainly not an ancient one, since we know from the Talmud and later rabbinical books that, of old, women joined in the funeral processions of their people, chanting dirges appropriate to the occasion. However, nowadays they are not permitted to join, and the obsequies are attended by males only. In Northern Europe and in parts of Russia, a father is not allowed to be present at the interment of the first child he is unfortunate enough to lose. It is believed he will lose a second if he does, though this will not in itself suffice to explain the existence of so strange a custom. The Polish Jews are, however, peculiar in more than this. It is the universal belief of orthodox Hebrews that the resurrection of the dead will take place in the Holy Land, and therefore all bodies will have to make their way underground to Palestine before the day of judgment. So, to facilitate this task, the "Chasidim," or ultra pious of Russia and Poland, put a fork in the hands of the deceased when he is placed in the ground—for coffins are only used in the case of a bier (first born) or a kohen (one of priestly family)—in order that he may dig his way through the ground with it and thus reach the Holy Land, where the resurrection takes place.

On having a cemetery—which is known as the bethelam, "house of eternity," or beth haim, "house of life"—it is customary to pluck some of the grass growing there and throw it over the shoulder without looking back, repeating the words, "Lila' moveth l' netzach" (he will destroy death forever). Primarily the plucking of the grass had no connection with the formula that now accompanies it; but the original symbolism of the act is forgotten, like so many of the practices still extant in Jewry.—St. James' Gazette.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

Adopted by the State Convention at Detroit, July 19, 1888.

The democracy of Michigan assembled in convention for the nomination of state officers, recognizing the fact that its chief duty is to present to the people candidates whose election will bring to the administration of state affairs integrity of character, purity of purpose and sound business methods, reaffirm its adherence to the traditional and established principles and policies of the democratic party in respect to national politics.

We renew the expression of our approval of the administration of President Cleveland and has won the respect and confidence of the people and has justified his renomination in response to the universal sentiment of the democracy by his unceasing devotion to public duty his courageous assistance of democratic principles and his enforcement of pure, just and impartial methods of administration in all the departments of the government.

We view the chief question of national politics, the relief of the people from the burdens of tariff taxation, we declare our unalterable opposition to the present tariff policy of the republican party. We affirm our approval of the last tariff message of President Cleveland as an accurate expression of the just and traditional democratic principles which should govern the whole subject of revenue reform and the relief of the people from the tyranny of a tax, as the chosen standard bearer of the national democracy in his present campaign; to his associate, Allen G. Thurman, a tried statesman distinguished by a long life of public service which has been illustrated by high ability and unsullied integrity and fruitful of benefit to the people we pledge our best efforts to the end that Michigan may once more be enrolled in the list of democratic states

We declare our adherence to the platform of the national democratic convention at St. Louis, and commend the action of our senators and representatives in congress in their efforts to secure a reduction of tariff taxation, thereby preventing the accumulation of a dangerous surplus in the treasury and relieving the people from the burdens of the war tariff.

We believe this course only can bring the policy of the government in this respect in harmony with the constitution, the true interests of the people, the requirements of labor the prosperity of all industries and the development of the resources of this country.

The democracy of Michigan believes in the dignity of American labor; recognizes the rights of wage workers to the fostering care of the government and that legitimate industry of every walk of life shall be encouraged in the work of building up the material interests of state.

The ownership of real estate in this country by foreign corporations and non-resident aliens is injurious to American interests and should be prohibited.

We favor the adoption of measures providing for the health and safety of those engaged in manufacturing, mining and building industries, and the repeal of all class legislation under which monopolies have been fostered and protected.

We demand that congress shall open to the public domain for settlement all lands granted to railroads or other corporations which have not been earned, and more particularly do we demand the forfeiture of all unearned grants of lands in the Upper Peninsula, that that portion of the state may no longer be deprived of its natural growth and and developments.

Tied to the multiplication in this state of petty boards, commissions and so-called, by their own powers and surroundings as incorporate official responsibility just every little legislature or people, leaving the matter of appointments for state officers to be in no way controlled by log rolling combinations, and as well as to the lack of system we attribute great and constant increase of appropriation therefore we submit that the case is one demanding the election of a legislature that shall have the time to make changes which economy and good business methods may dictate.

The doctrine of house rule and local self government are cardinal principles of the democratic party. Therefore we cordially sympathize with the people of Ireland in the great contest which they are making under the leadership of Gladstone and Parnell for the right to have the management of their own affairs.

That though more than twenty-three years have elapsed since the war we should not forget that a large number of that gallant and patriotic army that preserved to us an undivided country is still among us with increasing years and increasing infirmities, the result of their privation and hardship. We believe the general government should deal lastly with these and that liberal pensions should be granted to the disabled, not as charity, but as dues from the country they saved, and more especially we pledge ourselves, and we point with satisfaction to the record of our congressmen who have voted for liberal pensions laws by the present administration, which show a large increase in the amounts annually paid to veterans.

The Verdict Unanimous.

W. D. Sell, Drugist, Bippus, Ind., testifies: I can recommend Electric Bitters to be the best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles and was cured of rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 10 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half a dollar a bottle at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store. 2

A Woman's Discovery.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made and but few in a lady in this county. Diseases fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood the severest tests, but her vitality gradually wasted and death was imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly, and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night, and with one bottle has been entirely cured. The name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus write W. C. Hunrich & Co., of Shelby, N. C. Get a free trial bottle at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

Adopted by the National Convention at St. Louis, June 7, 1888.

The Democratic party of the United States in national convention assembled, renews the pledge of its fidelity to Democratic faith, and reaffirms the platform adopted by its representatives in the convention of 1884, and endorses the views expressed by President Cleveland in his last annual message to congress as the correct interpretation of that platform on the question of tariff reduction; and also endorses the efforts of our Democratic representatives in congress to secure reduction of taxation. Chief among its principles of party faith are the maintenance of an indissoluble union of free and indestructible states, now about to enter upon the second century of an exampled progress and renown; devotion to a form of government under which all have attained a degree of prosperity and happiness granted power and expressly reserved to the states or people; the entire supremacy of the civil power of the government of a jealous popular vigilance, direct responsibility of public officers to the people to enact and execute the laws, and are charged with the duty of preserving peace, ensuring equality and establishing justice. The Democratic party believes an exacting scrutiny of the administration of the executive power, which four years ago was committed to its trust in the election of Grover Cleveland president of the United States, and it challenges the most searching inquiry concerning its fidelity and devotion to the pledges which then invited the confidence of the people.

Across a most critical period of our financial affairs, resulting from over taxation, the accumulation of surplus money in the treasury. To his an unmatched, it has, by the adoption of a wise economic policy, not only avoided a public calamity, but greatly promoted the prosperity of the country. We cordially approve the course and the policy of our President in this important matter, and we pledge our party to a continuance of the same policy, to the end that the burdens of taxation may be lessened, and that the prosperity which has been conferred by the action of a Democratic majority in the senate.

Honor reform in the civil service has been inaugurated and maintained by President Cleveland, and he has brought the public service to the highest standard of efficiency, not only by rule and practice, but by the exercise of his own unsurpassed administrative ability.

In every branch and department of the government the utmost economy and the strictest honesty and the welfare of all the people have been guarded and advanced. Our foreign relations have been protected, and the equality of all our citizens before the law, without regard to race or color, has been steadfastly maintained.

Upon its record thus established, and upon the pledge of a continuance to the people of the benefits of such a government, the national democracy invokes a candid and popular trial by the reduction of taxation, by the maintenance of the honor and the welfare of our country, by the fidelity to all the Constitution, and by the equal and exact justice to all men.

The Republican party, controlling the senate, refusing to pass the bill for the relief of the accumulation of unjust and unequal tax laws, which has piled up a surplus in the treasury, and thus undermining the abundance of a long peace, deny to the people equality before the law and the blessings of a free government.

Maine went democratic in September, last, and Garfield was elected. It went republican in September, 1884, and Cleveland was elected. It went republican again last week by a reduced majority, and Cleveland will be re-elected by an increased majority.

If a net republican loss of 1,250 in a total plurality of about eighteen thousand is a republican tidal wave to make the Sentinel so jubilant, the democrats will help to swell such a tidal wave. "The most popular man in Maine" has made a desperate effort to increase the republican majority of four years ago, but only succeeded in giving a net democratic gain. The democrats can stand more of that kind of tidal wave.

G. R. & I. R. R. Co., give their annual excursion from the southern division of their road this week. This is given as a prospectors excursion, and the railroad company are making dates to connect with the Charlevoix county fair. Are you interested in Charlevoix county? If so, send your best to the fair and show the prospector what northern Michigan can do. Exhibits to the fair will be carried free on boats and delivered on fair ground free.

Henry Barth returned from Chicago Tuesday, with a complete set of steam-fitters, tools and two complete outfits—one for a horse power, and one 25 horse power,—which are for sale to who ever desires. He also received an eight-horse power engine for Wm. Frances' shop, the boiler for which will make one more fire that is at once. Mr. Barth intends to keep engines and boilers on hand, ready for immediate shipment. Parties wanting patent wooden pulleys, in two sections, will find it to their interest to call and examine samples before buying elsewhere.

"A tariff reformer that, in the last Sentinel criticises in severe terms the democratic attempt to reduce tariff taxation, but offers no substitute for giving any relief. Just so with his representatives in congress. They have made no effort to relieve the people, but steadfastly oppose the attempt made by the democrats. They cry that the reduction is too small to be of any value. Then why don't they, and your representatives propose a bill making greater reductions? Why don, you, you republicans, act only with a "dog in the manger." If seven per cent. reduction is not enough, give us this now, and another seven next year, and so on, if it is properly equalized. But reduce it. If not by the Mills bill, then by some other bill that will reduce it honestly and fairly.

Petoskey Will Not Bond.

An effort has been made to get Petoskey to vote $25,000 aid to the D. C. & E. R. R. Co., and bond the village. One argument used there is that the road must go through that town anyway, bonds or no bonds; and another that the construction of the Charlevoix needs a railroad to connect with the outer world, let her get it.—Petoskey don't propose to pay a cent to help build the road, but the other superior advantages of Charlevoix would make her a formidable rival to Petoskey's best and best improvements. While this feeling is expressed by a few, it is sufficient that it is enough to raise a doubt in the mind of some voters as to whether it is necessary to give Petoskey the road.

Mr. C. F. Hankey, president of the Business Men's Association, has interested himself in the road, and tried to arouse the interest of the Petoskey but without success. In the last issue of the Democrat he published a letter detailing the results of his further effort to urge the people of Petoskey to call a special election for the purpose of bonding the town for a railroad. He says: "After working nearly a year to get Petoskey to bond, I find it impossible to interest the leading men in this town in enterprise. One man can not boom or build a railroad. There is no doubt but that it would be carried if an election was called. But Mr. Cherrie nor myself do not desire to have a road forced upon Petoskey. We requested the co-operation of leading tax payers, and have been rebuffed. Mr. Cherrie positively informs me that the route will be changed to miss our town, as we will not bond to pay the bonus. It will cost Petoskey $50,000 if the stakes are ever changed back to where they are at present."

If the route is changed, it will be because it will be a little more on Clarion, opening up the Bear Lake resort, and across the G. R. & I. road at Bay View. It will cost less to build and maintain the inland route than the one on the lake front. It will control just as much freight business, and just the same resort travel. Officers of the company are sure as that they are not begging the aid of Petoskey to build the road on the lake front. But if it is built there for the convenience of Petoskey business interests, her citizens should be willing to contribute something toward protecting and maintaining the road after it is built. The road will be located where it can be built and maintained for the best money, all things considered, and if Petoskey wants the road on her lake front, the wish must be expressed in a tangible manner.

Next week they will return and begin housekeeping in the Perry Weed house on Clinton street. May prosperity go with them.

The school board have given the school house a general overhauling, painting and kalsomining the woodwork and walls, and cleaning up generally. The old Marshall furniture is being put in the classrooms further up in the place. At the village hall Abbott's old school house is being removed, and a Charlevoix furnace will be put in its place.

Dr. F. Ingersoll yesterday addressed voters by posters that he is prepared to treat all diseases of horses and cattle scientifically and successfully, and guarantees satisfaction. Any one needing any assistance in the line of veterinary surgery in this county should give him a trial. Orders may be left at his residence on Antrim street near corner of Grant, or at either of the livery barns.

Protection advocates have asserted, and it is being repeated on the street, that a 70 per cent protective tariff on woolen goods increases the price of a $13 suit of clothes only ten cents. What is the good of a protective tariff that does not raise the price more than that? Why do they fight so hard for it? But if it could be true, is not that ten cents worth more to the poor consumer than it is to the rich manufacturer?

FISHERMEN AND TARIFF

THE SENTINEL LIES DISPROVED.

The Mills Bill More Favorable Than the Present Tariff.

The blunderings of the Sentinel (not to call them by a worse name) upon the political issues of the day are truly pitiable. In yesterday's issue it made several references to fishermen and fish, and as usual showed that it either did not know what it was talking about, or else was practicing willful deception. Here is a specimen from its first page: "Remember, fisherman, the Mills bill puts fresh fish on the free list and leaves the present duty on twine." This, in face of the fact that hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of fresh fish have come in free for many years past—over six hundred thousand dollars worth for the year 1887, aside from fresh salmon,—and in face of the fact that the tariff act of 1883, in its free list are these words: "Fish, fresh, for immediate consumption."

If the Sentinel desires to be honest with its readers it will look this matter up, (see Report on Commerce and Navigation, 1887) and will acknowledge the falsity of its statements.

And will the Sentinel please inform us where in the Mills bill the fresh fish put on the free list? The statement is repeated but it is not true. Where is the money another protectionist shed, is in straits for an argument and has therefore fallen back on falsification.

We desire our readers to read the Mills bill, for in it they will find many wholesome reforms, and among the rest many material reductions in the tax on fishermen's supplies.

In addition to several paragraphs the Sentinel has two long and labored articles on tariff and protection that are as trashy as its misstatements on fish and fishermen. We may find time to notice them next week.

Hon. Bartley Breen

Every informed person knows that Hon. Bartley Breen is the favorite representative and champion of the wage-earners of Michigan. He is no dress parade advocate of the Knights of Labor for revenue only; and there is not the remotest taint of demagoguery in his make-up. He is a strong, manly, unblishable champion of the toilers of the land. His fights in the legislature have saved thousands of the upper peninsula world of itself gratuities heavier with taxation, and Goliah of the land grabbing syndicate, headed by James McMillan, the rich millionaire who today leads the republican hosts and hopes to go to the U. S. senate to represent the wealth power instead of the people. All honor to brave and honest Bartley Breen. We append a good word from the Bay City Press of recent date:

"That Bartley Breen is regarded as their representative by the labor element of the upper peninsula there can be no doubt; the unjustly convicted for conspiracy attempt the attack of that liberty-loved to him. It was the upper peninsula vote that saved you rival to Petoskey's beautiful and business interests. While this feeling is expressed by a few, it is sufficient that it is enough to raise a doubt in the mind of some voters as to whether it is necessary to give Petoskey the road.

Mr. C. F. Hankey, president of the Business Men's Association, has interested himself in the road, and tried to arouse the interest of the Petoskey but without success. In the last issue of the Democrat he published a letter detailing the results of his further effort to urge the people of Petoskey to call a special election for the purpose of bonding the town for a railroad. He says: "After working nearly a year to get Petoskey to bond, I find it impossible to interest the leading men in this town in enterprise. One man can not boom or build a railroad. There is no doubt but that it would be carried if an election was called. But Mr. Cherrie nor myself do not desire to have a road forced upon Petoskey. We requested the co-operation of leading tax payers, and have been rebuffed. Mr. Cherrie positively informs me that the route will be changed to miss our town, as we will not bond to pay the bonus. It will cost Petoskey $50,000 if the stakes are ever changed back to where they are at present."

If the route is changed, it will be because it will be a little more on Clarion, opening up the Bear Lake resort, and across the G. R. & I. road at Bay View. It will cost less to build and maintain the inland route than the one on the lake front. It will control just as much freight business, and just the same resort travel. Officers of the company are sure as that they are not begging the aid of Petoskey to build the road on the lake front. But if it is built there for the convenience of Petoskey business interests, her citizens should be willing to contribute something toward protecting and maintaining the road after it is built. The road will be located where it can be built and maintained for the best money, all things considered, and if Petoskey wants the road on her lake front, the wish must be expressed in a tangible manner.

Cleveland's Letter of Acceptance.

The following endorsement by the Louisville Courier Journal of Grover Cleveland's letter will be read with interest. Cleveland's letter in full will be found on our sixth page:

The president's letter of acceptance is a corker. It knocks the bottom completely out of the protection tub and sends a flood of daylight straight through the robber camp. It strips the little infant industry of all its clothing unnecessary for its protection, and tells the naked truth about how it subsists and fattens off the toil of the people. It lays bare the enormities and crimes which have been practiced for years and years by trust combines formed and protected to pillage the populace. Blaine, of Maine, is raked from top to toe, and all of his recent shamefull utterances heavily exposed to the view of honest Americans.

There never was a better, a more conservative, broad, intelligent, and able document written than this letter of Grover Cleveland. It is the light of an honest man, a true patriot and a magnificent defender of the rights of the people and their government. Every line bears the mark of sincerity, and throughout the 3,000 words is the genuine stamp of statemanship. It is the most just, earnest, convincing and unanswerable plea for tariff reform that has ever been penned. No man can read it, be he democrat or republican, without being struck with the sincere, honest, manly, and vigorous manner in which the president so clearly and forcibly presents his views. He uses no catch phrases, indulges in no highfalutin language, minces no words, and dodges no question. He takes the straight, open, direct avenue to the minds of the people and tells them in plain, simple words that they are being robbed, how they are robbed, and who the robbers are. The people of every country in the Union, containing a population of fifty thousand, are robbed annually of over one hundred thousand dollars by unjust taxation. Oh, Protection, what crimes are committed in thy name!

Dodge the tariff question, will he? Not by a jug full of the free whisky of the republican party. He not only does not dodge it, but he walks straight into the den of the protected barons and crams the doctrine of a "tariff for revenue only" down them. He tells them to their teeth that they have stolen millions upon millions of the people's money, and, to prove it, cites them in that treasury of Washington there already accumulated $134,000,000, which is lying idle, and the highway robbery goes on daily at the rate of nine millions a month.

Dodge the tariff issue, will he? Oh, I guess not. Take it all back, boys, and face the tariff question as one composed of a gigantic absurdity and a monstrous wrong. The democratic party will come out from this conflagration of the tariff question with its character as a party of reform and honesty in the land.

Mr. Blaine has "made" an largely private matters with which the government has no right to interfere, favors civil service reform; dodges the question of prohibition; and undertakes to pin himself in harmony with his party on other questions, leaving the country to determine for itself what the policy of the party is on any question. It is not stamped with any great force of character.

DEMOCRATIC MEETINGS.

GOOD LIST OF APPOINTMENTS.

Hiram B. Hudson, of Mancelona to Address our People

Hon. H. B. Hudson, of Mancelona, democratic candidate for congress for the ninth district, will address the people of Charlevoix and vicinity on the political issues of the day, at Bartholomew's opera hall on Monday evening, Oct. 1st. Everybody interested in lower taxes and good government should be present. The ladies invited.

Mr. Hudson will also speak at East Jordan on Tuesday evening, Oct. 2d, and at Boyne City on Wednesday evening, Oct. 3d. Give him full houses.

PERSONAL MENTION.

W. H. Phelps is on the sick list this week.

F. W. Wilcox and wife returned to Kalamazoo yesterday.

Mary Scroggie is home from Petoskey for a short visit.

A. T. Washburne went to Chicago on the Petoskey yesterday.

Miss Mildred Hudkins, of Wilson, is the guest of Lena Goss this week.

R. S. Shapton rejoices over a son which arrived at his house Monday morning.

I. D. Bixby and family and Mrs. O. W. Hayman, returned to Kalamazoo yesterday.

O. C. Ainsworth and family returned to their home in Sandwich, Ills., this week.

Miss Cora Bingham resumes her place in A. T. Washburne & Co's store this week.

Miss Flora Nelson returned home last week and has resumed her place in the schools.

Mrs. S. A. Richards of Lacrosse, Wis., is a guest of her brother, Chas. E. Swallow, this week.

Elmer Archer, who has been driving the Eastport stage for the past year, is now attending the Charlevoix schools.

A. D. Cruickshank, F. J. Meech, and R. M. Cherrie were at Harbor Springs Monday evening, at a railroad meeting.

J. Reed Emrey and wife started for Louisiana this week, hoping that a change of climate will benefit Mr. Emrey's health.

Miss Rose Stockoe arrived Friday to resume her place in the Charlevoix schools. She will make her home with R. A. Emrey.

Col. Dunbar, of the Belvedere, started for his home in Georgia Tuesday. The house is in charge of his brother Mott R. Dunbar, till the close of the season.

P. Karlskin of Advance made the JOURNAL a pleasant call Tuesday morning. He also reported received the appointment as postmaster at that place.

Miss Kate Mesch started yesterday for Europe. She sails from New York next week. She will go from East Jordan, on a Canard steamer, and expects to be absent from home a year.

Mr. Tyrell, a recent graduate of Hillsdale college, lectured Sunday evening at the M. E. church on the "New South." He showed a thorough familiarity with his subject and keeps the attention and interest of audience.

Unwilling to Stir Him Up.

Hon. W. R. Burt was asked, before departing for the western part of Michigan yesterday morning, if he desired or intended to make any reply to a letter which appeared in the Detroit Tribune on the 8th, over the signature of Henry Humphrey, which appeared in Saturday's issue of Mr. Burt's speech delivered at Lansing September 6.

Raising his head to the highest point attainable, and with the dignity of a Lord Chancellor, Mr. Burt replied with an emphasis that bespoke the depth of his meaning:

"No, sir—No, sir—I never undertake to answer a blackguard, and making an exception in this case I should no doubt feel like the minister who was returning from church when a drunken man hailed him in the blind at it. Although he hit the animal he regretted the act ever afterward and blamed himself for not passing it by unnoticed."

Harrison's Letter of Acceptance.

Hon. Harrison's letter of acceptance was given to the public last Wednesday. He commences by denying and disputing the arguments in behalf of tariff reform, but has not time to try to refute any theory of the benefits of tariff duties; he rehashes the chestnut that American manufacturers would close if the tariff was reduced; asserts that he has changed his mind on the Chinese question; regrets incidentally the steal of the presidency in 1876; takes issue with Mr. Blaine that "trusts" are largely private matters with which the government has no right to interfere; favors civil service reform; dodges the question of prohibition; and undertakes to pin himself in harmony with his party on other questions, leaving the country to determine for itself what the policy of the party is on any question. It is not stamped with any great force of character.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Amendments to the Law Passed by the House.

The discussion of the Chinese exclusion bill was continued in the Senate the 5th. The House passed the Senate bill amendatory of the interstate commerce act, after adopting the following amendments: Giving State courts of equity jurisdiction concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of the United States in matters under the act; directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to prescribe uniform classification schedules for the use of common carriers in making rates, and requiring common carriers to publish and post the rates on petroleum, continuous oil, and turpentine in wooden packages or barrels as soon the same produces in train or private cars owned or leased by the shipper. The House also passed a bill giving Territorial courts and Territorial legislatures power to change and repeal rates of common carriers on traffic between points within each State or Territory.

CAUSED BY FLOODS.

Terrible Loss of Life and Destruction of Property.

A City of Mexico special says: "Advices from Orizaba show that the loss of life by the floods numbers forty-four persons and that the damage to property amounts to more than $200,000. Many cattle have been lost. In the City of Mexico rains were constant for several days. In the State of Vera Cruz dead bodies are being found. The corn, rice, and bean crops are complete failures, and much of the land formerly for tilla and fenced is now sandy waste. There are no signs of the floods abating."

THE MAINE RETURNS.

The Republican Plurality Placed at 18,495.

The following dispatch has been received at the National Democratic headquarters in New York City:

"PORTLAND, Me., Sept. 12.—Calvin S. Brice, Chairman: Dingley's paper, the Lewiston Journal, claims to have returns from the whole State showing a Republican plurality of 18,495, or 1,159 less than in 1886. Republicans increased their vote 10,000 in Cumberland, and brought Democratic towns enough larger than ever before throughout Republican York. 'M. M. Ramos, Secretary.'"

DIE ON THE OCEAN.

The Collision of Steamers Causes Great Loss of Life.

The steamer Laurnance, when entering the port of Lue, in the Canary Islands, ran into the Italian steamer Lud America, from Montevideo. The latter vessel, which was lying at anchor, sunk in a few minutes in ten fathoms of water. The Lud America carried 256 passengers and had a crew of sixty-seven men. Of these 190 passengers and sixty-three of the crew reached the shore safely. The others were drowned.

LOST THEIR LIVES.

Five Persons Drowned by the Capsizing of a Boat.

By the capsizing of a boat in the Hudson River opposite Hastings-on-the-Hudson, the following persons were drowned: Silvester Maughen, aged 6; Miss Elizabeth Butler, aged 20; Miss Nettie Voorhees, aged 22, of Peekskill; John Demorest, aged 26; and Mr. Derringer, an artist, of Peekskill.

In Training for Congress.

The Republicans of the Tenth Massachusetts District have nominated for Congress Joseph H. Walker.

The Third Arkansas District Democrats have renominated Congressman T. C. McRae.

Congressman W. G. Hunter has been renominated by the Republicans of the Third Kentucky District.

Hon. Joseph E. Washington has been renominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Sixth Tennessee District.

The Democrats of the Eighteenth Ohio District have nominated Dr. G. P. Hart for Congress.

Henry Kernaghan has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Seventh Mississippi District.

Congressman R. M. Lafollette has been renominated by the Republicans of the Third Wisconsin District.

The Democratic Congressional Convention of the Eighth Wisconsin District nominated Dr. Samuel C. Jackson, the Union Labor candidate.

Disappointed in Politics.

John Edwards, a prominent attorney of Maryville, Mo., shot himself, it is believed, because of his disappointment at not receiving the Democratic nomination for Judge of the Court of Appeals. Western Missouri District, at a recent convention.

Hotel Burned.

The Fort George Hotel, E. L. Sceltys proprietor, at Lake George, N. Y., has burned, at a loss of $60,000; insurance, $30,000.

Yellow Fever Nurses.

The headquarters of the American National Red Cross Society has been established at Washington, with Miss Clara Barton, President, in charge. By her direction Col. Fred B. Southmayd, member for Louisiana, has left New Orleans with eighteen trained yellow fever nurses.

A Flandish Deed.

In New York James Fogarty, a peddler, received a mortal wound from an unknown man, who plunged an umbrella tip through his eye into the brain, the shaft breaking off and remaining in the wound. Fogarty died but there is not the slightest clew to his assailant.

TWENTY-TWO VICTIMS.

Four Persons Killed and Eighteen Injured in a Railway Collision.

A Cincinnati bound freight train, heavily laden, dashed at full speed into the John Robinson circus train, which was standing at Corwin Station, fifty-one miles northeast from Cincinnati, at the break of day. The caboose at the rear of the circus train was split in two, and the four sleepers ahead of it were telescoped. No damage occurred to the animals or the circus property, which were in the baggage train ahead of the sleepers. Fourteen men were killed and eighteen were wounded. Of these all were canvasmen, except Andy Smith, who was a concertmonist. Smith was mortally wounded, and, strange to relate, the injuries to the other seventeen are all trifling. The killed are: John Churchill, of Starks, Me.; Ben Cisbey, Grafton, W. Va.; Frank Smith, Richmond, Ind.; Jack Lacy, Chicago. The injured are: Andy Smith, Petersburg, Ill.; William Edwards, Newark, Ohio; B. Brown, Halliday's Cave, W. Va.; John Mott, Cincinnati; Frank Larkin, Jackson, Tenn.; William Wheeler, Elmore Fairbanks, Coolville, Ohio; Dave Harrison, Delaware, Ky.; William Hopkins, Franklin, W. Va.; John Gardiner, Morris County, Ind.; George Williams, Princeton, Ind.; Albert McCarthy, Tipton, Ind.; Samuel Wright, Levi Valley, W. Va.; Louis Butler, Lexington, Ky.; Frank Moncreiff, LaPlatte, Mo.; Ed Taylor, Louisville, Ky.; Dick Dove, Mount Sterling, Ky.; George Powell, Beverley, Ohio.

AMES AT THE HEAD.

The Republicans of Massachusetts Nominate a Ticket.

The Republican State Convention of Massachusetts met at Boston and nominated the following ticket:

Governor, Oliver Ames; Lieutenant Governor, J. Q. A. Brackett; Secretary of State, Henry B. Peirce; Auditor of State, Charles R. Ladd; Attorney General, A. Wesson; Treasurer of Sinking Fund, Henry Gardner; Electors at Large, Geo. F. Hoar, Henry Cabot Lodge.

GOV. OLIVER AMES.

In brief the platform is as follows:

Declares for protection and against free trade; endorses the action of Congress in the matter of ports a return to specie finies wherever practical and enactment of laws to correct the evil; indorses the legislative record of the last Legislature; favors the submission of the question of the prohibitory constitutional amendment; condemns the secret policies of the Republican and Democratic parties; denounces the Australian system; charges the party to a wise expenditure for public improvements; favors the enactment of a national bankrupt law, an honest bankrupt law, a national police, a just pension law, and the extension of the civil service from political application. The Chicago platform and candidates are indorsed.

PREPARING FOR BATTLE.

A List of Those Willing to Be Burdened with Congressional Honors.

Nathan Frank (Rep.) has been nominated for Congress by the Union Labor men in the Ninth Missouri District.

Congressman John H. Rogers has been renominated by the Democrats of the Fourth District of Arkansas.

Capt. E. P. Allen has been renominated by the Republicans of the Second Michigan District, and Congressman Ford by the Democrats of the Fifth District.

The Democrats of the Fourth Minnesota District have renominated Edmund Rice for Congress, and the Democrats of the Fifth District have nominated Charles Canning, a farmer, and member of the Farmers' Alliance.

Hon. Edward J. Gay has been renominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Third Louisiana District.

The Democrats of the Fifth Iowa District have nominated J. H. Preston of Cedar Rapids for Congress.

The Republicans of Washington Territory have nominated Hon. John B. Allen, of Seattle, for delegate to Congress.

In the Fifth Wisconsin District the Republicans have nominated Gustave Kustermann for Congress.

The Democrats of the Seventh Wisconsin District have nominated Frank Coburn for Congress, and the Republicans of the same district nominated O. B. Howes.

Gen. W. H. Enty has been nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Ninth Wisconsin District.

THE EMPIRE STATE.

New York Democrats Renominate Hill and Jones.

The Democratic State Convention of New York in session at Buffalo, nominated the ticket:

Governor, David B. Hill; Lieutenant Governor, Edward B. Jones; Court of Appeals Judge, Martin Grey.

Summarized, the platform is as follows:

Indorses the St. Louis platform and candidates; commends the President's letter of acceptance; approves of the Interstate bill; recommends a revision of the laws so as to secure a more speedy and certain execution of the anti-Chinese bill; condemns the United States Senate for its neglect to pass the labor bureau, Sherman trusts, Oleomargarine, Dockery suppress them, and condemns the last Republican Congress for its extravagant and reckless expenditures, record high-water mark; indorses in the State as "hypocritical," "non, honest, and designed to aid temperance, and intended for political effect," Lyons pure election law; indorses the administration of David B. Hill; demands a reorganization in the Racing, a constitutional convention; advocates a system for crime and legislation to prevent the adulteration of food; demands franchise for aliens who have declared their intention of citizenship; favors the enactment of a law to prevent the sale of cheese made from skimmed milk; favors the enactment of a law to prevent the sale of cheese made from skimmed milk; favors the enactment of a law to prevent the sale of cheese made from skimmed milk

It is reported that John R. McLean of the Cincinnati Enquirer, has purchased the New York Star.

"UNNECESSARY taxation is unjust taxation," says President Cleveland. That brings the tariff question into a nutshell.

ADAM FOREPAUGH, the circus manager, says that he has observed a great deal of enthusiasm throughout the country for the democratic ticket.

MR. BURT's discussion of state taxation, showing by absolute figures the increase of taxation, is creating a genuine sensation, and the republican camp is naturally alarmed. They have attempted to break the force of his figures, but have thus far failed. The figures are indisputable. Mr. Burt is fighting high taxation in Michigan. He is fighting the battle that he has begun in Congress against the tariff, and whether he succeeds in this or not, he will be sustained by all the taxpayers of the state.—Saginaw Courier.

It is not so certain that the adopted citizens of Irish birth who supported Harrison in 1884 will support Harrison in 1888. The Irish-American independents of New York were the unclens of the Irish movement in favor of Blaine in 1884. But they have recently declared in favor of Cleveland and tariff reform. The president's retaliation message was chiefly instrumental in bringing about this happy conclusion. Mr. Alexander Sullivan, who had so much influence among the Irish-Americans in the campaign of 1884, has lately said that he would take no part whatever in political movements against the democratic party. The Irish-American republican movement is not what it was four years ago.—Free Press.

HAVE you heard from Maine? That boasted majority which made the republicans so jubilant last week has gradually diminished until it is now 1,250 less than the majority of 1884, which had been fixed as the basis of gain or loss by the republican party. The republicans increased their total vote 904, and the democrats 2,154. This proportion of increase all over the country will give Grover Cleveland a greatly increased majority of the popular vote. There is good reason to believe that in the western states the issue of tariff reform will make a decrease of the republican vote, and a corresponding greater increase of the democratic vote. So that the indications from Maine, upon which the republicans so confidently relied, point to an enthusiastic support of the present administration, and a glorious victory for Cleveland, Thurman, and tariff reform in November.

HON. ASHBEL B. FITCH, republican member of congress, of New York, who recently deserted his party and came out for tariff reform, said in the house of representatives on May 16th 1888: "In the interest of the republican party, and in the interest of common fairness, I propose to ask gentlemen on this side of the house to consider for a moment how the present tariff, which we have promised to revise, now affects the people whom I have described, and to consider what they pay taxes on in the general distribution of the customs taxes now in force. They pay upon everything. Look for a moment at what they eat. There is a tariff duty on beef, on pork hams and bacon, butter and lard, cheese, molasses, grapes, wheat flour, oats, corn meal, rye, barley, potatoes, raisins, vinegar, honey, rice and rice meal, sugar, extract of meat, pickles, currants, apples, salt and condensed milk. The list is substantially an inventory of the stock of the grocery store at which they buy. There is a duty on the coal which warms them, on their cooking and household utensils, on their entire clothing from their hats to their stockings, on the medicines given them when they are sick, and on the roofs over their head."

THE COUNTY PRINTING.

At its meeting next month the board of supervisors will again have before it the question of publishing its official proceedings. The experience of the past two or three years ought to be a sufficient lesson to convince them of the folly of trying to get a complete and satisfactory report for nothing,—for that is what the practical result has been.

For three years the JOURNAL has persistently refused to bid for the county printing, except by the folio, the copy to be furnished by the clerk. Each time our bid has been rejected because the board did not know how long the report would be and could not tell how much it would come to. That is the very best reason why the printer should not bid for it in the lump,—that is, so much for the year. When the printer bids by the folio he can figure to an absolute certainty how much space one hundred words will make of his type, he knows how much it will cost him to set that amount of type; he can figure the value to him of that space in his columns; he can estimate to a certainty the cost of supplement pages in case his regular size will not hold the entire proceedings. For these reasons he can bring his bid to the lowest point of cost, if he so desires, and yet be certain to lose nothing, whether the report be long or short. If the report be long, he will be absolutely sure of getting pay for his entire work, and the county may be also sure of paying no more than a fair price for service actually performed. In like manner, if the report be short, the printer will get no more than the same rate of pay, and the county may be sure of not having to pay a large price for a small amount of work.

Another matter for consideration is the placing of the report where it can be given in a single issue of the paper, and not strung out like a serial story through a couple of months. In this respect there has been much complaint for two or three years. In a conversation with Mr. Chapin of the Boyne Citizen, last fall, he stated that because of the low price obtained he could not afford to devote his whole paper to the report, to the exclusion of local news; neither could he afford to buy more printing material to enable him to give the entire report at once in addition to the usual amount of local news. It would be better for the people, if the board should make no pretense to economy, and should vote the proceedings to a paper known to have printing material enough to give the entire report in a single issue, and at a price sufficiently large to guarantee the printer against loss, and then demand a full and complete report. Such a course would not be so economical, but would be possessed of the advantage of furnishing the county proceedings in a more tangible and satisfactory manner. Under this arrangement the JOURNAL would not stand a chost of a chance, for the board of supervisors is hopelessly republican. But we would have the satisfaction of knowing that the printer to whom it was awarded received decent pay for his labor, and we could in turn demand decent work for the money expended. The other arrangement,—that of letting to the lowest bidder by the folio, the clerk to furnish copy,—would give the JOURNAL an equal chance with the rest. We insist that it is the most economical for the county, the safest for the printer, and the most satisfactory to all concerned.

We ask of the board a respectful consideration of these questions.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

Hon. Wellington R. Burt.

We congratulate the democrats, greenbackers and labor unionists upon the candidacy of this great man. We congratulate the people even now, upon the magnificent chief executive who will have the helm of state within his firm grasp during the next gubernatorial term. Mr. Burt is a man of great brain and great power. He is today the foremost force in the present exciting campaign in the peninsular state. As Grover Cleveland stands forth, a veritable giant in the national campaign, of which he is admitted to be the central, commanding figure, so Wellington R. Burt towers far above every other figure in the Michigan campaign. He is easily the leader in the light. His individuality is commanding, and his leadership unquestioned. A grand, strong leader, like Burt is an inspiration and prophecy, an inspiration to supreme effort, and a prophecy of certain success. As a business man he has long stood as the peer of the ablest of his compeers. And he carries the same broad mental grasp, quick decision, and firm determination, into politics, which have characterized his business career. His supporters are not figures in Michigan politics, less since the days of brave and bluff old Zach Chandler. Mr. Burt may not be as polished as Chesterfield, but he has the decision of Jackson, the keen instinct of Lincoln, and the blunt honesty, and the rugged force of Zach Chandler.

Mr. Burt's appearance before the people everywhere has been hailed with the greatest enthusiasm, and his speeches have put into the profoundest impression. His campaign is indeed a genuine sensation. Thousand flock to hear him speak, and everywhere he by his scores assure him of their confidence, admiration and support.

Mr. Burt's arraignment of the republican management of the affairs of this state, and his charge against the republicans of gross extravagance and incompetency, are simply unanswerable, and it everywhere produces the profoundest impression. A feeble effort has been made by the state organ at Lansing, where Gov. Luce resides, to meet this arraignment and break the force of the sledge-hammer blows dealt by Mr. Burt, but it is utterly unavailing. By their own figures the taxation levied by the republicans upon the state for the four years of 1875, 1876, 1879 and 1880 averages $969,570 per annum for those four years. Also by their own figures the state taxation for 1887 and 1888 averages $1,704,000 per annum for those two years. This shows a startling increase in state taxation. Tabulated it is as follows:

Average for six years of '75 and '76..... $969,570
Average for four years of '77 and '80..... 969,570

Average increase per annum in 10 years..... $734,430

This stunning increase of state taxation within the past ten years abundantly justifies Mr. Burt's charge of gross extravagance and incompetency in republican management of state finances. The people are awaked to these figures, showing how they are plundered by the republican tax-gatherer, and the people are beginning to think that it is high time to have a business man at the head of the affairs of this state instead of a politician. They demand brains, business methods and relief from burdensome taxation. They know Wellington R. Burt will bring all of these to their service, and hence they are demanding Mr. Burt with an earnestness and enthusiasm that presage his triumphant election. His advent to executive control will be a proud day for the peninsular state.

Damning Testimony as to the Railroad Strike.

"A DOLLAR A DAY FOR LABOR."

Mercenary for the Railroad and Arbitrator Now Some Time—He Advocates Bloodshed While All Others Advocate Peace. He Would Wade in Blood to the Finger Tips—The Testimony of Reliable Men.

The Hon. Leon C. Bailey, one of Indiana's state senators and deputy United States attorney, has done the country a service and won the gratitude of all labor men by searching out the facts as to Gen. Harrison's actions during the great strikes of 1877. He has done it in the patient thoroughness of a trained lawyer and honest investigator, and has satisfied himself on every point by reliable evidence, documentary and affidavits of reliable men. It has shown that Harrison, the attorney of a railroad company, managed, by keeping the fact secret, to become one of the citizens' committee to arbitrate with the strikers; that he spoke Republican like A. G. Porter and generals like Governor Williams were present; Harrison was for shooting the poor devils down, and that he organized a company for that purpose. But let Mr. Bailey present the evidence in his own words as he did a few evenings since in a public address at Indianapolis. With any other things he said:

Twenty-one years ago the Democratic Railroad men of Indianapolis and Fellow Citizens—a great economic problem confronts us—a crisis of lost taxation. The issue is lined off by debate. High taxes, yielding large profits to the few, against low taxes, giving corresponding benefits to the many. On this subject, however, I desire at this time to submit only a few propositions for your consideration.

"The high protective tax was made to protect the enterprises of war. Do they exist now?

"The income and other direct taxes, falling on the rich, were removed in 1872. Has the poor pay all the burden?

"Does a tax system which retires over a third of our circulating medium into idleness help or injure trade?

"Protection enriches less than 10 per cent. of our people; the other 90 per cent. pay the tribute.

"The price of our necessities is made high by protection; our returning brigade, if any, are filtered through the clutches of capital.

"While the products of the world, including our own, are made dear by taxation in cheap labor comes to us without condition.

"If protection affects wages favorably, why do the coal, iron and other highly protected industries pay the lowest wages? Or why, in our several states, all under the same tariff law, does the price paid for labor differ as widely as in the countries of the Old World?

"Does a man looking for employment in the United States give preference to the protected branches of trade? Would he not do so if they afforded him better or more permanent returns?

"The laborer in the highly protected industries of Spain, Germany, France and Mexico gets far less pay or comforts than in England with her system of low taxes. Why is this?

"It is not the compensation of labor the world over fixed by considerations of supply, demand and efficiency of service?

"If the war tariff had a tendency to raise the pay of workingmen, what is the use of the profits of the manufacturer, would he protected employees, or employees of the protected industries continue in? Or is their aid liberality, indeed, due to alarm and liberality, indeed, due to alarm?

NOMINATED BY AN AGGREGATION OF CAPITALISTS.

"But my inquiry to-night is in a different field. I would only direct your thoughts to a subject closely allied to this and personal interest. What I shall have to say to-night will be with reference to the Republican ticket for the presidency, Benjamin Harrison; the influence which brought about his nomination, his public utterances and laboring men, embracing in some detail his record, as it has been gathered from the most authentic sources, such as court files, reports published at the time, and interviews with men who participate in the events of that period and have a personal knowledge of what Mr. Harrison said and did.

"Let us view the influences at Chicago which seemed, Gen. Harrison to the contrary. It was a body representing a vast aggregation of capital. It is beyond dispute, one hundred dollars. Nominally they spoke for a party of several millions. Yet in the face of this fact it was considered. One railroad alone, owing a debt of over $2,000,000 to the United States, was unanimously represented by its agents and solicitors. Chauncey M. Depew, president of the Vanderbilt property of nearly $200,000,000, sought for leadership. He held the Empire state delegation under perfect control. Fear of a revolt in the agricultural west alone checked his presidential ambition, but he could dictate the candidate, and did. He sought a leader as far from the people and as near to the corporate interests as possible, whose life, record and sympathies were in close accord with his own. His name is Benjamin Harrison, and he stands upon a platform of high tariff and free whisky, to which the American laborer is asked to look for his protection and advance of prosperity. Is the picture inviting? Does it have the charm of a king of dollars and an unbiased treatment of popular rights? You who would be swamped in the false and misleading cry of 'free trade' should pause long enough to learn whether or not this alarm is occasioned by your enemy or your friend.

THE CHINESE RECORD.

"Benjamin Harrison entertains the same opinions and sentiments in 1888 as he did in 1877. There is no record of a change. It is nowhere asserted that Gen. Harrison was ever the friend of the workingman; that he ever engaged himself in behalf of their wages or conditions; that in the session of the United States he ever cast a vote, introduced a measure or advocated one that was intended in any degree to ameliorate the condition of workingmen. If he ever did so, it has escaped the vigilance of a member of the press, and the people are beginning to think that it is high time to have a business man at the head of the affairs of this state instead of a politician. They demand brains, business methods and relief from burdensome taxation. They know Wellington R. Burt will bring all of these to their service, and hence they are demanding Mr. Burt with an earnestness and enthusiasm that presage his triumphant election. His advent to executive control will be a proud day for the peninsular state.

naturalized in the United States. At most seven of that number took out their papers in Indianapolis, and they all voted the Republican ticket. The papers were signed by Dan Ransdell as clerk, who then, as now, was Mr. Harrison's most ardent supporter and is the Republican member of their state central committee from Mr. Harrison's district. These Chinamen were marched to the polls in Indianapolis, in wards eleven and seventeen, and voted the Republican ticket against the protests of Democratic challengers.

"From 1873 to 1877 the railroad magnates had been engaged in cutting down the wages of their employes. To show the extent of this cruel, crushing reduction, the facts, supported by the figures, were published by the railroad employes to a sub-committee of citizens of Indianapolis, whose mission and duty it was to secure justice to the imperiled employes, and of this sub-committee Gen. Harrison was a member.

WORKING FOR THE RAILROADS.

"The strike reached Indianapolis on the 23d day of July, 1877. The Ohio and Mississippi Railroad company, with others, was involved in the strike, and being in the hands of a receiver, was under the control of the United States court at Indianapolis. Mr. Harrison entered the employment of John W. Ring, Jr., the receiver of said road, in February, 1877, and continued in that capacity until the road went out of court. He was employed during the whole period of the strike, and for a long time thereafter. In his final 'take off' of the attorneys, in addition to sums previously paid, at a time therefore allowed, Gen Harrison received for his services the handsome fee of $21,000. (See page 239 chancery order book 11, United States circuit court.) This may account in some degree for the 'unbiased' mental condition in which the 'strike' found this great railroad attorney when it reached Indianapolis. There were two propositions confronting the citizens of Indianapolis: one of arbitration, conciliation, peaceable adjustment and mutual concession; the other that of intolerance, Pinkertonism, bayonets and clubs, and the shotgun policy. Both had their advocates; the latter plan of which brought its terrible work of death and desolation at Pittsburg, Baltimore, Chicago, Reading, on the 4th of July, the figures were as follows:

	Killed.	Wounded.
Reading	7	8
Pittsburg	20	43
Chicago	18	25
Baltimore	10	20
Totals	55	96

"It is not necessary to dwell upon the merits of the opposing claims. It appears that before the very eyes of these despairing husbands and fathers the barons of transportation were declaring large profits. During the very horror of this conflict the Baltimore and Ohio road declared a 10 per cent. dividend and the Pennsylvania line an 8 per cent. But these instances of bloodshed, of the starving wife, the half clad children bending over the lifeless form of a husband and father, the hired militia, the Pinkertons, were held up in vivid and frightful relief before the people of the Hoosier capital, and yet there were some who favored the prompt preparations for a repetition of the scenes in other cities, and Gen. Benjamin Harrison was among the earliest advocates of the militia movement. With his command he marched at the first many with him and was supported, then and for a long time afterwards, by the Evening News. The feeling created by such a leader and two powerful dailies is shown by incidents and utterances recorded at the time.

"GENERAL HARRISON ORGANIZES VOLUNTEERS.

"There was no lack of militia. The prayerful protests of the employes was against being 'further driven to the wall.' Not hungry, but even comfortable, they substituting wages was their request—they asking a defense of the precious life and property. Three hundred of their ever trusted companions were sworn in for this very purpose. On July 24 the men held a meeting and passed a resolution and petition to absolutely abstain from the use of intoxicating drink during the trouble. On the same day Mayor Caviu swore in 200 railroad men as special policemen. The governor refused to the end to call out the state militia, the railroads and their employes, but, upon the recommendation and urgent request of the citizens' committee, did issue commissions to certain officers, among the number Gen. Harrison.

"The two newspapers which are supporting Mr. Harrison now supported him then. Their language, in the more moderate methods, they belittled those who would succeed in securing a compromise, they stigmatized those begrimed but honest, laborers who had ventured upon a starving wages, as 'lawbreakers,' 'mobites' and 'rioters.' Gen. Harrison, with others, appeared to oppose the petition, and when the court required them to state under oath the amount of time expended and the value of the services given Mr. Harrison made the following affidavit:

TESTIMONY OF THOSE WHO HEARD.

"Thomas Hughes, who lives in Indianapolis and has been running an engine since 1863, says:

"In that year (1877) I was foreman of the night yard for the Terre Haute. On the morning of the day when the conference meeting was held we met Mayor Caviu, John Pressley, county sheriff, and Governor Williams near the Spencer house, and told them that we were ready to furnish all the persons needed to guard property wherever necessary. Mr. Harrison and his friends opposed this idea, and urged Governor Williams to call out the state militia and force the men to disperse. Mr. Pressley, I remember, said he had been a railroad man and that the boys were good men, and that to call out troops would do more harm than good. Governor Williams and Mayor Caviu agreed with him. Harrison and his friends claimed that it would be safer to travel; were liable to start a rick and burn up city and should have troops at once. Our committee went to the Mason house to hold the conference meeting.

"If I recollect right, Porter made the first speech, and Williams followed Harrison. Now, of course I can't give you his speech word for word, in the form, though, of points as far as I can say were these: He said that we were to be dispersed; that we were interfering with the commerce of the country; that we were about to begin a riot; that we were law breakers in doing as we were; that we had no right to strike, lief; instead of being a body of law abiding citizens we were a mob. He took the ground that we could live on a dollar a day and that we had no right to strike, and that after we went back to work if we could get ours he would be satisfied. I am sure the boys have not forgotten that speech and never will, and never will expect any friendship from a man who would try and take advantage of us when we were down, and even undertake to get the authorities to turn the militia on us when we were trying hard to do right and get our pay put back so we could live.

"Martin J. Murphy, who was a fireman in the I. B. and W. yards when the strike began, says of the conference meeting:

"As a result, Governor Porter addressed the entire meeting. He was followed by Harrison. For some days before this Harrison had been getting up militia companies and then had a lot of them quartered at the arsenal. In his speech he spoke about this, and used very plain language about what they would do with us if we didn't come to time. He used the terms 'law breakers' and 'violators of the law' several times. He was all one sided, so much so that every one saw he did not intend to give the boys any show. He said the roads couldn't pay any higher wages, as the books of the company would show, and called our committee to go down and inspect them. So long as we were 'law breakers' nothing could be done. In this connection he used the assertion that $1 a day was better than doing nothing at all, and that a workingman ought to get along on that much. Although I may not use his exact words that is the impression he gave. He also said that if this lawlessness did not cease they would invoke the powers of the state and Federal government in order to move the trains and carry on the commerce of the country. That the trains must move at all hazards, and at this point he became much excited. He offered no arbitration; would listen to none. Nothing would be accepted but an absolute surrender on our part. Before he had finished he became so enfuriated that the committee arose and left the hall. Chairman Sayer tried to get us back, and after Harrison got through some of us did return."

HE FAVORED VIOLENCE.

The speaker quoted similar affidavits from a number of railroad men, all agreeing in substantially upon his remarks at the conference. From an interview with Ben Zahn the following extract was secured:

"We all knew that Harrison was a railroad attorney and had all his sympathies were against the men who dared to strike. I was present when he spoke as well as though I heard it but yesterday. He began by a statement of the enormous loss occasioned by the blockade of railroad traffic, and immediately proceeded to charge that whole loss to the strikers, and denounced them in terms as strong as he could use. A thought of the laboring man's wrongs never entered his mind, but he could set out in glowing colors the inconvenience of those millionaires who could better afford to lose thousands than could the fireman a single day's wages. Harrison stood there as the champion of gold, as the attorney of corporate wealth. As he thought the whole state of the case over he became angry and indignant, and finally attacked the authorities for not using the force. I now quote his exact language: 'If I was governor of this state, or sheriff of this county, I would have every train running if I had to wade in blood up to my finger tips.' As he finished this sentence, he stretched his arms to the full length above his head. The strikers, already grown restive under his abuse, got up and left the hall in a body. A great part of the audience left with them. The tone of Harrison's speech was left entirely to those who paid him. The strikers adjourned to the Fireman's hall, being followed by Governor Williams, the sheriff and the mayor. A meeting was held in the hall. Everything passed off quietly, and a number of the strikers were sworn in as special policemen, and, as the result, the best order was maintained in Indianapolis."

After presenting interviews with a number of other railroad men who were present at the historical conference, all of whom substantially corroborate the statements of his intemperate language, the speaker continued: "Now perfectly disinterested witnesses support and cilpach every fair inference to be drawn from the history of the strike I will leave to you. The proof is complete. The verdict is inevitable. You know the men whose words have been heard in evidence. They are among the most honorable and upright of our citizens; they are your fellow workmen. Each statement has been carefully prepared, read and signed by the respective parties making them. Upon the evidence adduced I will leave the matter of what Gen. Harrison did, how he felt, what he advised, what he said, with you and with the voters of the country. It appears, however, that Gen. Harrison, in place of a sober deliberate judgment upon the value of men's time and services, and having ample means at his command, class far more worthy of their hire than the poor men who fought the battle of the corporate power. I will submit next the evidence of a few of the transactions of that strike. These witnesses speak from personal contact. Their statements are corroborated from no less reliable sources. All were members of corporate bodies. All were acquainted with the strike. They were the words of honest men. He, I believe, member of organized labor. They possess the confidence of their comrades and are entitled to the credit of truthful citizens.

Harrison, in place of a sober deliberate judgment upon the value of men's time and services, and having ample means at his command, class far more worthy of their hire than the poor men who fought the battle of the corporate power. I will submit next the evidence of a few of the transactions of that strike. These witnesses speak from personal contact. Their statements are corroborated from no less reliable sources. All were members of corporate bodies. All were acquainted with the strike. They were the words of honest men. He, I believe, member of organized labor. They possess the confidence of their comrades and are entitled to the credit of truthful citizens.

TESTIMONY OF THOSE WHO HEARD.

"Benjamin Harrison, being duly sworn, says upon his oath that the law firm of which he is a member (Harrison, Hines & Miller) were employed by John King, Jr., the receiver of the Terre Haute road, appointed by the court in the case above named (William King, Robert Garrett et al. vs. the Ohio and Mississippi Railway company) of the property and effects by the Ohio and Mississippi Railway company, to aid in their defense upon the application of Thomas Emery & Sons, Maurice Allen Campbell and others for the removal of said receiver, that with the Hon. George Hoadly, of Cincinnati, W. T. McClintock, Esq., of Chillicothe, O., and Henry Crawford, of Chicago, affiant was engaged in preparing the defense of said receivers. The evidence taken by affidavit and deposition was very voluminous, and affiant by reference to the files in said cause, which were sent to Chicago, and of law of some difficulty which had to be and were carefully examined by the counsel named. That a hearing of said cause was had at Springfield, Ills., before Judge Drummond, sitting in place of Judge Gresham, and Hon. John S. Treat, W. Q. Gresham, District Judge, that in going to and returning from the place appointed for the hearing and preparing and arguing the case, nearly one whole week of time was consumed by the counsel aforesaid, every night until a late hour being given to the case. And affiant says that he is acquainted with the usual rate of fees charged and paid for such business in said court, and that he believes the services of each of his said associates and of affiant were reasonably worth the sum of $1,000.

"BENJAMIN HARRISON."

"He says nearly one whole week of time was consumed. And affiant says that he is acquainted with the usual rate of fees charged and paid for such business in said court and that he believes the services of each of his said associates and said affiant were reasonably worth the sum of $1,000. Nearly one whole week and reasonably worth $1,000! Men who stand, flagging, standing at the throttle, firing, risking life, encountering a thousand daily dangers for a daily wage, sums varying from $1 to $2 per day, while attorneys for the same master think "nearly one whole week's work" is reasonably worth $1,000. The wrong cause is there.

After citing several instances of Gen. Harrison's harsh prosecution of arrested strikers, in refutation of the statement that he was a friend to the unfortunate men, Mr. Bailey thus continued: "I have arraigned Benjamin Harrison at the bar of public opinion. I have recited a record in which the tender sympathies, so boasted as a pyramid, convicts him in the minds of unprejudiced men of inhumanity to his fellow man, than which in the whole catalogue of man's mental and moral infirmities there is nothing that so intensifies abhorrence, nothing that so blind to extinction, it is deaf to the wails of the oppressed. Man's inhumanity to man has dodged and set in operation every instrument from the thumb screw to the fagot, and Gen. Benjamin Harrison, in clamoring for bayonets and bullets to suppress railroad employes in the city of Indianapolis in 1877, when they were demanding sufficient pay for their toil to dispel darkness from their humble homes and drive gaunt hunger away and lift the burden of despair from dependent wives and children, did that which burned into the memory of the victims impressions of his brutal credentials, that will be the imprint of Jehovah's hand around him, in the tears of his neighbors, were empty dinner buckets and pinched faces, the cry of hunger was for bread and meat, for clothes, for the necessaries of life. Gen. Harrison did not hear the cry. It was drowned by the roar of his soldiers. Gen. Harrison's idea of life and duty and the treasure of life is to the contrary. There are wrongs which to forget makes forgetfulness a crime. The vicar of men should be as sacramental as their virtues. He who ruthlessly adds misery to the pangs of poverty is a monster, and he who strikes down the humblest soldier in the dinner bucket brigades of the world that he may curry favor with the oppressors of the poor should no more be forgotten than a Nero or an Arnold, and whether dead or alive, whether as gigantic as the Colossus of Rhodes or as pygmean as Gen. Harrison, they should ever stand in front of the fires of men's fierce indignation while right and justice have a champion on earth."

CLEVELAND ACCEPTS.

HE STANDS TO HIS GUNS—A STATES-MANLIKE DOCUMENT.

In Accepting the Nomination the President Endorses the National Platform—Again Declares against War Taxes and Attacks Trusts and Free Whisky.

Washington, special.

The President's letter accepting the renomination to the Presidency by the Democratic convention is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 8, 1888.

The Hon. Patrick A. Collins and Others, Committee, Boston:

GENTLEMEN—In addressing to you my formal acceptance of the nomination for the Presidency of the United States my thoughts persistently dwell upon the impressive relation of such action to the American people, who alone control its time devoted, and to the political party to which I belong, which has been entrusted with its continued supremacy. The world does not afford a spectacle more sublime than is furnished when millions of free and intelligent American citizens select their Chief Magistrate and invest him with a power that fed the lightest earthly honor and the full sense of the solemn duty it confers subjection to their will. To follow this a candidate for this high office can never forget that when the turmoil and the strife which attend the selection of his incumbent shall be heard no more there must be in the quiet of reflection a time for the calm consideration of the comprehensive and important problems of every family and endeavor to the service of a contented and prosperous people of freemen. These thoughts are intensified by the light of my experience, which has served to deepen and strengthen my impressions with the severe responsibilities which it imposes, while it has quickened my love for American institutions and taught me the priceless value of the trust of my countrymen.

Home Interests of Americans.

It is of the highest importance that those who administer our government should jealously protect and maintain the rights of American citizens at home and abroad and should strive to achieve for our country her proper place among the nations of the earth, but there is no people whose home interests are so great and varied as those of our country, and there is none deserve so much watchfulness and care. Among these are the regulation of a sound financial system suited to our needs, the securing an efficient agency of national wealth and general prosperity, the preservation of our industrial system of defense to insure our national safety and maintain the honor beneath which such national safety rests, the protection of our national domain still stretching beyond the needs of our children's children, and its preservation for the use of a sturdy yeomanry, the protection of our citizens in their rights to the fruits of their industry and benefits which the people may rightly claim, a generous regard and care for our surviving soldiers and sailors and for the widows and orphans of such as have died, to the end that, rewarded by the country they have served, our veterans may appreciate the application of their pension funds to improper cases may be prevented, protection against a service immigration, which injuriously competes with our laboring men in the fields of toil and adds to our population an element ignorant of our institutions and of the duties of citizenship fatal to with our people, and dangerous to our peace and welfare; a strict and steadfast adherence to the principles of civil service reform and a thorough execution of the laws passed for the suppression of polygamy, that it may not take the advantage of business methods in the operations of their government; the economy so conducive to the comfort of all their ranks of citizenship and their just recognition and encouragement in all things pertaining to their welfare; a firm, painful, and temperate application of the business principles with the Government, the civilization of the Indian may be promoted, with resulting quiet and safety to the settlers on our frontier, and the curtailing of our public expense by the introduction of economical methods in every department of the Government.

The pledges contained in the platform adopted by the late convention of the national Democracy lead to the advancement of these objects and insure my earnest support—the aspirations of every true American citizen and the natural desire of every patriotic party. It is a fair to assume that much has been done in the direction of good government by the present administration and will continue to receive the fair inspection of my countrymen, I endorse the platform then presented, and, if it should be my fortune to be entrusted, clothed in the exalted office to which I have been nominated, I will do my best endeavor to advance the interests of the entire country.

Federal Taxation.

"Our scale of federal taxation, and its consequences, large enough at the time the attention of our citizens, and the people are sorely considering the necessity of less, are of value. Our Government is the creation of the people, established to carry out their desires and accomplish their good. Its officers are the agents of the people, their servants, employees and wards. It is only used when within their control, and only serves them well when regulated and guided by their constant touch. It is a fact to be deeply considered by every American citizen that, after a period of years of the revenue of his Government and of his income, except that may be his contribution to necessary public expense. Therefore, it is not only the right but the duty of a free people, in the enforcement of the government, to keep its expenditures within strictly limited to the actual public needs. It is equally clear that when the Government, into unnecessarily creates and maintained by the people to do the bidding, turns upon them and, instead of ministering to their needs, extorts from their labor and capital treasure in excess of public necessities, the crime is no less, and the punishment and the masters are robbed by their servants.

"The cost of the Government and continues to be met by tariff duties collected at the custom houses, and internal revenue taxes, and by internal revenue taxes imposed upon spirits and fermented liquors, tobacco, and oleomargarine. I suppose it is needless to explain that all these duties and assessments are added to the cost of the articles upon which they are levied, and that the whole upon all those why buy those articles has been paid by consumption. I suppose, too, it will not be contested that the effect of this tariff taxation is not limited to the consumer, but that it is, in its operation, a protection to such articles pursuit of which, an increase in such articles pursuit of which, an increase in such articles pursuit of which, an increase in

Adopted by the State Convention at Detroit, July 18, 1888.

The democracy of Michigan assembled in convention for the nomination of state officers, recognizing the fact that its chief duty is to present to the people candidates whose election will bring to the administration of state affairs integrity of character, purity of purpose and sound business methods, reaffirms its adherance to the traditional and established principles and policies of the democratic party in respect to national politics.

We renew the expression of our approval of the administration of President Cleveland which has won the respect and confidence of the people and has justified his renomination in response to the universal sentiment of the democracy by his unceasing devotion to public duty his courageous maintenance of democratic principles and his enforcement of pure, just and impartial methods of administration in all the departments of the government.

upon the chief question of national politics, the relief of the people from the burdens of taxation, we declare our unalterable opposition to the present tariff policy of the republican party. We affirm our approval of the last tariff message of President Cleveland as an accurate expression of the just and traditional democratic principles which should govern the whole subject of revenue reform and the reduction of the surplus in the treasury. To him as the chosen standard bearer of the national democracy in the present campaign and to his associate, Allen G. Thurman, a tried statesman distinguished by a long life of public service which has been illustrated by high ability and perfect integrity of and fruitful of benefit to the people we pledge our best efforts to the end that Michigan may once more be counted in the list of democratic states

We declare our adherence to the platform of the national democratic convention at St. Louis, and we approve the action of our democratic representatives in congress in their efforts to secure a reduction of tariff taxation, thereby preventing further accumulation of a dangerous surplus in the treasury and relieving the people from the burdens of the war tariff.

We believe this course only can bring the policy of the government on this subject in harmony with the constitution, the true interests of the people, the just demands of labor the prosperity of all industries and the development of the resources of this country.

The democracy of Michigan believes in the dignity of American labor; recognizes the rights of wage workers to the fostering care of the government and that legitimate industry of every walk of life shall be encouraged in its work of building up the material interests of state.

The ownership of real estate in this country by foreign corporations and non-resident aliens is injurious to American interests and should be prohibited.

We favor the adoption of measures providing for the health and safety of those engaged in manufacturing, mining and building industries, and the repeal of all class legislation under which monopolies have been fostered and protected.

We demand that congress shall open to the public domain for settlement all lands granted to railroads or other corporations which have not been earned, and more particularly do we demand the forfeiture of all unearned grants of lands in the Upper Peninsula, that that portion of the state may no longer be deprived of its natural growth and and developments.

That to the multiplication in this state of petty boards, commissions and officials, with such power and surroundings as insure neither official responsibility nor respect for the legislature or people, leaving the matter of appropriations for state institutions to be largely controlled by log rolling combinations, and as well as to the lack of system we attribute the great and constant increase of appropriations; therefore we submit that the case is one demanding the election of a legislature and state officials free to make changes which economy and good business methods may dictate.

The decisions of home rule and local self government are cardinal principles of the democratic party. Therefore we cordially sympathize with the people of Ireland in the grand contest which they are making under the leadership of Gladstone and Parnell for the right to have the management of their own affairs.

That in only more than twenty-three years have elapsed since the war we should not forget that a large number of that gallant and patriotic army that preserved to us an undivided country is still among us with increasing years and increasing disability, the result of their privations and hardship. We believe the government should deal justly with them and that liberal pensions should be granted to the deserving and as charity, but as due them because of the inestimable services they render of their country, and we point with satisfaction and approval to the liberal construction of the existing pension laws by the present administration, resulting in a large increase in the amounts annually paid to veterans.

For First Place.

Great amount of engineering will be done by friends of candidates to secure for their men the first place on the ticket, and the best man will probably secure the coveted place. Then it endorsed by the majority of the people, the election is assured. Electric Bitters has been put to the front, its merits caused upon, but been indorsed, and unanimously given first place among remedies peculiarly adapted to the relief and cure of all diseases of Kidneys, Liver and Stomach. Electric Bitters, being guaranteed, is a safe investment. Price 50c. and $1 per bottle at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store. 3

Their Business Booming.

Probably no one thing has caused such a general revival of trade at F. G. FARM AND GARDEN.

TIMELY TOPICS CONSIDERED IN A PRACTICAL MANNER.

Homemade Devices for Tying Corn Shocks Which Many Farmers Have Found Useful, and Which Are Within the Reach of All.

Numbered with old time devices for tying corn shocks, still used, forever, I may is the one shown in the cut. It represents a piece of gas pipe long enough to reach through a shock of corn; B, an eye attached; C, a three-inch strap bolted to the eye; D, a hook of sufficient size to hold the cord, and E is a crank from a farming mill. A piece of wood is sometimes used in place of the gas pipe.

FIG. 1—TYING CORN SHOCKS.

In employing this device, the sharp pointed rod is stuck straight through the shock, the cord is carried around the shock above the point of the rod and caught over the hook, the crank is turned, winding the surplus cord between the hook and the crank. The cord is drawn taut from both ends, and a few turns of the crank suffice. Thrust a small stick into the shock to hold the crank while twine is tied round the shock, and the work is done. Turn the crank backward, remove the cord from the hook, pull out the rod and proceed to the next shock.

In Rural New Yorker a correspondent tells how to use the tie shown in Fig. 2, which is employed in some sections for binding fodder corn at shocking time.

FIG. 2—FODDER CORN TIE.

In tying a bundle stand astride of it, press with the knee and pull with the hand till the buckle will slip into the loop. When untying give the buckle a half turn and slip it out of the loop. If the band is used carefully it can be employed several times. Binder twine is used for the ties, and the fibers from the straw stack tied two together with a loop in one end and a buckle in the other form a band of convenient length.

In the Fruit Garden.

Plant the strawberry on a perfect level with the surface of the ground, or a little below, never on a ridge or hill, says Mark Twain. Raise the plants in cultivated and well known fruit grower. The plant has a tendency to creep up out of the ground. He advises planting eighteen inches apart each way for a small patch. For field culture plant in rows three feet apart and twelve inches apart in the row. Following are the distances apart for planting the various small fruits, recommended by Mr. Johnson:

Plant grape vines eight to sixteen feet apart.

Raspberries should be four feet apart in rather rich and protected from the southwestern sun.

Blackberries should be planted four feet apart.

Gooseberries three feet apart.

Currants three feet apart.

The ground should be mound the roots of vines; apply it on the surface.

Weevil in Grain.

Weevil may be almost if not wholly prevented by thoroughly cleansing the premises where the grain is stored and by occasionally stirring it and exposing it to the light. When possible avoid storing grain in bins that have been infested. When it is inconvenient to change the place of storage, fumigate the granary thoroughly with burning sulphur, or use hot water in places where it can be applied, until the pests are destroyed. Bins such bins must be used, stir the wheat occasionally and expose it to the light. For places where fumigation or hot water cannot be used, dissolve half a pound of insect powder in alcohol and stir it into six gallons of water, and apply in a fine spray. No danger need be apprehended, as it is not poisonous, except to insects.

Pyrethrum for Caterpillars.

Several years of experience seems to warrant the statement that pyrethrum, or, better still, buhach, is most beneficial for smooth bodied caterpillars, like the cabbage worms and others like them. On the woolly caterpillars it has little effect, and is not a sure remedy for beetles, although in confinement there is no trouble about killing them. When worms are secreted in the leaves, or in any difficult place to reach by spray, the powder, if strongly applied with a bellows, will usually reach them by floating among the leaves. Pyrethrum loses its strength by exposure to the air. Buhach is preferable to it when it can be obtained.

Digestibility of Corn Fodder.

Experiments at the Massachusetts Agricultural Experiment station, Professor Armsby, director, on the digestibility of corn fodder, that is, the stalks of field corn after the ears are removed, showed that taking the whole growth, ears and all, the stalks alone contained 37 per cent. of the total digestible matter. The practical meaning of this is that the farmer who grows a field of corn, husks it on the hill and lets the stalks go to waste, leaves over 37 per cent. of the food value of his crop in the field and contents himself with only 63 per cent. of its whole value.

A farmers' institute is to be held once each month at the North Indiana Experiment station, and free transportation has been granted by the local railroads.

Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives a lustre and pliancy that adds greatly to its charm. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

"I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given my rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance."—E. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

Abundant and Glossy,

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—R. T. Schmitton, Dickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomaston, Me.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using a few bottles of Ayer's Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hardy, Delavan, Ill.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a mortgage by which the power of sale thereon has become operative, given by Charles Hetherman and Catharine Hetherman, dated the 19th day of December, 1882, to Jacob Weaver, of the city of Detroit, County of Wayne, State of Michigan, 19th day of December, 1882, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, liber 41, page 100, to William M. Beach, and now owned by him, that there is now due and unpaid on said mortgage the whole principal and interest, and the sum of Twenty-Five Hundred Dollars, and no suit or proceeding at law has been taken either at law or in equity having been taken to recover the sum, or any part thereof, therefore, and mortgage being now by reason of such default, liable to be foreclosed, we will sell the south half, of the north-west quarter, of section 19, in town 29 north of range 4 west, at public sale to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Township hall in said town, in the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, on the 8th day of November, 1888, to pay the said sum of Twenty-Five Hundred Dollars and interest, together with all costs and attorney fee allowed by law.

Dated August 3, 1888.

While finding fault with the Mills bill, because it does not go far enough will the republican senate make a better one to fit its place. Until they do they are hypocites.

Ex-representative D. W. Shorts, of Owosso, a life long republican, has declared himself for Cleveland, and will take the stump for the democratic ticket. Good enough for us.

Our esteemed contemporary refers to this paper as the "postoffice dishrag." It is quite apparent we take no bitten to gratify, no "ax to grind," the imperial, independent journal, the "guide, philosopher and friend" to hundreds of every shade of political faith, is a lady THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS has to day a circulation of over "a million a week." THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS can add to these two comprehensive elements of popularity, a third, in an unparalleled reduction of price to ONE CENT A DAY.

It is always large enough—never too large. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is for sale by all newsdealers at One Cent per copy; or will be mailed, postage paid, for $2.00 per year, or 25 cents per month. The better and cheaper it is known it is the more it will be appreciated.

Henry H. Noble ought to polo the entire vote of this village for state senator. His eminent fitness for the position the fact that he is the most distinguished resident of the town ought to give him the entire vote of the village without regard to party affiliations, political preference, etc.—Progress.

The ill-fated steamer Vernon, which foundered last fall with such terrible loss of life, has been discovered in 40 feet of water, three miles from Two River Point, lying on her port side. The supposition is that the iron with which she was loaded, went through her sides causing her to founder.

A gentleman from Grundy county Iowa, the home of Hon. D. Kerr, the great protectionist from that part of the country, a county that gave Garfield 800 majority, assures us that the same county will give a majority for Cleveland this fall. A year ago the republican majority was 100. The same gentleman says that the indications are that the state of Iowa will go for Cleveland.

Never has a candidate for office been greeted with better audiences, or more enthusiastic applause, than has Hiram B. Hudson, union candidate for congress. Since our last report he has addressed meetings at Lake City, Jennings, Tustin, Reed City, Ludington and other points, and the cordial greeting given him in each place shows that his opponent will have to have a walk-away.—Cadillac Democrat.

The democrats could not have made a better nomination than in senator then they did. Henry H. Noble of Elk Rapids is a thorough democrat, a pioneer of Grand Traverse and an excellent business man, and will be able to attend to the duties thereof in a thorough business way and upon strictly business principles. The people of this senatorial district cannot do better than to elect him.—Traverse City Eagle.

W. C. T. U. Convention.

The annual district convention of the W. C. T. U. will be held in the Congregational church in this place commencing on the evening of Oct. 2, and lasting until noon of the 4th. The first evening will be given to

1. Greeting by local president.
2. Address of welcome by Rev. A. O. Dowe.
3. Response by Mrs. Blakely, of Mancelona.
4. Recitation by Mrs. Brackett, of Petoskey.
5. Talk on Temperance Temple, by Mrs. Benjamin.

On the second evening there will be a silver medal contest for young people of Charlevoix. The following are the names of the contestants, and the subjects they will speak on:

Sanford Reed,—"Prohibition But Let."

Chloe McCartney,—"The Martyred Mother."

Ella Carter,—"A Voice from the Poor House."

Clinton Whitmyer,—"License a Stupendous Failure."

Pearl Dart,—Our Country's Cruel Trust."

Norine Marshall,—"Prohibition the Ultimatum."

After hearing the silver medal contest there will be a recitation by a young lady of Petoskey, and a talk by Mrs. Benjamin. Appropriate music will be furnished each evening.

The day sessions will be free to all. All invited to take part in the discussions.

Hill and Cleveland.

After his renomination, Gov. Hill of New York, was serenaded at the executive mansion in Albany, and in his acknowledgment he said: "These are my fellow citizens who gave me the nomination. Let me be clearly understood. It is my sincere wish and desire that the democracy of the state, and particularly every friend of mine, shall vote for Cleveland and Thurman. I also trust that everyone who calls himself an independent, and every independent republican who believes with us upon the issue of tariff reform, will likewise vote for our national ticket, and cast the votes for me or not; and, while I should be grateful to receive the nomination, if he thinks that he cannot consistently give it, I hope that his objections to me or to the cause of our ticket will not prevent his loyal support of our presidential standard bearer Our success in this nation overtowers all personal consideration."

Burt "A Good Democrat and an Honest Man."

The organs thinge they discover great lack of democratic consistency in the fact that the democratic candidate for governor in Michigan, Mr. Burt, is extensively engaged in lumbering and is the owner of timber land. But as a good democrat and an honest man Mr. Burt does not believe that the government should fix tax salts and lumber in order to enrich a few at the expense of the prosperity of the country. Mr. Burt has no fear of foreign competition in his business and he is in entire accord with the democratic policy of repealing the iniquitous taxes on lumber and salt. Burt is the best kind of a democrat. He holds his principles and the equal rights of the people above pelf and considerations. Mr. Burt is an honor to the democratic party, and he ought to be elected governor of Michigan by an overwhelming majority.—Philadelphia Record.

BREEZY BRIEFLETS.

INTELLIGENCE GATHERED BY WIRE FROM FAR AND NEAR.

An Entertaining and Instructive Summary of the Doings in the Old and New World. Embracing Politics, Labor, Accidents, Crime, Industry, Etc.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

The resolution by Mr. Sherman in regard to the relations of the United States with Great Britain and Canada was called up in the Senate on the 19th, but went over without action. The deficiency appropriation bill was reported to the Senate and ordered printed. The House has passed the bill authorizing the Secretary of War to take such land as may be required for the management of the St. Clay Flats ship canal. Representative Barnes (ga.) introduced a bill offering a reward of $100,000 to any person who will discover the true cause or germ of yellow fever, with any certain means of effecting its prevention. A debate occurred on the conference report on the Sundry civil bill, but it went over without action.

MAINE ELECTION.

The Official Returns Place the Republican Plurality at 18,495.

An Augusta telegram says: Official returns of the Maine election have been received at the office of the Secretary of State from all voting places save a few remote and unimportant plantations. The result gives Burleigh (Rep.), for Governor, 70,245; Putnam (Dem.), 61,038. Republican plurality on gubernatorial vote, 18,495; against 19,769 in 1884. The plurality for Congressmen are: First District, Reed 2,457, against 2,925 in 1884; Second, Dingley 5,473, against 6,038 in 1884; Third, Milliken 6,533, against 6,217 in 1884; Fourth, Boutelle 4,840, against 5,566 in 1884. The Republicans have 33 Senators to none for the Democrats, as in 1884, and 128 Representatives to 26 for the Democrats, a Republican gain of 10 over 1884. Of ninety-nine county officers, sheriffs, probate judges, county attorneys, etc., the Republicans elected 96 and the Democrats 3.

CURTIS ACCEPTS.

The Candidate of the America: Party Makes Public His Letter.

James Langdon Curtis, of New York City, has issued his letter of acceptance of the Presidential nomination tendered by the convention of the National American party. He says:

The party was forced into being by the evils of unfriendly floods of bad immigrants. A foreigner should not vote until twenty-one years a citizen. Favors free technical schools, so that the American boy may acquire the skilled industries from which he has been hitherto barred by the organized leagues and unions of organized labor from foreign lands. I freely concur in the sentiment that, except in the observance of international courtesy, none but the American flag shall be known to our people, and none but Americans shall fill the public offices of the country. America for Americans, now and for ever.

PAYMASTER ROBBED.

One of His Assailants Mortally Wounded.

John Smith, stone contractor of the Nashville and Knoxville Railroad, with his bookkeeper, Mr. Shreiner, was driving from Gordonsville to Lancaster, Tenn., with $1,800 to pay off the hands, when two former employes stopped them and demanded the money. Smith was knocked senseless, and Shreiner fled, the highwaymen getting the money. But they had not gone far with it, when a posse of citizens overtook them. A man named Jackson was wounded one of them fatally and the other severely.

Nominated for Congress.

President H. D. Rogue, of the Norwegian Lutheran College at Decorah, has been nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Fourth Iowa District.

The Union Labor Congressional Convention of the Second Iowa District, has indorsed the Republican nominee for Congress, Capt. Samuel P. Snyder, an attorney of Minneapolis, largely interested in lumbering and mining, has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Fourth Minnesota District.

The Democrats of the Tenth Missouri Congressional District have renominated Congressman Martin L. Clardy.

The Hon. John Power was nominated by acclamation for Congress by the Democratic Congressional Convention at Escanaba, Mich.

James P. Walker was nominated for re-election to Congress by the Democrats of the Fourteenth Missouri District.

The Democrats of the Sixth Kentucky District, at Covington, renominated by acclamation Speaker John G. Carlisle.

Jonathan B. Taylor has been nominated for Congress by the Fourth District Illinois Democrats.

Robbed an Express Company.

John Murphy, Deputy Postmaster at Arpelian City, Kan., has been arrested for robbing the United States Express Company of $10,000 a year ago at Greenville, Ohio. He confessed the crime, and restored $9,000 of the stolen money.

It Was Loaded.

Clare Keely, who died at Elkhart, Ind., said was supposed to have shot himself by accident, was shot by his brother Guy, who pointed a gun at him that he supposed to be unloaded, and has just confessed. George Streakley's little son stepped in front of a target at which his father was shooting and a bullet went through his head, but he is expected to live.

Louisiana Negroes Shot by a Mob.

A crowd of armed men rode to the houses of two negroes named Jean Pierre Saint and Dideare, at Ville Platte Prairie, La., and after leading the negroes a short distance away riddled them with buckshot. The killing is supposed to have been brought about by incendiary language used by the negroes. The affair caused great excitement.

TRADE REPORTS.

Encouraging News from Interior Points—Collections Good.

In their review of trade for the last week, R. G. Dun & Co. say:

The passing of a quarter day in the St. Paul region has set stagnant the Government crop reports a fall in wheat, while the export trade, though improving, continues small. But the volume of legitimate business is large and increasing, and there is improvement in the prospect for winter wheat. Cotton has been much lower, mainly from other causes, crowded to the extent of 1¼ cents in wheat and ¾ in corn, with corn ½ cent lower. The monthly statement of furnaces in blast shows a decrease of 125 furnaces, or 31,000 tons per week, since the 1st of last month. Disappointments in the iron trade are still frequent, but the recent rates are held to have dispelled all fears of the corn crop of that region, and Omaha reports very good crops. The volume of business transacted by bank exchanges is larger than last year, but less than in the city of New York, though smaller by 15 per cent here. The passing of a dividend by St. Paul has not been unexpected, but it convinced the public that the losses of Western roads because of the interstate law have reached a point where the expectation has been changed to investment. The business failures number 217, as compared with a total of six last week and 230 the week previous to the last. The figures for the corresponding week of 1887 were 185.

FUTURE STATESMEN.

Nominees for Congress of Various Political Complexions.

Hon. Joseph E. Washington has been renominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Sixth Tennessee District.

The Democrats of the Eighteenth Ohio District have nominated Dr. G. P. Ikert for Congress.

Henry Kornaghan has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Second Mississippi District.

The Democratic Congressional Convention of the Eighth Wisconsin District nominated Dr. Samuel C. Judson, the Union Labor candidate.

John W. Candler has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Ninth Massachusetts District.

The following Congressional nominations have been made: John F. McMahon, by the Democrats of the Twenty-third New York District, at Oneida; Smedley Darlington, by the Republicans of the Sixth Pennsylvania District, at Philadelphia; ex-Mayor A. O. Abbott, by the Republicans of the Third Michigan District, at Adrian; Wm. M. Kenney, by the Republicans of the Tenth Missouri District, at DeSoto; Hon. W. C. Oates, renominated by acclamation in the Third Alabama District, at Montgomery.

R. H. Clarke, of Mobile, was nominated by acclamation for Congress by the Democrats of the First Alabama District.

The Montana Republican Territorial Convention nominated Thomas H. Carter, of Helena, for delegate to Congress.

Hon. John Burns has been nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Twenty-sixth Pennsylvania District.

AMES AT THE HEAD.

The Republicans of Massachusetts Nominate a Ticket.

The Republican State Convention of Massachusetts met at Boston and nominated the following ticket:

GOV. OLIVER AMES.

Governor, Oliver Ames; Lieutenant Governor, J. Q. A. Brackett; Secretary of State, Henry B. Pierce; Treasurer, Charles R. Ladd; Auditor, Henry General, A. J. Wallace; Attorney General, M. H. Carpenter; Commissioner, C. J. Hughes, Jr.; Presidential electors, James S. Eagan, L. Harris, Presidential Electors.

The platform, after indorsing Cleveland's administration and the St. Louis nominations and platform, demands the free coinage of silver and the prohibition of Chinese and pauper labor, favors tariff reduction and liberal pensions, denounces trusts, and indorses the deep-water harbor movement.

THE MAINE RETURNS.

The Republican Plurality Placed at 18,495.

The following dispatch has been received at the National Democratic headquarters in New York City:

PORTLAND, Me., Sept. 15.—Calvin S. Brice, Chairman: Dingley's paper, the Lewiston Journal, claims to have returns from the whole State showing a Republican plurality of 18,495, or 1,253 less than last year. Our committee concedes the vote to Dunnell, (Rep.), in Aroostook, thus reducing our vote on major than ever before shown. Total Republican vote, 70,903.

—M. M. BRADY, Secretary.

Hockey Laborers.

The Ohio State Convention of the Union Labor party met at Columbus, and indorsed the national platform of the party and nominated the following ticket:

Secretary of State—George Ebner of Franklin County. Supreme Judge—J. H. Tuttle of Lake County. Member of Board of Public Works—W. J. Brunsdale of Wood County. Electors-at-Large—J. V. Cooper of Clark County and J. A. Scribner of Knox County.

A Moorhouse Deacon.

Lewis Burrows, who has been convicted of the murder of his father-in-law, Jesse Smith, Ark., was a deacon in the church of which his victim was the pastor.

Hotel Burned.

The Fort Covington Hotel, E. L. Seelye proprietor, at Lake George, N. Y., has burned at a loss of $80,000; insurance, $30,000.

"KNOW THYSELF."

BY GEORGE ANDERSON.

MAN, know thyself, is an old maxim, which originated, I believe, with Socrates. The precept is duly memory with age, I must confess, but it does not seem to be much worth heeding. The effects of practicing on this maxim upon the minds of our good people are not very successful in their efforts to know themselves. They go through life with a mistaken idea or estimate of themselves. The majority of us are deluded with the idea that we are superior, either morally, mentally, or physically, to our next-door neighbor, although cold, remorseless, unbiased facts seem to argue to the contrary.

After a great many years of untiring and chronic effort, I have at last succeeded in discovering what manner of man I am. I shall not dwell upon the case with minute details, but will give the patient reader a short and to the point sketch.

My "bump" of self-esteem may have had larger than the average "bump," but I do not believe it. At any rate, it has diminished in size quite a bit. The abnormal swelling of my head, from the effects of self-esteem, has gone down since I commenced to know myself. I could give the reader some instances showing where I have been fooled by my obsinate and firm-rooted egotism, but shame forbids me to do so. I will put my own private views about politics, which I thought, of course, were the highest wisdom, at least, I talked that way to others. I was only a boy then. We boys were in the habit of talking about free trade and protection with as much vim and loud lungs as the men. We generally got the worst of the argument, but I am sure that our arguments were more strongly flavored with "cuss words" and rowdy talk, to give them emphasis. This style of argument seems to be a weakness of our American youth. I am sorry to confess that we boys did not see ourselves as others saw us; at least not as our elder political brethren saw us. We never read anything outside of school if we could help it, excepting dime novels, whose chief charm lay in the exploits of wonderful and impossible pirates, brigands, etc. Still that fact was of no consequence to us. We thought we knew a thing or two, I now realize how little I knew, how meager is my present knowledge of political economy, and how small was my experience in the ways of the world, compared with my mind-slingers.

I did not intend to write about politics in this article, the supply in that line seems to be greater than the demand, but I merely wished to show the erroneous impression which seems to be rampant among many of our generous youth, if I may so express it.

I shall now pursue and expose another line of error.

Young man, did you ever stick your hands in your pockets, and say to yourself, "The world owes me a living, and I am small potatoes and a rise in the world as well as the next man," as you squirted tobacco juice between you teeth with an air of great assurance and self-esteem? If you have, that is just where you made your mistake. Every tramp that ever lived has done the same thing. They were cultivating their bumps of self-esteem instead of cultivating the soil. What have they got now that they can boast of? Nothing but bumps of iniquity on their foreheads. If they had not stood around with their hands in their pockets waiting for the good time coming, if they had pulled off their coats and dodge, they would have found a snug little fortune waiting for them in some very deep down, either. I have never seen a genuine tramp yet who could not point out the place in life he was in our present political and social system, if he would only give his mind to the art of criticising. I do not mean to say that all tramps are lazy, some are more, some are small "doers," if I may use those terms, but I do mean to say that all tramps are "liars" and "cowards." Boys, take warning from the vagrant; think less of your own importance, learn to work with a firm conviction that you are a small atom in the universe, and you will find yourself growing bigger every day.

I am sure that if tramps, cranks, and various other objects of pity "knew themselves," as they have appeared to others, they would reform, and be so intent upon nursing their own ego that

Oh, would some power endow us with the gift to know when we are fools and cranks! How different we would be then. I do not doubt that two-third, at least, of the cranks would be cured, that they would have made a brilliant success on the stage if they had unstuck that cause, and had enjoyed the opportunities that others had in that direction. It is human nature to think so. I may have had the same failing myself, but I was in that contested but deluded frame of mind long enough to be able to appreciate the "Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise," is an old and in some instances true saying, but it is often convenient, and sometimes money in our pocket, to know the truth.

Knew What He Was Talking About.

"John," said a citizen, "why do you wear that absurd cue on your head?"

"Chinese custom, sir," replied John.

"You don't suppose that an American would wear such a thing as that, do you?"

"Nop; Melican wife pull it off. That Melican custom, too."—Drake's Magazine.

THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

NATIONAL LAW-MAKERS AND WHAT THEY ARE DOING.

Proceedings of the Senate and House of Representatives—Important Measures Discussed and Acted On—Pending Business.

In the Senate Mr. George offered an amendment, on the 13th, to the trust bill reported from the Finance Committee. It consists of four sections, the most important being one making it the duty of any trust, if its methods are raised in consequence of agreements or combinations, to give the Presidential information regarding it by the collection of import duties on such articles. The amendment was ordered to be printed on the order of its author, and referred to the select committee on the subject. Senator Hoar introduced a joint resolution for a further conference. The anti-land section as amended by the House was disagreed to, with the purpose of investigating the extent to which the lands claimed to be forfeited have been restored. The Forestry of the Geological Survey is directed to make an annual report of the progress of the work, which shall include a full and comprehensive report of the public lands, the forests of the United States, and the extent to which the public lands have been injured by reason of the cutting of timber, and all the lands which are fitted or designated for sites for reservoirs, canals, and other works for irrigation, and all lands found to be acceptable for irrigation, are reserved from sale or entry until otherwise provided.

The discussion of the Chinese exclusion bill was continued in the Senate the 14th. The House passed the Senate bill authorizing the Secretary of War to commence act, after adopting the following amendments: Giving State courts of concurrent jurisdiction concurrent jurisdiction with Circuit Courts of the United States under the act; directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to make a report classifying existing freight rates, and requiring carriers to charge for the same under the classification; petroleum, crude oil, and turpentine in bulk, in tank cars, shall be deemed to be articles of commerce; the provisions of the act shall not apply to the transportation of passengers and freight cars of common carriers on railroads operated by steam power.

The conversation offered by Mr. Platt in reference to a foreign syndicate controlling the production of copper in the United States was adopted by the Senate the 14th. A heated debate followed. The Senate made Messrs. Edmunds and Morrill a committee to recede from the position they had taken, and a compromise bill was passed. The vote resulted in the adoption of the Senate by a majority of 10 votes, it was arranged that the House should pass the Senate bill as taken on the 13th. Among the bills passed by the House of Representatives were those to provide for the adjustment and to settle differences between interstate railroads and their employes; providing penalties for the violation of quarantine regulations; to provide for the sale of the Fort Ripley military reservation; to amend the law relating to the forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line. The Senate concurred in the House resolution appropriating $30,000 to suppress the Colorado beetle, and passed the Senate bill to provide for an executive session each passed thirty-two private pension bills.

The Chinese exclusion bill now goes to the President for his approval, the Senate having receded from its amendments, and the House in the year round than is possible to agree to the conference report. The vote was as follows:

Scotland and while very much damper is the average annual temperature of Montana is 45 degrees, Dakota 44 degrees, Washington Territory is not so, hopelessly near the sun as Arizona is that the country is not in France, where the products of the mile-long vineyards are sold to the peasants in the neighborhood, but in Germany, in the Rhine from whence we write, we are on the parallel of Sioux City. The great timber belt of the Pacific Northwest is the Chinook wind, so warm that it melts the snow and keeps the grass of summer and the cold of winter. The cattle ranges of Montana are in the valleys of the Yellowstone and its tributaries, and the shelter stock through a long winter. Montana is a country of great mines, and intelligent and honest miners are its citizens.

CELERY may be planted as late as the middle of August. It is unquestionably a delicate vegetable, and is little cheap as possible. This may be accomplished by planting and watering. It does best on soil that is rich and moist. It should be blanched gently, but never when wet with dew or rain.

AN ABUNDANT COUNTRY.

DIVERSIFIED RESOURCES OF WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The Valley of the Snake River, One of the Richest and Most Prolific Sections of the Pacific Northwest—A Healthful, Temperate Climate.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

DAYTON, Wash. Ter., Sept. 12, 1887.

It is a common though entirely erroneous idea that the further north we go it becomes. The altitude, the character of the soil and climate of Washington Ter. and many other Western States give us entirely different climates on the same parallel of latitude. In this letter I shall endeavor to show you, as we will contest ourselves by referring to well known facts, that the western region of America in summer than the eastern. This is due to the influence of the Japan current and currents of the Pacific do not, in defiance of the heat of the tropics to these shores, ameliorate the climate of our Atlantic coast. The strength against the shore line of Washington Ter. is so great that it has formed over this region a climate peculiarly its own. Dates, pertaining to seasons does for Europe and the United States do not apply to Washington Ter. Take Sitka, Alaska, is on the parallel of Edinburgh, Scotland, and while very much damper is the average annual temperature of Winnemucca, Nev., is 50 degrees, Washington Territory is not so, hopelessly near the sun. Arizona is that the country is not in France, where the products of the mile-long vineyards are sold to the peasants in the neighborhood, but in Germany, in the Rhine from whence we write, we are on the parallel of Sioux City. The great timber belt of the Pacific Northwest is the Chinook wind, so warm that it melts the snow and keeps the grass of summer and the cold of winter. Dakota is a country of great rivers, and has been so long enough to have a population. The home of the Sioux, and the rough work of early settlement is over. Montana is a country of great mines, and intelligent and honest miners are its citizens.

He Did Not Walk.

The heavy-hearted villain of the Stranded Comedy Company walked briskly into the office of the theatre superintendent, and greeted that responsible dignitary with a familiar nod. "Fairbanks," said the astonishing man, the eyes of the stiff-necked official he addressed fairly bulging out of his head, "I want to be prompted."

"Say, I want you to give me a pass to Boston."

"A pass?—to Boston? What for, sir?"

"Because I live down that way."

"But that can be, sir; but what claim have you on this company? I don't do it for you."

The villain hesitated, but was not lost.

"See here! Where are the overseers of the poor in this town?"

"Well, I happen to be one of them myself, sir."

"Then I want you to send me to the poorhouse. I am starving to death. I'm just going to put myself on this town. Shoes busted; I haven't a cent, and if you can't give me a pass I can't get away. Guess I'll go to the poorhouse until the season opens and I can get another job. Look after me as soon as you can, please, because I want to wash up and get something to eat. What do you say?"

"Mr. Penholder, give this man a pass to Boston."—The Idea.

Look Out for the Heart-breaker.

Look out for the heart-breaker.

He is usually a good-looking fellow, who dresses well, talks glibly, and has a way of making himself agreeable. His sole object is to own a rich father-in-law. He will take almost any woman, regardless of looks or age, provided she happens to be delicate—in order to get into a rich family.

These never make good husbands, and generally prove to be very expensive luxuries. Any woman is better off as an old maid than as the wife of one of such men.

None but honest, industrious, generous men make good husbands, and don't forget it.—Pittsburg Commercial.

PIERCING THE CLOUDS.

THE GREAT EIFFEL TOWER NOW BEING BUILT IN PARIS.

Five Hundred Feet Higher than the Great Pyramid—A Description of the Marvelous Structure—What It Will Do Cost For.

The Washington Monument is 555 feet high, and has no rival in stature at present, but the Parisians are priding themselves on the fact that by Jan. 1 next they will have another, on the Champ de Mars, an iron tower 1,000 feet high, to amend which, shortly after, they and visitors to their Exposition on the most favorable hypothesis possible. We have reckoned the trellis work as full walls and made other allowances, and, as the strongest tempests known in Paris have never been heard a pressure of 150 kilos per square meter, the tower is perfectly secure. Should a wind bearing a force of 300 kilos arise, it will be but the standing in Paris except the tower." M. Eiffel proposes to elevate for each of the four pillars until the second stage is reached, and then two to the top.

He will run the tower during the Exposition and for twenty years afterward, when it is stated which time it will become the property of the city. Any one who mounts to the first stage will have to pay 2 francs. This immense space will be let out by M. Eiffel as cafes and restaurants. To ascend to the summit will cost 5 francs in advance. On Sundays the prices will be reduced to 2 francs and 1 franc. The tower will cost $1,000,000, of which the French Government pays about $300,000.

The Eiffel tower stands immediately upon the bank of the south side of the river. Its base forms a gigantic archway over the main path lead up from the bridge to the central avenue of the Exposition. Some idea of its proportions may be gained from the fact that it is said that the ground distance from the axis of one of its four pedestals, across the diameter to the axis of the other upon the same front, is 160 meters, or about 5,200 feet. Or, in other words, Bunker Hill Monument could easily be carted through the archway, lying on its side and carried inside.

As can be seen from the picture, the tower is to be composed of iron girders and pillars, in the simple construction of four great shafts, consisting of four columns each, starting from the four corners of the base and merging into one at the point where they form the main part of the tower. This will rest on the great cupola of Spanish reception-room, which, in turn, is surmounted by a still higher lantern or lookout, whose observation platform will be upon the dizzy plane of 1,000 feet.

There are to be three galleries circling the tower. The first two are of iron, the second of glass. The first great gallery, just above the archway, stands 185 feet above the ground, and measures nearly 50 feet each way. It will be placed cafes, restaurants, reading rooms, smoking and lounging rooms, and will be furnished with every comforts of a French resort. Thousands of people will be employed at home in this great business enterprise. Yonder in the Champ de Mars, Gustave Eiffel, the man who has given the world the tower, is proud of his tall offspring. Speaking of it lately, he said with enthusiasm: "Consider its importance from a meteorological point of view. It will enable us to make meteorologists can get up a thousand feet above the soil. This tower will enable them to study the decrease of temperature at different heights, to observe the variations of the winds, and to count the quantity of rain that falls at different heights, and the density of the clouds. Indeed, in all that relates to temperature, the tower will also already finished. rests lightly upon its iron supports and it will be the tallest of all the tower is higher than the highest part of Milan Cathedral. The amount of iron used in the first gallery is 1,000 tons, and the whole tower will be 7,300 tons. The whole tower, when completed, will weigh, it is supposed, about 15,000,000 pounds, or 7,500 tons. This weight will be distributed over the foundation soil, it is computed, at a pressure of a little less than five pounds to the square centimeter. Also the wind resistance of the tower has been calculated at 300 pounds to the square meter, while the highest wind ever observed in Paris would not give a half of this pressure. The tower will be fitted up on the inside of the shafts with elevators. There will be six or more connecting the first two galleries with the ground, and probably two which will go to the top.

TWENTY-EIGHT STORIES HIGH

The Babel Building Which Is to Be Erected in Minneapolis.

The tallest building in America is about to be constructed in Minneapolis.

M. EIFFEL.

ation will be invited. The work of erecting this wonderful tower is progressing rapidly. A few weeks ago first-seven perfectly symmetrical arches were entertained at lunch on its first landing, which has reached after 47 laborious climb of 347 steps. After coffee some venturesome guests tried to clamber to the second landing," but they had to give up their attempt owing to vertigo. The designer given was utterly insignificant when compared to the feast

tis. Mme. a Pittsburgh architect has completed the plans. It is to be twenty-eight stories high. This unusual edifice will be eighty feet square, and will have a courtyard in the center. The tower will contain 750 rooms. Its interior will contain will front on the courtyard, as the intention is to have all the rooms front on the four outer sides of the building. The building proper is to be 300 feet high, commencing at the footings made of that material and continuing of iron and steel to its full height. The framework will consist of a series of laminated river iron posts, diminishing in size as they ascend, braced diagonally after the manner of railroad bridge girders. They are horizontally braced by the beams of each floor, which form an integral portion of the building. The whole frame is covered on the exterior by a non-conducting substance.

The exterior is of stone and copper. The stone is covered at will "Story" by means of horizontal shelves made of iron. These are made integral with the stone, and are handsomely carved on the outside. The roof is to be iron, except the steps, which are to be made of glass. It is shaped exactly like the roof of the music house in St. Paul. The glass portion of it will be used as a lookout tower which the astronomy country may be viewed.

The grand rotunda, located on the first floor, will have a marble floor and two flights of stairs. The latter are certainly far for common use. There are to be marble wainscots, and the ceiling will be of the structural iron will be visible. Each office will have a door and two series of safes built on the outer wall and forming part of the structure. The outer walls will be of brick and stone, or features of the building. Those on the exterior will be twenty-four inches thick. The structure will not weigh as much as an ordinary building of its size and shape and more quickly built. It will be 350 feet high and will contain 750 rooms. The cost, it is stated above, front on the street.

Evolution of the Small Boy.

Of all the evolutions the boy the first in the line of evolution is the despised. The first boy-boots are suggestive, but those we wore with the upper and lower covering of a boy joined together in one piece. Boots comes after the American boy's toga. When he does then he is a kind of incipient man, a half-boy, half-man, a true, half comical. Did you ever notice some of our little boys who do the stoop? Did you ever see a man with a stoop? Why is it? Not because they bend over to pick up hats, long trousers, etc., but because in summer time you see on their backs a jacket. Put an Amish boy in knickerbockers, and he looks like any other lad, but once he shoulders his suspenders and you have the suggestiveness of a man. The jacket stands as the symbols of childhood. The awful struggle of manhood, or suggested by suspenders, is not growing old now and I do not like to see these pantaloon suspenders. Let the boy be a boy, look at an Amish boy with his homemade suspenders. Let the boy be an American instinct which prompts us to make children prematurely old.—Lancaster Examiner.

A COLLECTION of specimens of poisonous fungi, with a description of each, is in the exhibition recently opened in Hayre, France. Some are poisonous when eaten; others are merely venomous. Among the latter are the fungus, which is a tetrodon, and many others which are abundant near the Cape of Good Hope. In the Japan Sea is found a very peculiar tetrodon, which is sometimes used as a means of suicide. It brings on sensations like those produced by morphia, and then death.

A REPUBLICAN poll of the voters of Indianapolis shows a democratic majority of 1,140. Indianapolis knows Mr. Harrison and the rest of the country is finding him out.

HAVE you, as a democrat, done anything toward supplying some doubtful voter with a paper that will post him on the tariff question—the only issue in this canvass?

IN Augusta, Maine, which is the home of Jim Blaine and Joe Manly, the democrats at the recent election made a gain of over 200 votes over 1884. But Blaine forgot to telegraph that significant fact to anybody.

"WE favor the entire repeal of the internal taxes (on whiskey and tobacco) rather than surrender of any part of our protective system."—Chicago platform.

"The platform is in entire harmony with my views."—Ben Harrison.

IT is asserted that the republican hatred of prohibition in Indiana is so great that the newspapers refuse all prohibition advertisements, and mere attendants and caterers are put to the boycott. This warfare will heighten the ardor of the prohibitionists, and it is not beyond reason to suppose that the 3,000 prohibitionists of 1884, who became the 9,000 of 1886, will appear as the 20,000 of 1888. If it is to be a holy war in Indiana, Fisk will poll more than 20,000 votes.

IT is doubtful whether the republican lying about the Maine election will prove a benefit to them. The night of the election Blaine telegraphed that the enormous republican gains amounted to "almost to a revolution." The fact is that, as compared with 1884, the republicans have gained nothing, but have absolutely lost over 1,200 votes. The democratic vote on the 10th, was the largest ever polled in the state. Similar democratic gains in Michigan would give a democratic victory. And yet Blowhard Blaine falsely tells the country that it is "almost a revolution" in favor of the republicans.

SINCE England abolished the protective tariff theory, wages have increased in that country nearly fifty per cent, and in the high protective countries of Germany, Italy, France, Spain and China, the low price of wages is simply abominable. The true theory in a republican government should be—sell where you can get the most and buy where you can buy the cheapest. The government that interferes with the rights of trade, outside of necessary taxation, is a despotism and not a free country and people who do not know enough to appreciate that fact are not fitted to be citizens of a republic.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

THE political situation in Indiana is most encouraging for democracy. John C. New is making a fierce war on railroad men through his paper, the Indianapolis Journal, Ben Harrison's recognized official organ, and has gained the animosity of most of the railroad employes of the state, by reason of his sneers at the "tin bucket brigade," and his hearty approval of the assertion at the Chicago convention that "$2 bills would be more potent factors in the coming elections than the tin buckets or the men who carried them." New's persecution of Judge Gresham has brought the judge's friends into almost unanimous opposition to Ben. Harrison. This fact, added to the persecutions and boycotts of the prohibitionists, makes the situation peculiarly embarrassing for Mr. Harrison, and correspondingly encouraging for democracy.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW has contributed to the presidential canvass a sensation that surprises and confounds the republicans. Instead of bearing testimony to the enthusiasm of the English for democratic policy and helping the false cry of "free trade," as he was expected to do, Mr. Depew relates this incident of his travels: "I met an Englishman, and he was a nobleman of high education, who had traveled all around the world, and much in America, who was in favor of Harrison's election. I was somewhat surprised, for Harrison is hardly known over there, even by name, and I asked him why. He said it was because a tariff reduction, such as was proposed by the democrats, would be a bad thing for the English manufacturers, for it would enable the Americans to compete with them in the markets of the world, while under the present system the English men have everything their own way. His opinion was that with free raw material American manufacturers would become formidable competitors to the detriment of English manufacturers." The republican managers have made zealous efforts to induce Mr. Depew to retract or modify this statement, as damaging to their cause, but their attempts are unavailing. The story is strictly true and Mr. Depew will not deviate from it.

PROOFS OF ROBBERY.

Those who are inclined to believe, as Gen. Harrison invites them to, that tariff taxes are not added to the prices of domestic goods, and at the same time that the manufacturers can not possibly stand a reduction, will please give their attention to a few facts.

In the first place there is the fact that the American copper-mine owners for years sold vast quantities of their product abroad at the world's prices determined by free trade competition, and at the same time would not sell a pound to their own countrymen for less than the world's prices with our tariff tax added. This fact is established by price quotations and by testimony given in a New York court of justice.

Fact No. 2. A gentleman recently told the editor of the Hagerstown (Md.) Mail that he went to New York to buy certain machines to sell in South America. The regular price to American dealers is $12 apiece, but this foreigner, upon signing a pledge to sell none of them in the United States, got all he wanted at $7 each. The difference was equal to our tariff tax on like machines when imported. The tariff enables the American producer to extort from the American purchaser $12 for a $7 machine, or $5 more than the price at which he can afford to sell and does sell to foreigners.

Fact No. 3. On the 24 of last month Mr. Walter Negley of Hagerstown, Maryland, wrote to A. J. Lauber & Bro., at Piedras Negras, Mexico, asking the prices paid by them for certain American goods for sale at their stores, one at Eagle Pass, in the United States, and the other at Piedras Negras, Mexico. The firm answered as follows:

"Our shovels bought for our Eagle Pass store cost us about $6 per dozen, exclusive of freight. Our shovels of the same class and material cost us laid down in Piedras Negras $2.91 per dozen. Another item: Agate ironware can not be bought for delivery anywhere in the United States at better than 35 per cent. discount. In Piedras Negras we can buy the same articles from the same houses at 60 per cent. discount. The list is the same in both cases. These are not the only articles. Diston's saws can be bought with an additional 20 per cent. discount, showing that the manufacturers could sell in home markets in competition with the outside producers. These figures are only a partial list. Every article known to the hardware trade can be bought from American manufacturers for export cheaper than they can for home consumption."

The shovels referred to are the Ames shovels, manufactured in New England.

Will the western farmer and the western workingman who isn't a farmer just look that over again and see what he thinks of it? What does he think of a system under which the American manufacturer extorts from him more than twice as much for a shovel as he demands from the Mexican? Does he think that the Ames concern would shut down and turn its workmen out to starve if the duty on shovels should be entirely abolished? Does he think that the American manufacturer is unable to stand alone, or that he divides the tariff spoil with his workmen when he can afford to sell, and does sell, in Mexico for $2.91 the same goods for which he taxes the American buyer $6? After paying wages he can afford to sell at the lower price? How, then, can the workman get any of the higher price obtained from the American purchaser? If not, isn't this high tariff a huge fraud?—Chicago Times.

Burt's Canvass.

Mr. Burt is making a strong canvass. He is mainly devoting his time to making speeches to the questions that relate to his candidacy.

The question of state taxes goes to the bottom of all these matters. The state taxes are increasing at a wonderful rate. The state taxes are eating up the farmers and small householders and the necessity exists for a ball to be called on the legislature by a man of such force of character, business methods and intelligence that his call will be respected.

Mr. Burt is that kind of a man and his speeches exposing the condition of things in this state as to valuations and taxes are intensely interesting. They are creating a sensation among voters and they are carrying the conviction home to taxpayers that a change is necessary, and Burt is the man of all others to make the change. The voters can have no hope of anything worthy of the task from Luce. He is a mere tool in the hands of the party leaders. Many of those leaders are known to have jobs in their schemes for higher taxes and Luce dare not or will not counteract them. Burt has the intelligence, the firmness and the grit to stop the increase in the state taxes and for this work he will be chosen governor by the voices of voters of all parties.—Grand Rapids Leader.

FARM AND GARDEN.

IMPROVED MODES OF AGRICULTURE PRACTICED BY FARMERS.

How to Build a Poultry House and Give it—Largest Amount of Good Hard Room, That Shall Be Cool in Summer and Warm in Winter.

In building a poultry house a leading consideration with the average farmer is economy. It is claimed that the cheapest way to build a poultry house and give the largest amount of ground room (which is what counts with poultry) is to make but one roof and have that meet the ground. In accordance with this idea H. B. Stoddard illustrates and describes in his work on poultry architecture a poultry house for the farmer.

In the cut given the building, nine feet wide at the underpinning and nine feet high at the highest part, gives as much floor room for the fowls to move about in as if the walls were high on all sides of the structure, and with great economy in building materials.

POULTRY HOUSE FOR THE FARMER.

There should be twelve doors in the building, beside the small opening and the windows for the use of the fowls, and the ventilator (represented open) should be kept open in cold weather. The door ways of the board door are furnished with another set of doors made of lath. One of these may be seen in the cut where a board door is open. When the board doors are all opened in hot weather and the lath doors shut, there is a free circulation of air. It may seem as if there were an overplentiful allowance of doors, but we have tried as many to a building with satisfaction. To make the house as warm in winter as it is cool in summer, keep all the board doors closed but one, and have a package of straw between each lath door and the corresponding board door, excepting, of course, the latter pair of doors where the attendant enters.

Leather.

It is a fact not generally known that, considered with reference to the amount of capital and labor employed, the leather industry in the United States ranks next to agriculture in importance. The value added by labor to the raw material in the various processes of manufacture is one-half greater in the leather industry than in the iron industry.

The effect upon the leather industry of the repeal of the duty of 10 per cent. on hides and skins in 1872 furnishes one of the most conclusive proofs of the advantage resulting from free raw material. In 1872 the United States imported hides to the value of $11,346,000, and exported leather and manufactures of leather to the value of $2,634,639. In 1887 the imports of free hides and skins had risen to the value of $24,225,776, and the exports of leather and manufactures of leather to the value of $10,346,138. Except in the single article of gloves, the imports of manufactures of leather into this country have almost entirely ceased. We not only supply our home market, but are selling at advantage in foreign markets the surplus product of American industry.

There is no reason to think that the policy of imitating raw materials which has proved so successful in the leather industry would not have precisely the same effect if applied to wool, jute, hemp, flax, iron ore, coal, and other crude material necessary for carrying on our manufacturing operations. The solid, uncontradicted, patent facts furnished by our experience in the leather trade are worth a cart load of theoretic disputation about the value of protective taxes in adding to the wages of labor, the earnings of capital or the productive vigor of industrial enterprise.—Philadelphia Record.

The Right Man in the Right Place.

Mr. Burt is making his mark in the state campaign in the precise way that was expected when he was nominated. He was chosen to lead the democratic ticket because of his marked executive and business ability, and the familiarity he displays with the state's affairs, and especially with its mismanagement under republican administration, shows that there was no mistake made in selecting him. He is after the prize, and will succumb to no sharp sticks; and the uneasiness of the governor's supporters shows that the prodding has taken effect.

As candidate for governor, Mr. Burt is the right man in the right place; and he will be still more emphatically the right man in the right place when he ceases to be candidate and becomes governor. The people of Michigan want just such a thorough business-like administration of their state affairs as he will give them. And they are going to give it to him. Finertys and other republican orators who declare that Michigan is "doubtful" are mighty near right. It is so doubtful that there is no longer much doubt about it. The tax-payers know the value of a man like Burt in the executive chair, and they are not going to let the opportunity slip of putting him there.—Detroit Free Press, Sept. 14.

SMUTS AFFECTING WHEAT.

Remedies That Have Proven Successful in Various Sections.

Large losses occur annually to the wheat crop through the injurious agency of smuts. The diseases variously termed hard smut, bunt, smut balls, etc., causes not only a large percentage of loss in grain, but reduces the value of what is grown by imparting to the crop a fetid odor, which has given rise to the name, "stinking smut" in some localities. While wheat is growing it is difficult to distinguish hard smut, as it is in the young kernel of the wheat, which is hidden by the chaff, that the characteristic black spores are produced. When wheat grains have been destroyed by hard smut they present an unusual external appearance; they are shorter and more swollen than the healthy seeds and are of a dull green, instead of the clear and sometimes cracked, color of the healthy grain. Smut, or, as it is generally called, "loose smut," to distinguish it from bunt or hard smut, is not only injurious to wheat, but to barley, and especially to oats.

As with bunt, so with loose smut, the disease begins at the bottom and works upward. This smut is not restricted, like bunt, to the seeds alone, but the whole ear is destroyed.

The above facts, presented by Professor Fletcher in a bulletin issued from the experimental farm at Ottawa, Canada, have little practical bearing, unless one can draw from them something which may suggest where to look for a remedy. This they do, explains the authority quoted from. Everything points to the infection coming from the ground and traveling upward.

Remedies which have been most successful are those in which methods have been adopted to destroy the spores adhering to the seed. Several previous to sowing by washing or steeping the grain in some chemical solution.

A common remedy and one advised by Professor Fletcher, Director Scovell, of the Kentucky Experiment station, and others is a solution of sulphate of copper, also called blunestone or blue vitriol. Some advise merely wetting the seed. Others use a wash to clean the grain. An English authority advises: "One pound of blunestone dissolved in twenty-four gallons of boiling water is sufficient for a sack of four imperial bushels. The wheat is soaked for ten minutes, or the ten pints of solution may be poured over till all is absorbed." A Manitoba farmer says the following has proven successful in his district: "One pound of sulphate of copper is dissolved in a pailful of hot water, which is then sprinkled by one man over ten bushels of wheat placed in a wagon box, while some one else keeps the grain well stirred. Should a large amount of smut be detected in grain required for seed the solution is made stronger, double the quantity of blunestone being used." The chief advantage claimed for this method is that in a few hours the grain is sufficiently dry to sow with the drill.

Mr. Plumb, while at the New York Experimental station, used four ounces of sulphate of copper in one gallon of water, and reports that "seeds soaked seventeen and a half hours in this solution were found to produce a slight amount of smut. Soaked forty hours all germs of the fungus were killed." It ought to be told that his experiments were with oats, which have the fact that the seed is contained inside a comparatively loose husk, there is much more difficulty in removing or destroying all the smut pores than is the case with the smooth and naked grain of wheat.

At the Kentucky station the method of applying the solution of blue vitriol was as follows: Ten pounds of blue vitriol were dissolved in eight gallons of water and the solution placed in a tub. The wheat was placed in sacks, immersed in the solution, and stirred, care being taken not to put enough wheat in to cause the top of the solution. After skimming off floating wheat and particles the solution was poured off into a second tub, the wheat drained and spread on boards to dry. The solution was re-used as often as we had wheat to treat in this manner. This treatment proved entirely successful

Convenient Milk Pails.

Fig. 1 illustrates a device for fastening a pail in position a pail from which a calf is to drink. Three stout sticks are nailed in the ground and the pail is placed inside them. Simple enough, and yet simplicity is a virtue of many

FIG. 1.—DEVICE FOR SUCCESSFUL DEFASTENING A PAIL.

Fig. 2 shows a milk pail cover that has been used successfully by a correspondent of Rural New Yorker, from which journal the above was taken. The object of this is to keep the dirt from falling into the pail while the cow is being milked. A large piece of cardboard is cut to the shape shown in the cut. This piece is large enough to lap one inch over the edge of the pail. The outer line shows where the edge of the pail comes. Little ear holes are cut in the sides of the cover to fit around the handles. A piece five inches wide and three inches deep is cut out in front to milk through. The milker puts the cover on the pail and milks into the pail through this large opening.

What Others Say.

The Dairyman, opposing the popular idea that the best butter cows make the readers that the smaller the cheese the larger the amount of food and care.

A southern editorial says the most salable sweet potato is one that is short and thick, and it is to produce these that you plow shallow and make flat hill ridges, so that the sweet potatoes grow they will reach the hard soil and be checked in their outward growth and will develop thickness.

An English correspondent says: "Bran will pay the milk seller, but onts the butter maker."

In exchange says Swede turnips, if fed whole and separately, will flavor milk. A lb. of bluid and blood meal, an equal quantity of mangolds, or pulped and mixed with hay, will not impart a bad taste.

A veteran fruit grower says that the method of catching the curculio in plum trees by jarring the little pests down on a white sheet is a remedy better than all of the many others ever tested.

The salary of the commissioner of agriculture is raised from $4,000 to $5,000 a year.

HARVESTING POTATOES.

Practical Suggestions That Cannot Fail to Prove Useful.

The harvesting and storing of the potato crop is an important matter, hence practical suggestions on the subject can hardly fail to prove useful. A very common mistake is the one of delaying the harvesting of the tubers until too late. The tops have been dead some weeks, a copious growth of weeds has taken their place, the ground has become muddy with autumn rains, and the potatoes when thrown out are more or less covered with mud. They are then, muddy as they are, thrown into the cellar or piled in heaps out of doors, to be covered with straw and earth as protection against the freezing cold of winter. The mud which adheres to them tends to increase the tendency to rot, which is further hastened by the warm temperature of the cellar during warm autumn days.

A better plan, says Country Gentleman, is to dig the crop before the fall rains have reduced the soil to mud, and if possible before the rot has commenced its work of destruction. For this purpose early maturing sorts, as for instance the Ohio and Hebron, have the advantage over later varieties. Being clean and dry, they may be placed on a broad slatted floor on the north or cool side of an outhouse, so situated that the air can circulate freely from below and pass up through the potatoes. They should not be placed in too large masses, so as to obstruct ventilation. Crops which would rot badly in wet ground, would not seriously suffer if properly treated in this way. In some unfavorable seasons, when more than half the crop was ruined by rotting when dug, the selected and sound remainder, after roughly cleaned and placed on such slated floor, has nearly or entirely ceased from decay, so that not one bushel in thirty has suffered. It is very important, however, that the work be done thoroughly and in the best manner, for if carelessly performed it would be of comparatively little use.

When cold weather approaches the tubers are either removed to the cellar intended for them or turned out of doors in heaps or pits. When buried, they should be protected from the adverse influence of light and frost and means of ventilation supplied.

To return to the slatted floors. Their effect would be more perfect if the apartments of which they form the floor were separate from the rest of the building by non-conducting walls, and access to the outside controlled by shutters to the windows. During the heat of warm days these shutters would be closed, but opened on cool nights for the admission of cold air. In this way the temperature may be kept low all the time, and the danger of rotting lessened in autumn or winter, and premature sprouting prevented in the warm weather of spring. These views naturally suggest a storage house such as many large growers build.

When small quantities of potatoes are kept in cellars, and only for family use, the authority quoted from suggests that the vegetable apartment in which they are stored must be kept separate from all the other apartments—from the one for fruit, or for dairy products, or for furnace coal—and be so situated that by closing or opening windows a uniformly low temperature may be secured. A convenient place for storing in cellars is in large obtong bins holding twenty bushels, more or less, having slatted bottoms, and raised several inches from the cement floor. Potatoes do not dry and shrivel so readily as apples, and the basement should not be a wet apartment nor a dirty one. It is hardly necessary to add that wherever they are stored, they are to be kept from the light with a thin covering of straw or coarse sacking.

Care thus would succeed with potatoes should remember the essential requisites of harvesting early before the advent of mud and the rot, handling carefully to prevent bruising, preserving the tubers clean and providing sufficient ventilation, whether in heaps out doors or in cellars or apartments.

These remarks are made rather in the way of suggestion than in the form down fixed and unalterable rules, and we trust they may aid young cultivators in the successful management of their crops.

A Famous Prize Stallion.

The stallion Escamillo, of which The English Live Stock Journal furnishes the illustration and description here given, is a notable example of a fine horse and a winner of many premiums. He was bred in 1885 by Mr. Joseph Pickersgill, from Bonny Mary, sired by Pero Gomez, and is owned by Lord Middleton.

ENGLISH STALLION ESCAMILLO.

Escamillo's build is such as to refute the objections often urged against thoroughbreds for farm use. He is known as one of the shortest legged blood stallions of England, and is so compact as to appear smaller than he really is. He has plenty of bone, is big in the body and brown in color. Escamillo stands 15.3¼, and tapes ¼ inches below the knee.

Saving Seed Corn

The safest way of caring for seed corn is to be sure that it is thoroughly dried in the fall. Then store it in a place that is a temperature above freezing during the winter and not much above. Wooden frames covered with wire netting and hung in some other place kept warm by a chimney is one good plan.

Here and There.

There is an apparent extension of 4 per cent. in the area of corn planted.

Cotton is later than usual in every state.

All the states and territories show an increase of the area devoted to potatoes.

The hay crop has generally been good this year.

The congressional agricultural appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, amount to $1,886,925. The appropriation for the current year exceeds that for last session by nearly $200,000.

There are $685,000 for agricultural experiment stations, $500,000 for the bureau of animal industry, $104,000 for the seed distribution and $100,000 for experiments in sorghum sugar making among the heaviest items.

The Louisiana rice crop is reported to be flourishing.

Beets for Cattle Feed.

A careful consideration of the subject of all its bearings by James T. H. Gregory, of Holliston, Mass., has decided him that that cultivator that "beets for cattle food are well worth fully as much per bushel as good hay is worth dollars per ton, without taking into consideration the increase of the manure, and that the average cost, when raised for feed, after put into pits, with every item of expense included, need not exceed eight cents per bushel.

A Profitable Cow.

Professor E. W. Stewart says that if a cow only produces 3,000 pounds of milk per annum, she is kept at a loss. A cow, well fed, will yield 6,000 pounds of good milk, and the cost of producing this will be only one-half that of producing 3,000 pounds from the poor cow. Without selection of cows, and judicious feeding, dairymen cannot receive anything worthy of their labor.

A Cherry Experiment.

In a cherry experiment, conducted by the Illinois Experiment station entomologists, Prof. C. M. Weed, 27,500 cherries were carefully cut open and examined, and the conclusion reached that three-fourths of the cherries liable to injury by the curculio can be saved without danger to the tree by syringing with a solution of London Purple soon after the blossoms fall.

VILAS' VOICE UPLIFTED

POWERFUL SPEECH BY THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

The Administration Declares Itself to the Northwest—An Answer to the Enemies of Cleveland—The Friends of the Tariff.

[Milwaukee special.]

The administration spoke to the Northwest on Wednesday night. Secretary Vilas was its adequate medium, and an ample occasion was furnished by the convention of the Democracy of Wisconsin. Backed with the consciousness of a great and just cause, he spoke with the force of strength and therefore equal to the fray. The occasion was thus invested with unusual importance. Thousands of the tariff-reform and tariff-hating people of Wisconsin looked to the Secretary for an answer to the assaults upon the administration, beginning to be made even now, but were they disappointed. Mr. Vilas never appeared in better form than when he faced his hearers in the great hall. His speech is here considered the master effort of his life. He began with dignity; sustained himself with spirit, and closed with a burst of eloquence. Throughout his speech, though of great length, lost no point of interest, to the close. After some preliminary remarks Mr. Vilas said substantially:

I invite you to contrast the conditions, the purposes and the prospects of the two political parties in this contest and the pressure for the future affected by them respectively. What is the Republican party of to-day and whence is it better or more worthy of confidence than it was in 1884? It was in the beginning mere a popular uprising than a political party. It tossed into the political caldron the elements of a political and traditional hatred, jealousy and oppression, and in the honest zeal of deep conviction it followed its leaders in the fanatical, it was a crusade against a great national sin; and it was a crusade against a great national sin in politics in of the inspiration by fire to it from to rapid power like the whirlwind, and like the through wholesome violence. Within a decade the evil which had been the occasion of it was none than destroyed, it was demonstrated to be a great sin against the people, and with the sin gone which brought it into existence which its aims, constitutions and peoples and the war, it was its work and it was done. Its work was of the party's existence. It a not upon or principles for the guidance of the best institutions of freedom in the repose of peace. It was not natural but evolved in part for civil war, not for national fraternity. But the party had taken on the spirit of war, and it was its nature to continue it. Any uncommon party that the party retained unabated control of all peace also and taxation, with all resulting opportunities of fraudulent gain. It was the opportunity of opportunities for the party to continue. There by the caravan, and there to be in control of the spoils of victory. Its opportunity for the Republican party was not to begin the party of the rich or the aristocratical. Its vanguard was the conservatical abolitionists. Its mission was to redeem the lowly slave, and its appeal was to the sympathy and conscience of a people not high. But the appeal was of great power and carried over for inestimable threat results. Even in the darkest days of the bitterness of the civil war the nation, when every thought was agonizingly hot and every passion tense to the very verge of war, even while the storm of battle raged and the angry lightnings flashed, the silent earth, the accents of personal and confidential appeal darkly moving behind the scenes, gave constantly the rallied turn to private gain of money tires for the prosecution of the war.

Money as a Gigantic Scale.

And never for one moment did they suspend their efforts nor quite the whole account. Upon one pretext and another, from advantage to advantage, from opportunity to opportunity, the party has kept up its work of the enrichment of the few to prevail.

It was in 1861 that, recognizing the sentiment that national defense required a transcontinental railroad, the party in power, the Republican party, had passed the Pacific railroad bill, containing, mainly, it was so amended in dialectical perfection that the Government could build the roads and the corporations could take the roads, and the successful contractor could be the Government and the corporation at the same time. Upon the strength of this, the Republican party has already become the parent of a great people, a vacillation of the tariff, and the lofty of neighborly imitation,

Rev. H. C. Scofield preached at the school house last Sunday.

A load of young people of this place attended the temperance meeting at East Jordan on Sunday evening.

Prof. Miles exhibited a phantasmagoria at the school house on Saturday evening, which he highly appreciated very much.

Wm. Knuttle, who has been spending a few weeks at his sisters in Milwaukee, returned home Monday. He thinks northern Michigan is the best place after all.

Mr. Dougald McMillan of Echo, visited friends here on Monday last.

Judge Kent of East Jordan, delivered a republican speech at the school house last Monday evening.

J. R. Vance and two children made flying trip to Echo on Monday last.

Eveline.

ISONTOR, Sept. 25.— Wm. Butler and family started on Tuesday for Grand Rapids, and we understand they will make that place their future home.

Last Thursday Miss Agnes Nugent closed a four months term of school in the Bears district, with a picnic in the grove near the school house, and, notwithstanding the threatening rain was well attended, there being quite a number from Advance and Boyne, among them were Miss Nugent's parents and sisters. About noon all signs of rain disappeared and everyone enjoyed themselves. At about 11 o'clock the exercises began by the pupils which were well rendered, and a great deal of credit is due both teacher and pupils. At one o'clock all were invited to a dinner which was well prepared for the occasion; the balance of the time was spent in swinging and social talk, and at three o'clock all dispersed well satisfied with the occasion. Miss Nugent has given good satisfaction, so much so in fact, that she has been engaged for the winter term, which begins November 1st.

Ellsworth.

Mr. Fuller is moving his large steam saw mill from Alba to this place, and expects to have it in running order this fall.

HOW HE SAW IT.

Blaine's New York speech—I wish every voter could see what I have seen abroad.

Observer—He could, Brer Blaine, he could if his best friend was "protected" to the tune of $1,000,000 a year.

Blaine's second speech—The American laborer's wages cannot be reduced without his consent.

Notice posted in Carnegie's works—A reduction of 10 per cent. in wages is ordered.

ENGLISH VS. EUROPEAN WAGES.

A Point No War Tariffite Will Discuss.

We commend to the attention of our high protectionist friends the case of Spain. It is the habit of the advocates of tariff reform to speak as if England, free trade England, were the country of low wages. They conveniently overlook the fact that the highest wages in the world outside of the United States are paid in England and that the higher the tariff the worse is the condition of labor. If, as a matter of fact, England proves anything. It is that free trade raises wages. To say that her workmen are not as well off as ours proves nothing, for their country is not naturally so favorably conditioned as the United States. What it becomes the high protectionist to show is the reason why all the protectionist countries of Europe are greatly behind England in point of wages. If the competition of pauper labor is what the American workingman has to fear, why is it that the English workingman has not succumbed to his less fortunate continental neighbors? There is no answer to this question that does not involve a confession of judgment against the notion that it is the tariff that regulates wages. The hope of the monopolists is that the American workingman will not discover the truth. Their expectation is that he will not learn that England is not, by any means the whole of Europe, and that the difference in our favor, as against England, is not greater than the difference in favor of England against other countries. This matter is suggested by what is now going on in Spain. The Spanish people ought to be the most prosperous in the world if high tariff could make them so; but, in truth, they are not at all to be envied. Wages there are one-half less than in England; their manufacturing interests, though covered all over with protection, have long been languishing; and their agriculture, despite the bounty of the soil and geniality of the climate, is in a pitiable condition. All this has at last given rise to a sharp contest between the protectionists and free traders. The latter are now insisting that the way to improve trade is to liberate it, and the way to enrich industrious men is to reduce their taxes. The free traders insist that the protectionist theory has failed utterly, and is making bad worse every day. The protectionists, on the other hand, are talking quite after the manner of our own politicians. They want more protection. They demand a tariff so high that foreign goods will be altogether excluded. American flour and meat might, they say, be made to sell at a little less than the Spanish former may Russia, and for the benefit of the Spanish weaver they would close their ports against English goods. What, however, the Spanish protectionist omits to say is, that the low price of labor is part of the trouble. It cannot relieve him of the competition of that high wages is what makes a protective tariff necessary. He has not got to the length of holding that the American manufacturer invades his markets because of the cheapness of American labor. The plain and unvarnished fact in the case is that the protectionists there have been driven to the logical extremity of their position and forced to declare for what is practically the Chinese policy, which is precisely where the United States would be landed in time if the monopolists had their way.—Brooklyn Citizen.

One by One.

When a veteran Republican like ex-Speaker De Witt C. Littlejohn leaves his party, it expresses lack of confidence in her officers It is time for those remaining to look out for breakers. His frank disavowal of sympathy with the high protectionists, made to an Eagle reporter and published in our news columns last evening, furnishes additional evidence of the rapid progress which is being made toward reverse reform convictions among thoughtful voters. Mr. Littlejohn believes "in a modification of the tariff so as to regulate the domestic market and curb the tendency toward combinations and trusts which an abnormally high tariff unquestionably engenders." This is sound and solid ground, and having preached it he will act with consistency if he casts his ballot for Cleveland and Taurman.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Blaine's British "Trusts."

The only two trusts known to English trusts at present are the trusts in copper and tin, and they were both the creation of protected France and of French financiers. More than this, the copper trust is largely upheld by the copper mine companies of the United States, which at the food price of 13 cents a pound. As to the tin trust, that has been "knocked in the head," chiefly through the efforts of British consumers, who have raked the markets of the world over in order to obtain the product at living prices.

HOW GRANITE IS POLISHED.

Putting a Smooth Surface on the Hard Stone—Methods in Detail.

The form is given to the stone by the hands of skilled masons, in much the same way as is done with other stones of softer nature. Of course the time required is considerably greater in the case of granite as compared with other stones.

If the surface is not to be polished, but only fine axed, as it is called, that is done by the use of a hammer composed of a number of slips of steel of about a sixteenth of an inch thick, which are tightly bound together, the edges being placed on the same plane. With this tool the workman smooths the surface of the stone by a series of taps or blows given at a right angle to the surface operated upon. By this means the marks of the blows as given obliquely on the surface of the stone are obliterated and a smooth face produced.

Polishing is performed by rubbing in the first place with water from tool and with sand and water. Emery is next applied, then putty with flannel. All plain surface and molding can be done by machinery, but all carvings, or surfaces broken into, small portions of various elevations, are done by the hands of the patient hand polisher.

The operation of sawing a block of granite into slabs for panels, tables or chimney pieces is a very slow process, the rate of progress being about half an inch per day of ten hours. The machines employed are few and simple. They are technically called lathes, wagons and pendulums or rubbers. The lathes are employed for the polishing of columns, the wagons for flat surface, and the pendulums for molding and such flat work as is not suitable for the wagon.

In the lathes the column is placed and supported at each end by points, upon which it revolves. On the upper surface of the column there are laid pieces of iron, segments of the circumference of the column. The weight of these pieces of iron lying upon the column, and the constant supply by the lathe attendant of sand and water, emery or pattsy, according to the state of finish to which the column has been brought, constitute the whole operation.

When sand is used during the rougher state of the process, these irons are bare, but when using emery and putty the surface of the iron next to the stone is covered with thick flannel.

The wagon is a carriage running upon rails, in which the pieces of stone to be polished are fixed, having upper surface to be operated upon. Above this carriage there are some placed perpendicularly, on the lower end of which are fixed rings of iron. These rings rest upon the stone, and when the shaft revolves they rub the surface of the stone. At the same time the wagon is driven forward and forward upon the rails, so as to expose the whole surface of the stone to the action of the rings.

The pendulum is a frame hung upon hinges from the roots of the work shop. To this frame are attached iron rods, moving in a horizontal direction. In the lower end of these rods are fixed irons, under them, the stone is firmly placed upon the floor. Pieces of iron are then loosely strewed over the stone and allowed to rest upon the surface of the stone. When the work is set in motion, these irons are dragged backward and forward over the surface of the stone, and so it is polished.

When polishing plain surfaces, such as the needle of a obelisk, the pieces of iron are flat, but when we have to polish a molding or such an article, pieces of its form and the irons are cast from that pattern.—Stone Mason, England.

South America's Tall Volcano.

Cotopaxi is the loftiest of active volcanoes, but is slumbering now. The only evidences of action are the frequent rumblings that can be heard for a hundred miles, and the cloud of smoke by day and a pillar of fire by night. The cone is nearly arise from a crater that is more than 3,000 feet beyond the snow line. Many have attempted to climb the monster, but the wails are so steep and the rock so loosed and so crumbling that it is impossible, even with scaling ladders.

The highest point on the Cotopaxi is a great rock, more than 2,000 feet high, called "the Inca's Head." Tradition says that a golden chair on the summit of the cone, and fell on the day when Atahualpa was strangled by the Spaniards. Those who have seen Vesuvius can judge of the grandeur of Cotopaxi if they can imagine a volcano 15,000 feet higher, spurting flames and lava from a crest covered with 3,000 feet of snow, with a voice that has been heard 600 miles. And one can imagine the grandeur of a journey on the road to Quito if he can imagine twenty of the highest mountains in America, three of them active volcanoes, towering along the road from Washington to New York. —American Magazine.

Gladstone Fifty Years Ago.

The following is a description of Gladstone, published in a London paper of 1838, the date of his marriage: "Mr. Gladstone's appearance and manners are much in his favor. His is a fine looking gentleman. He is about the usual height and of good figure. His countenance is mild and pleasant, and he has the look of intellectual expression. His eyes are clear and quick to the perception of the right and rather prominent. There is no dandy in the house but enviee what Truth would call his fine head of jet black hair. He is always carefully parted from his crown bequeathed to his lovers, and is most fully shaded. His features are small and regular, and his complexion must be a very unworthy witness if he does not possess abundant good health."—New York Commercial Ad.

Longest Piece of Ordnance.

A correspondent of The Army and Navy Journal asks: "What is the longest piece of ordnance in the world? It is generally held" and receives the following answer: "If you include in the term ordnance everything that carries a projectile, we should answer fourteen miles. This is the straight tube conveying natural gas from Murraysville to Pittsburg. To clear this tube out a projectile known as the 'gum ball' was inserted in the end at the gas well, closely fitting the interior. The gas was then turned on full force and the gum ball fired through its full length, coming out at the further end in a few minutes."—Scientific American.

Long-Standing

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 79 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

"Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor on my face and suffered terribly from it, and, as my brother and sister were afflicted with Scrofula, I concluded that it was hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, of Fernandina, Fla., recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a pimple since, and my body is free from eruptions."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it at first, but it gradually grew worse, and I became unable to work. During the latter part of this time, discouraged by my condition and live-long troubles, I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain in my side ceased, and I feel perfectly cured."—Mrs. A. A. Furbush, Haverhill, Mass.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

Adopted by the State Convention at Detroit July 11, 1888.

The democracy of Michigan assembled in convention for the nomination of state officers, congratulate the country on the fact that its chief aim is to present to the people candidates whose election will insure a continuation of state affairs in the integrity of character, purity of purpose and ability to carry out the principles and adhere to the traditional and established principles and policies of the democratic party in respect to national politics.

We renew the expression of our approval of the administration of President Cleveland which has won the respect and confidence of the people and has placed the Democratic party in response to the universal sentiment of the democracy, put in operation a tariff reform, and has encouraged a wholesome use of democratic principles and the enforcement of pure, just and impartial methods of administration in all the departments of the government.

Upon the chief question of military policy, we believe in a standing army, supported by indirect taxation, so decisive our unalterable opposition to the principle of pensions as a national policy.

We believe the interests of the laboring men and women of Michigan will be best subserved by the continuance of the present system of free schools, and we oppose the action of our democratic representatives in congress in their efforts to place the control of our common school system, preventing further accumulation of a dangerous fund in the state treasury, and relieving the people from the burdens of the war tariff.

We believe the democratic party can bring the policy of the government on this subject home to every man, woman and child in the breasts of the people, the just demands of labor the prosperity of all industries and the development of our resources and industries.

The democracy of Michigan believes in the principle of protection to American labor, the rate of wages workers to the fostering care of the government, and that protection to industry of every walk of life shall be encouraged in its progress of bringing up the material interests of state.

The ownership of real estate in this country by foreign corporations and non-resident aliens, is injurious to American interests and should be prohibited.

We favor the adoption of measures providing for the health and safety of those engaged in manufacturing, mining and building industries, and the repeal of all class legislation under which monopolies have been fostered and protected.

We demand that congress shall open to the public domain for settlement all lands granted to corporations or other roads which have not been earned, and more particularly do we demand that congress shall take possession of lands in the Upper Peninsula, that that portion of the state may be opened for the benefit of the natural growth and developments.

That to the multiplication in this state of logging camps, we attribute the ruin of many such powers and surroundings as insure superior moral environment for our children, the legislature or people, leaving the matter of a regulation between the lumbermen, who are protected by log rolling combinations, and as well as to the lack of system we attribute the great and constant increase of appropriation, therefore we submit that the case is one demanding the direction of a legislature and state officers free to make changes which economy and good government may demand.

Democratic actions have rule and not and government are cardinal principles of the democracy. We point to the record of Lyman Gilbert with the people of Ireland in the great contest for home rule, and to the record of Gladstone and Parnell for the right of home government for Ireland, and we point to the record of Lyman Gilbert as an evidence that we have stamped since the war we should not forget that a large number of that gallant and patriotic army that preserved to us our unbroken union, and that we are ever ready to extend every possible gratuity, the result of long privation and hardship. We believe the general government should deal justly with these and that liberal pensions should be granted to the disabled, not as charity, but as due from because of the inestimable services they rendered the nation, and we point to the record of Congress and approval to the liberal construction of the existing pension laws by the present administration as evidence of our sincerity in the amounts annually paid to veterans.

The Real Secret of the Success of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS may be found in our publication of a complete story which more than anything else has contributed to its remarkable growth.

FIRST—It is a Daily Paper for Busy People. The people of Chicago are all busy men, and by the necessity of an intelligent knowledge of the world's daily doings, let they are compelled to devote some time in searching through a continuous "blanket sheet" newspaper for the real news of art, literature, science, religion, politics, and the thousand-and-one things which make up modern civilization. They want news—all the news—but they don't want it concealed in an overpowering mass of the trivial and inconsequential. It is because THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is "all wheat and no chaff" that its circulation is over a million a month.

SECOND—It is an Independent, Fearless Newspaper. The people demand a life impartial, independent, and unprejudiced account of all the news, and given it free from the bias of partisan bias. Without a political obligation to gratify, so "as to grind," the impartial, independent newspaper can give a fearless, unbiased and fair account of the news of the world. The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS now sells to three two comprehensive elements of popularity, a third, in its unparalleled reduction of price to ONE CENT A DAY.

It always large enough—as we go here. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is for sale by all newsdealers at One Cent per copy, it will be mailed, postage paid, for $2.00 a year, or 25 cents per month. The same and mechanics can now afford to be a merchant and professional man, to have a metropolitan daily.

Such is the universal testimony of those who have purchased and tried the Celebrated Ball Bearing Clothes Wringer, sold by the Ball Bearing Wringer Co., of Detroit, Mich. It is impossible to make this article better, as all who purchase and use it will testify. It is the only wringer that will not pinch, bruise or tear the most delicate article, and is so much easier than any other wringer that it is a pleasure to use it. It is the only wringer that will last a lifetime, as the rolls are guaranteed for five years. It is the only wringer that will not get out of order, and the only one that has been in use for years that is now as good as when first purchased. It is the only wringer that has been in use for years that has not been repaired at a cost of more than its original price Actors Forty Years Ago.

It was in the early dates of the forties that I resided in Baltimore. I lodged in an actor's boarding-house. The hostess was a good-natured gray-eyed old lady, Mrs. O'Brien. The house did not have all the modern improvements, but it was a comfortable if not a luxurious home. We were a happy company. Many have made their mark. Some are dead and forgotten, others are alive and will be remembered. The old lady had two boys—Mike and Nutt. Nutt was a "basket boy"—that is, he carried a champagne basket, with the actresses' dresses in it, to and from the Museum, corner Calvert and Market streets.

In the cozy rooms of the Hotel O'Brien we would sit and listen to the elder Booth, who would often give us a call. Glass in hand, he would read us our parts, as only he could read them. His son Ted (Edwin) would come with the old man, and want to see him home for fear he would drink "potations pottle deep." Never shall I forget Booth's recital of the Lord's prayer; it was one of the most intense pieces of elocution I ever heard. The young actors would look and listen, each every movement, gesture, and tone of voice. After a fine bit of pathos the old man would take a pull at the beer—for we could not afford anything better. Ted was his constant companion. He used to dress him and bring him brandy and water, and play small parts, such as Cassely, Malcom and Wilford. Little did we then suppose he would ever become the great actor he now is, getting his $650 a night and his palace sleeping car. The elder Booth would have been very glad to have received for a week's service the sum of money his son now gets for one night's performance, to say nothing of traveling expenses, food and bed.

Joe Jefferson was one of our party. He was a very careful actor, always making the most of "a point." Joe was, in those days, our "second low comedy man," and was helping his father in pain scenes, in both of which labors he did not get more than $18 a week. He makes more now. Joe is jolly very wealthy. He gave his daughter (who married Farjeon, the writer) $100,000 as a wedding gift. He has a paradise of a home ten miles from New Iberia, La., with over one thousand arpents of land under cultivation. It is a perfect asylum. Fruits and flowers of every description are there in abundance, and the greatest variety of fish swarm the lake adjoining the plantation. He owns the finest imported pointers and setters I ever saw. His table is sumptuous, and his wines are of the best. His son Charles resides upon the place, and there Jefferson, when not acting, passes much of his time. He has two lovely grandchildren, of whom he is very fond. Joe left the Museum with Burton and went to Philadelphia, and then went the rounds of nearly all the theaters of the country. At length he got to New York, where, with Miss Laura Keene, he became prominent in the character of "Asa Trenchard." In 1861, Joe, thinking he had consumption of the lungs, or that he was predisposed to that disease, went to California. After playing a series of successful engagements in the Golden State he sailed for Melbourne. This was the turning point of his life. There he became a manager. Barry Sullivan was his leading man and Dominick Murray was his leading comedian. Joe became a great favorite. He made his company travel from town to town through the continent of Australia. His Rob Brierly in "The Ticket of Leave Man" was a remarkable hit; in fact, he created a profound impression in this character. But he came very near having a riot on the first night of its production, as the people thought that the subject of the drama was a reflection upon the inhabitants of that part of the world. They came to hiss, but remained to applaud. The drama ran for a long time, and just as it grew stale, something new had to be put up. What was to be done? "I will try Rip Van Winkle for a week," said Joe to his company. It was played for a week, and a great many of them, for it ran for four months.

Jefferson afterward went to England. There he met John E. Owens, who had been acting "Solon Shingle." It was a failure. Owens was acknowledged to be a clever actor, but the piece did not suit the public. John was disgusted and asked Joe to fill out his time. This was agreed to, and Owens went over to Paris on a pleasure trip. Joe then set Boucicault to work to rewrite the drama of "Rip Van Winkle," as at that time anything with Dion's name to it was a certainty in the way of a palpable hit in the dramatic line. The Catskill hero was then produced and proved an instantaneous success. It has been acted for over twenty-five years and holds the stage to-day. It has made Jefferson's fortune.—Baltimore American.

Fearful Leap in a Theater.

A sensation was created in the Queen's Theater, Manchester, recently by an incident which occurred toward the close of the third act of the drama, "A Mother's Sin," says the Manchester Guardian. One of the occupants of the gallery had become greatly excited by the development of the story and when the heroine of the play was being confronted with the villian of the piece, he jumped up from his seat, shook his fist at the actor and then took a fearful leap from the gallery, alighting with a thud on the stage, just beyond the footlights. Actors and audience alike were startled and shrieks were heard from all parts of the house. The man was at once carried off the stage, where he lay helpless and badly injured.

He told the manager that he had been so carried away by the piece that he did not know what he was doing. He wanted to save the woman, and jumped from the gallery without being conscious of the act. He gave his name and address as James MacIeville of Ancoats, warehouseman. A doctor was hastily summoned and under his directions the man was removed to the infirmary, where it was found that he was seriously injured, one of his legs being broken. Mr. Mansell, the lessee of the theater, explained the circumstances to the audience, and allayed the excitement by announcing that the man was alive and would probably recover from his injuries. The play was then proceed with.

Subsequent inquiries have shown that it was when the hero and the heroine of the piece was apparently being overpowered by the villian that Mandeville took his terrible leap. The anxiety, however, was for the heroine, and it is probably recounted for by the fact that the author has given her the man's own surname, Mandeville. The gallery stands 30 feet above the level of the stage, and it is a marvel that the man was not killed outright.

Dizey's Love of Ivy.

"I see we have Dizey with us again," said a man who works nights. "Great fellow, that Dizey."

"Do you know him?" was asked.

"I used to. He used to know me, too; but whether he does now or not I can't say. Dizey has changed. It only shows the ups and downs some people have in life. He was a very ordinary sort of a mug a few years ago before he had his great whif of success. When 'Adonis' was being rehearsed at Hooley's, Dizey used to make his headquarters at the Sherman House. That part of the gang that lived up on the North side got to know him pretty well. They used to spend an hour or two at the Sherman bar every morning waiting for the car. Dizey was generally there shaking dice. A jovial fellow he was, told a good story, enjoyed hearing one, and was one of the boys. He liked nothing better than to shake dice, and if there wasn't anybody else around the bartender had to shake with him. But he has nerved up a pog or two since then and has got to be a howling swell."—Chicago Tribune.

Not Shown the Ropes.

A new theater watchman was engaged at McVicker's the other day and Col. Louis Sharpe proceeded to show him around the premises and instruct him in his duties. They had "done" the front of the building pretty thoroughly when the Colonel was called to the office on a matter of business, and directed the new employe to go back to the stage door, where an assistant would "pilot him around and show him the ropes." In the course of half an hour or so the watchman turned up again, and on being asked if he had seen what there was in the rear replied with the innocence of a countryman on his first visit to the city, "Yes; but he didn't show me the ropes. Where do you keep 'em?"—Chicago Tribune.

Some Interesting Facts Concerning Sound and Vibrations.

THE SWING OF THE PENDULUM.

How Little Kate, on Decoration Day, Affected a Reconciliation Between Neighbors.

On Decoration Day.

There had been for several generations a feud between the Maxwells and Harts. It was, so to speak, a decent, well-regulated quarrel, no member of one family ever having offered personal violence to one of the other; still, they "did not speak."

In May, Kate Maxwell came to visit her uncle and aunt.

"Are there services here on Decoration Day?" she asked.

"No, not in this part of the town. There's only one soldier's grave here, and the Grand Army sends somebody to put a flag on it."

"Whose is it?"

"Tom Hart's."

"And doesn't it have any flowers? I should think his family would see to that."

"Oh, the Hart's have no more sentiment than a cow."

"Then some of us ought to do it." No one replied, and noticing how grim the family expression immediately became, Kate made her own private plans, and said nothing.

On the morning of Decoration Day she donned her prettiest dress and most coaxing manner, and ran to beg Uncle Gray if she might have just a few apple blossoms. "Yes, if she would take them from the 'grindstone' in the corner of the orchard, she might strip the tree."

"And, uncle," she still asked, hanging on his arm, "I heard you say you were going to the mill. Won't you take me with you, and wait just a minute for me to do an errand by the way?"

"Yes, Kate, the Tower."

Half an hour later, Kate, accompanied by an enormous basket filled with apple blossoms, mounted the farm wagon.

"What's that for?" asked her uncle.

"I'm going to step at the cemetery, and decorate Tom Hart's grave."

"I'll have nothing to do with one of the Harts, dead or alive.

"Bless you, uncle, you needn't have! Sitting in the wagon to wait for me won't compromise you. And however you may regard the Harts in general, this particular Tom is a hero and a martyr, he died for his country."

Kate usually did manage her uncle very, and, though her uncle grumbled, he set her down at the cemetery gate. It was a little yard, overlooked from the road, and by the time she had finished her work another farm wagon had stopped behind uncle's. As it did man slighted, and met her at the gate.

"I can't hardly trust my eyes," he said. "Is that Tom Hart's grave you fixed up?"

"Yes, sir—Tom Hart's. I had enough flowers to cover it, and it smells so sweet!"

"You're a good girl," said the old man, brokenly. "I should like to talk to you about my boy Tom."

"Uncle will take me to see you, I'm sure," said Kate, clearly. "Won't you, Uncle Gray?"

Gray Maxwell was by nature a polite man; he had been constant to his feud all these years chiefly by avoidance of the Harts.

"Yoes," he hesitated.

Mr. Hart looked at him. "Fine growin' weather," he announced.

"Yes," replied Maxwell, this time with more decision.

By sundown it was all over the village that "the Maxwells and Harts had spoken."

"Dear me!" thought Kate, when she heard it. "I builded better than I knew."

And the two farmers, who had long ago tired of animosity, blessed the day of national peace and reconciliation which had broken their rest.

Curiosities of Sound and Vibrations.

Not many evenings ago, while a young lady was singing, the glass shade on a gas-burner broke, frightening the singer nearly out of her wits, and though the chandelier contained nine glass shades, the one immediately in front of where the lady stood was the only one broken. Her voice, which was loud and strong, had shattered the glass, but it is not less strange than true, I know a person who can break a small tumbler of thin glass by holding it before his mouth and making a peculiar trilling noise. While away up amid the Alpine solitudes of Switzerland a few years ago, I noticed the muleteers tied up the bells on their mules, and was told that the protracted combined tinkling would start an avalanche. A dog barking will make the strings of a piano-forte sound, and, after all, vibration of the strings is what makes all the music.

Vibration is simply a moving to and fro, as we can see the pendulum of the clock do. All things have a certain vibration, though we cannot always see it. Some things have a number of vibrations in their different parts, and when two things vibrate in time with each other, and are near each other, though it is only air that connects them, the movement of one is affected by the other. The lady's voice broke the shade in the chandelier because its two vibrated in time with each other, and the motion of the voice so increased the motion of the glass as to loosen its particles and allow them to fall apart. When two clocks whose pendulums have the same range of vibration are in the same room, and the clock doors are open, if the pendulum of one is set in motion the pendulum of the other will also move. This is the reason: every time the pendulum of the clock vibrates it sends a puff of air in the direction of the pendulum of the second clock, and these puffs, continued regularly, set the pendulum of the second clock going. When two pianos are in the same room, if the strings of one are struck, not only will they vibrate, but also the corresponding strings of the other piano, providing that the forte pedal of the second piano has been depressed. If you whistle a note into a piano or violin, the strings of the instrument in unison with that note will audibly take it up.

I noticed the boys carrying milk about the streets of London in pails which hung from a yoke on their shoulders, and are held off from their bodies by hoops just below their waists. If these boys kept up a regular step, the vibration of their bodies would increase the vibrations of the milk until that was spilled. The little fellows may not quite understand the philosophy of the matter, but they know they must change their step from time to time to keep the milk in their pails.

A strong gust of wind will uproot a majestic tree when it comes just in time with the tree's swing or vibration. Some years ago there was considerable trouble and annoyance in one of the mills in Massachusetts, because the walls and floors of the building were shaken on certain days by the machinery. At these times nearly all the water in the pails would slop out by the motion of the floor. It was finally discovered that on this particular day the machinery went at a rate in keeping with the vibration of the building, and the trouble was readily overcome by making the machinery work either slower or faster than had been the custom.

The first iron bridge ever built was that at Colebrooke Dale, in England. While it was building a fiddler came along and said, "I can fiddle that bridge down." The workmen, little alarmed, bade him fiddle away to our heart's content. Whereupon the musician tried one note after another on his instrument, until he hit one in tune with the movement of the bridge, and the structure began to quiver so perceptibly that the laborers begged him to cease and let them alone, which he did; otherwise the structure would shortly have fallen.—Harper's Young People.

THE GOVERNORS HAD QUARRELED.

Carlyle draws a picture, at once hideous and sad, of a body of Prussian and English peasants who are disciplined and drilled and dressed in red and sent off to Spain, and there fraternize opposite to an equal number of French peasants, also in uniform, and with guns in their hands. At the word of command, both parties fire, and thirty men on either side fall dead; "and in place of sixty brisk, useful craftsmen, the world has sixty dead carcasses, which it must bury and anew shed tears for. Had these men any quarrel? Brav as the devil it, not the smallest! They lived far enough apart, were the entirest strangers; nay, in so wide a universe there was even unconsciously by commerce some mutual helpfulness between them. How then? Simpleton! their Governors had fallen out, and instead of shoting one another, had the cunning to make these poor blockheads shoot." Is not this, in a nutshell, the history of half the wars the world has seen? The Governors have quarreled, and the people have been made to believe the quarrel was their own; and is there not the strongest reason for supposing that as education spreads, as government becomes more truly representative of the people whom they govern, and as the people come to understand more, truly their quarrel of wars of this kind, at least, into which kings lead their subjects blindfolded, will no more be heard of?

WAITING FOR HIS GIRL.

"Young Man (to sexton, at church door)—Isn't the sermon nearly done?"

Sexton—About an hour yet. He is only on his "lastly."

Young Man—Will it take him an hour to get through his "lastly?"

Sexton—No; but there's the "One word more and I am done," and the "finally," and the "in conclusion" to come up yet. Don't get impatient, young man! Your girl won't spoil—Puck.

SOME people are like a boy's rocking-horse—full of motion but no progress.

EDUCATION AND INDUSTRY.

Does the First Diminish the Last?

(Science.)

Education of the modern kind does not diminish industry, and does not, except for a very short period, break the habit of assiduity at work. Nor does it diminish the readiness to do manual labor in those who can do it, though it does diminish the number who prefer idleness to manual labor as their mothers call them, who, if left uneducated, would have gone on in the groove of their forefathers, taking, by a species of natural selection, to the higher tasks. The remainder work as before, though probably not in dull, machine-like way. They spare themselves more, are more quick to avoid unnecessary toil, and, no doubt, as a large proportion are and must be selfish men, in numberless instances, they "scamp" their work in ways the unintelligent never think of. That scamping, together with the eagerness for more money produced by new wants, and a certain idiosyncrasy of impatience, combine to produce an unfavorable impression as to industry which is not justified, or rather is due to other causes than avarice in work. The English must wait a little for full information, the boys who have passed through school and being 30 yet, but they do not despair of seeing plenty of High Millers among their workmen—that is, men who are educated, yet have a definite love for and aptitude for exceedingly hard and monotonous manual toil. Miller set up stone walls for eight hours a day—a real backaching occupation—but he had learned more than most lads. It would be well if half time could be made general, as many are nearly convinced it would increase learning, by allowing school time to be longer, and would at least compensate any scheme for keeping up the habit of manual labor, which will be the lot of the great majority while the world goes round, and which is, in fact, the permanent gymnasium of the human race; but there is little fear, even if the present system continues. The changes which may come will not be produced by laziness, but by a longing for larger wages and the comfort they bring, which some industries, agricultural especially, in closely populated countries, may find it difficult to satisfy. I will be satisfied, however, in one way or another, for education opens wide the grand safety valve, the power of wandering over earth, in search of the opportunity to toil. For what we know, the human race may be destined some day to people other worlds, perhaps more to our sides and in less than fifteen minutes the camera was unpacked (and everything must be rainproof), two exposures made, and we were once in the saddle. Much more convenient than an express train! There was no one travels, a journey is an exploration.—W. T. Brigham, in Scribner's Magazine.

WHAT CAUSED THE GREAT CHICAGO FIRE.

The Chicago Herald says that it is positively known that the conflagration which destroyed Chicago in 1871 originated in the one-and-a-half-story barn of Patrick O'Leary, at the rear end on the east line of the lot numbered DeKoven street. The flames first burst from the roof of this barn, which had been stored with hay the day before. These flames were seen at the same time by two witnesses—William K. Lee, 175 feet distant southwest, at the corner of Jefferson and DeKoven streets, and by Mary O'Rourke, who stood at the northwest window of her house, a point 70 feet southwest of the burning barn. There were in the barn six cows, a calf, horses, and other animals, and birds of various kinds. The only inmate of the barn that did not perish was a calf. It would probably be possible to follow the history of this noted animal. The barn was on an alley, and the O'Learys lived in the rear of a cottage that fronted on DeKoven. The front was occupied by Patrick McLaughlin. Mrs. O'Leary, a large and powerfully built woman, was a milk business. She milked at 5 p. m., and was naturally in bed at 8:45 p. m., the time the fire broke out. The cows are probably the first people out of bed in a city. The McLaughlins that night celebrated the arrival of a relative from the old sod. Their last hour would naturally annoy the O'Learys. Some troublemaker told Mrs. O'Leary that her neighbors had gone to the barn for the purpose of getting milk for oyster soup. This Mrs. O'Leary never believed. A broken lamp was said to have been found in the barn. The celebrity that came to Mrs. O'Leary secured a nature which was bellicose at the best. The injustice of attributing to her a catastrophe in which she was a leading sufferer, hardened her heart against reporters. Time has lingered in her mind a fear that there might be something criminal in the charge. Thirteen years later her son William, as Peggy O'Leary, killed his wife and sister-in-law, and went to prison for it. This trouble turned the journalist who had made Mother O'Leary a visit barely escaped alive. She now lives in a shanty some three miles southwest of the City Limits. The O'Leary cottage was not burned. It was demolished in later years, and a substantial two-story brick house erected at the fatal No. 137. The Chicago Historical Society has put up a tablet on the front of this house. The exact origin of the great fire can never be known unless somebody other than any member of the O'Leary family revealed the secret. It is reasonably well established that the O'Learys were in bed.

FACTS ABOUT FINGERS.

While hands are the rosy palms, so beloved of our grandmothers, have gone out of fashion.

The American hand is smaller than the English hand, but the nails are not as handsome.

It is said that people with imagination are apt to have long, taper fingers and beautiful finger-nails.

The good-natured critic usually has a generous mouth, well-shaped nails, and their handwriting is somewhat upright.

The American nail suffers from the dryness of our climate, as a foreign picture painted on panel suffers from the same cause.

Diplomacy has a long, supple hand and a beautifully-kept finger-nail. The handwriting of a diplomatist looks like a snake crawling away.

An aptitude for criticism is shown among people who bite their nails. These people are cynical and seem unfortunate and bitter; they write a small, cramped, illegible hand.

The Chinese have finger-nails so long that they could write with them. The tenacity of the Chinese nail, which does not easily break, would indicate that they have more lies in their faces than we have.

The English nails are almost universally oval and shell like, and cut to a rounded, slightly tapering point, kept always scrupulously clean. The nail at the base is generally seen to show the onyx, a little white half-moon.

The onyx of the fingernails is carefully cultivated and polished by devotees of New Zealand, to show that they have no black blood in their veins. No matter how fair the complexion, the suitable sign of pure blood is wanting to the octoroon if the onyx is cloaked.

THE DRUMMER'S FIRST GAME.

A well-known Maine drummer was recently taken for the first time in his life. While seated in a country store he perceived a man tacking up a notice, and immediately accosted him with:

"Well, my boy, where's the game going to be?"

The little man in black turned around and was introduced to our drummer as "Rev. Mr. ——, the Methodist minister."—Fairfield Journal.

This is the portrait of a woman in a live of a bonnet, writes a New York correspondent of the Chicago Herald. No matter who she is, further than that she has distinguished herself by putting on her pretty head an exactly suitable and fashionable bonnet. It is a capote, trimmed with lace, plumes, and a ribbon strings come from the back and go under the chin. Big hats are so plenty in summer that a neat little bonnet is a joy to the eye. However, attention must be paid to the seasonable hats. Round hats for country use are high, with broad brims, and raised on the side or in the back. The brims are turned down in front. The latter are fastened back by means of ribbons taken across the hat. All kinds of ribbon are employed for this purpose, including Scotch plaids and stripes in faille and gauze. Some very elegant fancy straw bonnets for young girls are shown in colors, as light blue, cream, lilac, and old pink. A rustic hat that was a good deal of favor is twisted green Mexican grass, with a brown shade or two for relief thrown in. The brims are faced with plush, and have fastened a nosegay loosely on one side, with meadow daisies, corn flowers, summer asters, and a strawberry or two nodding as the wind blows.

Belles take more pains with their toilets than they used to. Nor more do they slouchily cover themselves with a linen duster when they journey by rail. Stylish enveloping cloaks are now made of pronounced plaid and figures, and sometimes a small cap is worn to match. Some of the newest dust cloaks, which are very stylish and desirable, and useful, are made of dove gray or beige mohair, cashmere or armure stuff, also of fawn-colored canvas, extremely fine in quality and of close Newmarket shape in the back, with semi-loose fronts buttoned to the waist, and tied with brown satin ribbon. In stylish traveling suits, English summer tweeds in fine shepherd's checks or stripes, made in severe tailor fashion, are very popular. Some of these suits are very fine, and pleasing to the wish vision in front entirely covered with the tweed.

In the province of thankfulness that should ascend from every pretty woman's lips this summer for the variety and quality and price of dress material, a special line ought to be reserved for China and India silks, but not for cheapness. If you take a bolt of that silk (it always comes that way), and give it a shake, or a blow, you will perceive a cloud of white dust rise from it. It is filled with thick powder, and that powder exposed to the slightest perspiration becomes resinous, gummy, sticky, unpleasant plaster on the skin. Pongee spots with water, and comes out of the wash darker in color, mottled and stiffish. But the lovely India silks, soft, thin, falling in graceful folds and washing well, cool and hard to tumble, are certainly the loveliest fabric vouchsafed us. A few years ago a lady's dress was always described as "standing alone" with its own richness. We used to buy moires that felt to hold them like morocco, and the dreadful grosz-grain that have held their own for many a hot summer have been unendurable to wear. Here, with the style calling for soft draperies, come these cool and beautiful foreign silks in good widths and at moderate prices. As the season advances the figured goods are not as desirable (as they certainly are not as pretty) as solid colors.

At Newport it is almost a uniform that the fashionable ladies wear. Navy blue India silk made up with white China silk in a multitude of pretty ways. On one piazza the other afternoon twenty-five suits of dark-blue India silk were to be seen at one time.

Summer toilets embody a vast deal of variety. Cotton, wool, silk, and linen and their mixtures are worn in such light and beautiful, soft and flimy textures that it seems hard to particularize one class above another, but probably the most dressy costumes of the time are made of lace, draped over black or colored silk. Black and white lace, yellow, brown, lilac, fuchsia, pale green, and old pink nets in square meshes or in point d'esprit dots are used over black or colored silk for dress. Wool goods is being universally worn at the seaside resorts, and every variety of material is used, from white flannel to fine white wool etamine, grenadine, and canvas.

Women of fashionable dissipation are the mass of the women who the spray that rises above Niagara is to the mighty body of water that pours its vast magnificence in ceaseless roar night and power, unbroken and unfretted, over the Horseshoe fall. The rainbow gleam in the front may catch the eye for a moment and delight the fancy when the sun is shining, but the grandeur, the virtue, the power and reality is below in the roar and rush, the steady onward leap and swing of the unimaginable wealth and weight of waters. Forty years ago few American women went out from their homes to earn their bread. The scanty necessaries demanded by the plain living then almost universal could be obtained by the unmarried daughters at their fathers' hearthstones. Now it is different; women fight for bread side by side with men, and yet how often it is that when a woman applies for work the first of all apologies for the absence of a man to support her. No one who receives a large number of applications for work can fail to notice how much time is consumed by the women applicants in telling the painful story of the loss of father, husband, or brother.—Philadelphia Press.

How Pretty Girls Are Made Ugly.

Three young girls of about 16, whose gowns show quite good taste, and whose faces tell of pleasant tempers and sincere souls, are in a corner together, alone. One is reading aloud. Her voice is sweet and unaffected. She knows most of the words she is trying to pronounce, and yet how often it is that when a woman applies for work the first of all apologies for the absence of a man to support her. No one who receives a large number of applications for work can fail to notice how much time is consumed by the women applicants in telling the painful story of the loss of father, husband, or brother.—Philadelphia Press.

He Knew All About It.

Lady Patient—I've got a terrible tired feeling, doctor.

Doctor—Put out your tongue.

Lady's Husband—Oh! it ain't her tongue that's tired, doctor.

Doctor (sternly)—Sir, your information is superfluous. I am a married man myself.—Boston Courier.

She Understood Men.

First Young Wife—What on earth are you doing at the mirror, Clara?

Second Young Wife—I'm practicing making wrinkles; I've almost forgotten how.

"Wrinkles? Of all things don't you know a man likes to have his wife look young?"

"Indeed I do; John is going with me to select a new bonnet this afternoon, and if he sets his mind on a cheap bonnet he will discover that it makes me look as old as his grandmother."—New York Herald.

Why She Wouldn't Marry Them.

She was an extremely pretty girl, even for a St. Paulite, and her name—well, society has "got it on the list." She was trying on the three-story-and-basement hats now in vogue and chatting with a friend who happened in the milliner's at the same time.

"Dear," said the friend, "I thought you were to be married this June."

"Well, I was, my dear, but, you see, Earl's so abominably short, and we look absurd together with all my best hats. So I just told him that I loved him as much as ever, but he really must wait till lower hats come in. I told him I was really very sorry, but there would be sure to be a reaction against the high hats by next spring—and, why, silly silly, I wouldn't marry him till they went out."—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Marrying for Money.

"Who can blame a girl if she does marry for money and position?" said a pretty woman to a poor young man. "You men sacrifice your inclination and comfort, your all, for your companions, frequently your honor, in the struggle for wealth. Are you ever censured for it as long as you are successful in any legal positively criminal? Yet when a woman takes her wares to the only market she can find, and barters them for the highest bidder, people sneer unpleasantly at her; and, if the marriage turns out disastrously, exclaim with positive delight: 'I feel no pity for her. She sold herself.' Women's training and surroundings prevent them from making a name or position for themselves outside of society, save in cases of exceptional ability and determination. A clerk cannot and refuse to serve an employer because he may be old, ugly, and ill-tempered. He gives his time for a stipulated sum. For the same reason cool-headed women marry.—Philadelphia News.

The American Society Woman.

In the new world maturity is reached much earlier than in the old. A girl of 14 captivates the hearts of men and is as fascinating to them as one of 24 here; and fascination there is a fine art, reserved by an consummate artist. At 17 she is a finished coquette. The New York lady of fashion, says the Lady's World, commands the sun much like the Parisienne, only instead of the newest dust cloaks, which are very stylish and desirable, and useful, are made of dove gray or beige mohair, cashmere or armure stuff, also of fawn-colored canvas, extremely fine in quality and of close Newmarket shape in the back, with semi-loose fronts buttoned to the waist, and tied with brown satin ribbon. In stylish traveling suits, English summer tweeds in fine shepherd's checks or stripes, made in severe tailor fashion, are very popular. Some of these suits are very fine, and pleasing to the wish vision in front entirely covered with the tweed.

In the province of thankfulness that should ascend from every pretty woman's lips this summer for the variety and quality and price of dress material, a special line ought to be reserved for China and India silks, but not for cheapness. If you take a bolt of that silk (it always comes that way), and

WASHING IN MEXICO.

Twice Do Not Exist in Houses and Every River Bank Becomes a Laundry.

In the greater part of Mexico such things as wash-tubs and boards, patent steam washers, or even clothes-lines and pins are practically unknown, and it will be a long time before any of these articles will be brought into general use by these people. The washing is all done by women along the margins of the rivers and creeks, which in this country, as well as in our own, says a writer in the Kansas City Star, so unceremoniously find their way to the cities and towns. There these women ("lavanderas") are to be found every day, Sunday not excepted, from dozens up to hundreds, according to the of the city. They assume the sitting or squatting posture so universal with the female laborers of the country, having in front of them and partly resting in the water a large, flat, smooth stone. Saturating a garment in the creek and applying a quantity of soap, it is then vigorously rubbed over the stone, which serves as a washboard, and is a very good substitute indeed. It is often the case that a fair-sized stream near a great city is so largely used for such work that it presents the appearance of a river of soap-suds. And yet this water is used by the people of the next town below for drinking and culinary purposes, and so far as the water is concerned they will probably find it none the worse for the good service rendered at various places near the source.

The garments, after being washed, are spread upon the rocks and gravel-beds, and the bright sun, which shines here almost daily for eight month in the year, dries them before one has scarcely had time to turn around. This custom of river washing is necessitated by the scarcity of water. There is scarcely any part of the country in which either wells or cisterns are to be found. All the drinking water is brought in pipes tapping the river a few miles above the city, and is conducted to fountains or basins conveniently located in different sections of the town. To and from these reservoirs during all hours of the day, but more especially in the morning and evening, a constant stream of water carriers go and come. Two men with a barrel swung upon a pole, an end of the pole resting upon a shoulder of each, bits of boys with two buckets balanced on a stick in Japanese fashion, women and girls with alters (round earthen jars) of all sizes on their heads or shoulders, keep up an endless procession to and from the fountains. So it will be apparent to every one that, with this state of affairs existing, it is more convenient to take the laundry to the river than to carry the water to the house, and this will serve to show why it will be difficult to introduce the use of tub, wash-board, and clothes-lines.

In many localities, however, which in the dry season become reduced to mere rivulets, are the only source of water supply, and are used for almost every conceivable purpose. In numerable little dikes, dams, and ditches are constructed by the scores of women who do washing for a living, and who each must have a supply of water for daily use. At one place a tanner may be seen scraping and washing green hides, at another a butcher scraping tripe. Just below a housewife will be cleaning the boiled corn for the family dinner, while at other points grooms are busily engaged in scouring horses, and a native washing his person in the stream, evidently pondering over the probability of his efforts being rewarded by the recovery of a shirt he remembers having put on in other days.

A few feet from the margin of the river an occasional hole is dug and the water which filters therein through the sand is used by hundreds of families for all domestic purposes. There is so much of this washing and scouring done in the river that during the low stage of water the entire stream becomes terribly foul and filthy, and the smells arising therefrom surpass, not only in number, but in variety and intensity, those which some one discovered in the streets of Cologne.

THE AGE OF THE RACES.

In boring a well on the farm of Mrs. Sarah Williams, some five miles south of Galena, J. C. Frazier, who has the farm rented, struck a piece of wood at a depth of 170 feet. The wood brought up by the auger was in an excellent state of preservation and was pronounced "all oak." The place is only fifty feet above the sea level, so that the wood is 120 feet below the ocean surface. If it was sunk there when this valley was a lake or an arm of the sea it was in pretty deep water. How long since this piece of wood was in a growing tree? The valley, of course, has grown, but without some convulsion of nature the growth has been slow, not, perhaps, over one foot per century. Then has it been 17,000 years since this oak tree grew? In the shales of the Infinite this is not long, but measured by the history of man it is indeed a long space.—Cobina (Cal.) Sun.

It is said that philosophers are wise men, but it would not do to conclude from this that all wise menare philosophers.

FUNERALS ON STREET CARS.

When the street car line was first opened in Mexico, an enterprising stockholder, Senor Gayoso, bought up all the hearses in the city. He then had funeral cars built for the tracks, and procured the sole right to prepare passengers and haul them to their last resting place. He is to-day one of the wealthiest men in Mexico. The first-class funeral cars for adults are built of fine black wood. A raised part is in the center of the car, on which the coffin is placed. A canopy, exquisitely finished, covers the entire car, the sides being artistically draped. From four to eight beautiful black horses, with long black plumes on their heads, haul this strange car.

The two drivers are dressed in fine black suits, gloves, and high silk hats bound with wide crepe bands. The coffin is placed on the rest prepared for it, and all around and over flowers are placed. Following this comes a train of cars with the friends. The windows are draped with white crepe and the doors with black. A funeral train will average twenty cars and more, if it is a person of wealth who has died, but in the hundreds who follow a body to the grave cannot be found one woman or child.

I have asked the reason why no women ever attend funerals in Mexico. It is against the rules of society. Mr. Gayoso says women are not allowed to go to funerals because they cry too much. However, a wife cannot go to her husband's funeral, nor can a mother follow her child to its grave.

There is a distinctivness in all the funeral cars. Those for children are white, drawn by white horses. Those for the poor are, like other things in this world for the poor, cheap and shabby. The poor Indian can have a funeral car and two passage tickets for 50 cents by applying to the police. He can even hire a plain, unpainted coffin to carry the dead to the grave. Once there, the body is wrapped in a serape and consigned to a grave which has been rented from two to five years. At the end of that time the grave is opened and the bleaching bones are cast into a vault kept for that purpose, where they lay bleaching in the hot southern sun, exposed to the gaze of the public.

Funerals cost from 50 cents to $2,000. One of the prettiest customs in Mexico is the universal respect which prevails in passing funeral. Every man from the millionaire to the poor half-clad peon, takes off his hat until the sad train has passed. Well-dressed women lower their heads and silently cross themselves, while the Indian women kneel to pray.—City of Mexico Letter.

BOLD PIZARRO'S BONES.

The, interior of this cathedral is divided lengthwise into seven spaces or aisles—those next either wall being railed off as chapels, about thirteen in all, wherein are the altars, the shrines, the pictures, and the statuary. Beyond the choir is the glittering chancel, with its jewels and pictures and burning candles, with its costly hangings of silken and velvet draperies, their folds fastened to the roof, 175 feet above, while their gaudy fringe brushes the white floor, and with the lectern, the seats for the priests, and the Bishop's throne. Midway between the chancel and the choir, set upon a massive column, about fifteen feet from the floor, and reached by a narrow stairway, is a richly-carved box, supported by a solid pillar of pure silver five inches in diameter.

Before the late war this cathedral was one of the richest in gold and silver decorations and ornaments in the world. Built in the sixteenth century—Pizarro's old chapel—it has been razed to the ground—it was enlarged, enriched, and adorned during the interpretation and before the fatal year of 1879, when Peru became involved in the disastrous conflict with Chili. It was literally a massive storehouse of precious metals and gems—a second Temple of the Sun, and a magnificent prize for the needy Chilians. Upon the occupation of Lima in 1881 it was the first place levied upon, being stripped entirely of its richest treasures, the silver plating covering the pulpit excepted, that object of cupidity being so firmly fixed as to defy all attempts at removal, and accordingly it was reluctantly suffered to remain. Another act of these marauders was to despoil the greatest portion of the famous National Library—the building is situated one square to the eastward of the cathedral—which contained many thousands of rare old volumes and manuscripts. This was a most distastefy proceeding, and is only paralleled by the destruction of the Alexandrine library by the fanatical followers of Mohammed many centuries ago.

In the catacombs beneath are the embalmed remains of the great Francisco Pizarro, transferred from the old cathedral in the year 1607. They lie on a moldy shelf beside the body of the good Viceroy Mendoza. His bones are fast crumbling to dust, and the few remaining pieces of skin which yet cling to them, dry and withered as they are, are fast disappearing under the inroads of those lunatics at large—relic-hunters.

"A TARIFF is a tax.—Allan G. Thurman.

It is a condition which confronts us—not a theory.—Grover Cleveland.

"UNNECESSARY taxation is unjust taxation."—President Cleveland's Letter of Acceptance.

"WE favor the entire repeal of the internal taxes on whiskey and tobacco rather than surrender of any part of our protective system."—Chicago platform.

"The platform is in entire harmony with my views."—Ben Harrison.

THE surplus revenue now remaining in the treasury not only furnishes conclusive proof of unjust taxation, but its existence constitutes a separate and independent menace to the prosperity of the people.

The vast accumulation of idle funds represented that much money, drawn from the circulating medium of the country which is needed in the channels of trade and business.—President Cleveland's Letter of Acceptance.

We are annually collecting at our custom houses and by means of our internal revenue system many millions in excess of all legitimate public needs. As a consequence there now remains in the national treasury a surplus of more than one hundred and thirty million dollars.

No better evidence could be furnished that the people are overtaxed.—Grover Cleveland's Letter of Acceptance.

THE Chicago Herald is publishing two columns each day concerning prominent men through the country who are flocking to the Cleveland standard. As the Herald says, "it looks as though Cleveland will be re-elected by about 500,000 votes, and have two or three states to spare."

THE manager of Harrison politics in Indiana said that he would have anyone arrested for perjury who would make affidavit that Harrison said "a dollar a day is enough for any laboring man." The Knights of Labor have produced a carpenter named John G. Schwartz who makes public affidavit to having heard Harrison use the words, and they dare the Harrison manager to arrest him. Mr. New has crawfished about as much as he can, and must soon shut up or else admit that the K. of L. hold the winning hand.—Menominee Democrat.

ALLEN G. THURMAN was tendered a big surprise party at his home last Saturday. Thirty-five clubs containing fully 5,000 men formed a procession shortly after 7 o'clock and marched through the principal streets with torches and illuminations finally drew up en masse in front of Judge Thurman's residence. Mr. Thurman knew nothing of the demonstration until he heard the music and drums of the approaching column. The weather was very cold but Mr. Thurman heavily clothed stood upon the stoop of his home and viewed the clubs as they formed in the street below.

In a recent interview with I. M. Weston, chairman of democratic state central committee, he said: The campaign in Michigan is looking well. The republicans started in with the false cry of free trade, and already the voters are fully aroused to the deception attempted. Our voters are well up on the revenue reform question. The splendid campaign made by ex-Congressman Geo. L. Yaple when he ran for governor in 1886 did much to educate Michigan on the tariff issue. Our taxpayers don't like the way the republicans have doubled state taxes in the last three years. They are keeping Gov. Luce very busy answering questions just now.

THE New York Sun is making a fight on Mr. Don M. Dickinson, because in a recent interview Mr. Dickinson spoke very plainly and vigorously, as well as intelligently, of the manner in which the western farmer had been robbed by the tariff, for the benefit of the eastern manufacturer and money lender. New England, said Mr. Dickinson, bought little or nothing from the western farmer, who was compelled to market most of his stuff to Europe; yet New England insisted that, by means of the tariff, the western farmer should be compelled to buy everything he needed in a market where he sold nothing. The result was that, work as hard as he pleased, the farmer found that all his profits were sopped up as with a sponge by the eastern manufacturer and capitalist. All the money of the country was accumulating in the east and all the mortgages in the west. The Sun says that this sort of talk will prove just as offensive in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania as in New England, and that it is dangerous to the democratic party, which needs the electoral votes of New York and New Jersey. The Detroit Evening News asks why this sort of talk gives offense in New England, New York, and New Jersey? "Is it not because it is the frozen truth? Has not the agricultural west been drained right straight along for the benefit of the east? How has New England, in natural resources the poorest portion of the whole country, built up her enormous artificial wealth, except by levying tribute under the forms of law upon the western farmer? Whence came the whole system of tariff protection except from New England statesmen, who are solid for protection every time? Whence came our bonding system? Whence the demonetization of silver? Whence came the whole scheme of taxation, financial management and currency for a quarter of a century back, by which every dollar beyond bare subsistence which the farmer could earn has been drawn off to swell the hoards of eastern bankers and manufacturers? New England and the east generally have played precisely the same game with the west which Old England attempted to play with the American colonies until the latter threw off her yoke in 1776. It is an old game, as old as human greed, as old as colonization. The Sun says these thing should not be maintained by democratic leaders lest they give offense in New York and New Jersey; but the Sun does not make the slightest attempt to prove them untrue. It shrieks "Treason! Treason!" as the friends of George III. did when Patrick Henry said similar things of the government of England under very similar circumstances, nor we have no doubt whatever our Michigan Patrick Henry will cry back, "If this be treason, make the most of it!" If the democratic party can succeed only by continuing to defend and maintain the industrial, commercial and financial thraldom in which the east has held the west, and which was established by the republican party, it is better that it should be defeated, and we believe that Mr. Dickinson would echo that sentiment. But it is not true that these boldly uttered truths will hurt the democracy even in New York and New Jersey. The common people of those states suffer nearly as much as the people of the west from ovr iniquitous system of taxation, and they can be made to understand it."

Explanations Wanted.

The free whisky organs have been invited several times to explain these things, says The Cleveland Plain Dealer but they don't respond:

Why republicans in 1872 favored putting salt and lumber on the free list.

Why they have changed their minds.

Why in 1884 the republicans favored reducing tariff taxes.

Why they have changed their minds.

Why republicans placed hides on the free list in 1872.

Why the tanning industry was not ruined thereby.

Why no pauper-made leather or shoes of Europe came over.

Why the leather industry prospered more than ever before.

Why more workmen were employed.

Why they got better wages.

Why, in short, the republican tariff theory didn't work.

Why the price of wool has steadily declined under a protective tariff.

Why the reduction of duty on wool in 1883 was followed by an advance in price instead of a decline.

Why the lowest point in the price of wool was reached under the highest tariff.

Why sheep in Ohio have decreased in number right along for seven years under a protective tariff.

Why the sheep in Ohio decreased over 200,000 in three years ending last year, 1881-2, when the highest wool tariff existed.

Why the price of wheat has declined right along under a protective tariff.

Why the price of corn has declined under a protective tariff.

Why wages have declined under a protective tariff.

Why strikes and large bitter conflicts between employes and employers have been common under a protective tariff.

Why the workingmen of this country have lost more by tenfold in strikes and lockouts caused by attempts to reduce their wages under a protective tariff than they could have got out of the tariff tax if they had received every cent of it.

Why the cost of living has increased under a protective tariff.

Why anarchy and socialism have developed under a protective tariff.

Why trusts have grown up under a protective tariff.

These are only a few of the many points that the people would like to have the advocates of high tariff blessedness explain. It may not be as easy as to hood about rebels and rave over the bloody shirt and cry out that Great Britain is upon us, but it would be vastly more sensible.

The Mill Hand's Tariff Experience.

Just the other day I met a representative of the truth of this fact. A workingman in a mill said to the manufacturer: "I don't believe you pay me enough. I have got a wife and children, and can hardly support them on the wages you are paying me only $1.25 a day. I think you ought to pay me $1.50 a day. The manufacturer replied: "I can get mylaborers from Germany, from France and from England, and I can get plenty of laborers at $1.25 a day, and if you don't like that pay you may stop work." "Well," said the workman, "if that is the case, I suppose I have got to take the $1.25 a day."

After his week's work was at an end and he had received his week's wages, he said to the manufacturer: "It is getting cold. What will you charge me for a pair of Iowa blankets, such as I have been working on?" "Five dollars!" said the workman. Why I can buy those blankets in England, France or Germany for $3 a pair, and I won't take your blankets. I will send over there and get a pair." "Oh, no, you can't do that," said the manufacturer. There is a tariff of $2 a pair, which added to the the $3 makes the price to you $5. That is for my protection." So the workman paid his $5 and took the blankets. And then he started off for home, thinking, poor fellow, how strange this tariff is.—Extract from speech of R. Q. Mills at Boston.

Free Whiskey and Dearer Clothing and Food.

The prohibition orators roundly denounce the high-tariff, free-whisky programme. Ex Gov. St. John in a recent speech at Fort Richmond, New York, is thus reported:

"The republican party deliberately propose to increase the war tariff so as to reduce the revenue by checking importation, to destroy all healthy competition, and foster giant monopolies; in other words, to increase and perpetuate the burden on the people's clothing and food, and if this monstrous act should not reduce it enough to take off the whisky tax. You little realize how much this tariff is costing you. The suit which I have on (gray Scotch goods) cost me $35 in Kansas. I have just come from Halifax in Nova Scotia, and while there I went into a tailor's shop and asked him what he would duplicate the suit for. He said $20, and before I left he offered to make it for $18. This showed that I paid an extra price of $17 for my suit in Kansas. This set me to inquiring. I thought I would buy a black platform suit. I had one that cost me $70 in Kansas, and the tailor made me one out of the best west of England cloth for $35."

A voice from the audience: "How about wages?"

"I asked the tailor how much he paid the man who cut and made my suit of clothes, and he answered $100 a month. I found the wages of the common laborer there $1.25 a day. They do not have free trade in Nova Scotia, but their tariff rate is away below ours."

Geo. W. Childs Endorses Cleveland's Administration.

"Cleveland's administration has been free from official or personal scandal; has been honest and clean. There has been no Star Route robberies; no naval jobberies; no war department corruptions; no profligate waste by United States marshals; no treasury exaltations or special loans; no corrupt operations in or through the land office. No American at home or abroad has had occasion to droop his eyes in shame because of any such things under Mr. Cleveland's administration. On the contrary, there has been a resolute effort to promote honest government to increase efficiency and to lessen expenses."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Conklings Friend Endorses Cleveland.

Hon. George C. Gorham, who was for years secretary of the republican senate and the warm personal friend of Grant and Conkling, has come out for Cleveland and Thurman. He says that the republican contest this year represents mainly Mr. Blaine and his monopolist friends, and that his vote will never be cast to "place the author of the Mulligan letters and the political assassin of Roscoe Conkling" at the head of the government again. Gorham says that Harrison is pledged if elected to make Blaine his secretary of state.

A Solid Fact.

The same ratio of democratic gains as that exhibited in Maine, will give Illinois, Minnesota and California for Cleveland and Thurman. New York Connecticut, New Jersey and Indiana are, of course, assured.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Our Plan for an Octagonal Barn, with Explicit Directions for Building the Same, from the Foundation Stone to the Cupola.

Directions for laying out and building the octagonal barn represented in Fig. 1, are given by Southern Cultivator, and among these the following are principal points: The foundation wall of stone or concrete may be either below ground for a cellar or partially above for a basement, or wholly above for a stable, an inclined way being built on two opposite sides to give access to the horn floor. Upon this foundation the sills are laid, the corners being made at an angle of 135 degs., instead of 90 degs., as in the square building. There are no gross beams necessary except upon the floor, these being eight bents in the building; all on the outside, the plates being mortised exactly as the sills are and the posts placed with regard to the necessary doors and windows and the strength necessary to support the roof and stiffen the building. As many braces as are thought needful may be used, these being placed all be on the lines of the walls and none of them cross bracing. The roof is an eight sided cone, strengthened with purlin plates, and may be open at the center for a cupola or ventilator. The joints of all the plates and the sills will be at an angle of 67½ degs. instead of 45 degs., as in a square building.

FIG. 2—PLAN OF BASEMENT.

The plan of the basement is shown at Fig. 2. A being passage for the cows and a driveway for removing the manure, b b are the stalls for the cows, fifty-two in number, having the feed trough towards the center, and all reached by an inner driveway. There are six stalls, and a room at each end of the stalls for bedding. At e is a place for storing plows, carriages, wagons or machines. A drive-way (F F) passes through the basement from east to west. As many windows as may be built in the walls above the sills of the barn are laid upon the wall, as already mentioned; the posts are 32 feet high, and the plates upon these support the rafters.

The plates are fastened together at the ends by being halved and the corners fastened together by iron dogs or bolts. At each corner is a brace of 8x8 timber, bolted to and through the plates by three-quarter inch bolts and strengthened by an iron plate on the inside, through which the bolts pass. The shoulders of the corner rafters rest upon these braces and plates. These rafters are of 6x12 timber. Purlin plates of 8x10 inch timber are bolted under the rafters and fastened together at the corners in the same manner as the plates. The intermediate rafters rest upon these purlins from its ridge may be used to strengthen the rafters and hold them together, if thought necessary.

Fig. 1 shows the elevation with a portion of the roof removed to show the manner of laying the rafters and bridging them. A crown rim is bolted to the rafters at the point of the roof—or rather the rafters, the rafters are bolted to the crown rim—which supports a cupola. The cupola is fifty feet from the floor of the barn, is 10 feet high (twenty feet feet, and the post being twenty-eight feet high. The floor of the barn is laid upon beams supported by brick piers or timber posts in the basement. A line of beams may be laid above the floor on either side, above which floors may be laid; the beams thus made may be used for granaries or storage of farm tools or machines, or other cumbrous property.

Care of Corn Fodder.

An easy way to take care of corn fodder, says The Prairie Farmer, is to shock it in the field and tie its bundles which are afterward stacked. Lay a piece of twine on the ground of a length to suit the size of the bundles you propose making; place an armfull of fodder on the twine and shock out the corn which may be thrown into a wagon. Repeat this operation until you have a bundle of the desired size, which tie firmly. The bundle may be from two to four shocks can be piled together until a convenient time comes for hauling, or until the first snow comes, when they may be hauled to the stack on sleds. In piling in the field lay one bale on the ground and put others crosswise. By using a pitchfork to handle the bales, one man can load with greater ease and rapidity than two in the old way, horse is stacking, the stacker takes two bales in his hand and sets them up perpendicularly, building on each side of this row until the desired size is obtained. Now lay bales lengthwise on the top of the high rows to raise the shedding bales to a half pitch, and if necessary the stack can be covered with long grass hay to shed snow and rain. By this method the fodder is kept straight, dry and convenient to feed.

Good Points of Short Horns.

A noted English breeder in enumerating what he considered the good points of short horn cattle stated that among other things the eye of the animal always influenced his choice to a great extent. A quiet, good natured eye was that of the animal likely to suit his purpose, but the keen eye, in constant motion, he avoided, because it indicated an irritable, uneasy temperament, and an animal of such a temperament would not readily fatten.

DISEASES OF THE GRAPE VINE.

How to Treat Downy Mildew and Black Rot.

Bulletin No. 5, from the botanical division of the department of agriculture, consists largely of reports from special and volunteer agents of experiments made over a wide area of territory, in 1887, with sulphate of copper in solution, or when combined with lime and other substances, as a remedy for the downy mildew and black rot of the grape vine. Six different formulas were employed. The Bordeaux mixture, blue water or cat teleste, two different solutions of sulphate of copper, sulphatine and David's powder.

The Bordeaux mixture is made by dissolving in a wooden vessel 8 pounds of sulphate of copper in 15 gallons of hot water, and in another vessel 16 pounds of lime in 5 gallons of water, and mix when cold, to form a spray solution. Blue water, or cat teleste, is prepared by dissolving 1 pound of sulphate of copper in 4 gallons of hot water. When dissolved and cold add 1 pint of liquid commercial ammonia. Dilute to 22 gallons and proceed as with Bordeaux mixture. The two simple solutions are respectively 1 and 2 pounds of the sulphate to 22 gallons of water.

Sulphatine and David's powder are dry and applied with a bellows. Of the experiments that have been made, the chief of the section of vegetable pathology says the results can in no way be deemed conclusive, as diverse results have been obtained by parties who have apparently pursued the same line of experiment, but what has been accomplished is decidedly encouraging, and we may reasonably hope for better and more decisive results the coming season.

Lengthy reports were received from special agents at Charlottesville, Va., Vineland, N. J., Denison, Tex., and Oneaho, Mo., further with the volunteer reports from a great many persons in every grape growing state. At Charlottesville it is stated that vines that were left untreated clearly showed the injurious effects of any influence that might tend to check the ravages of mildew in those localities that are known to be subject to it. In respect to black rot a small advantage was found in the treated vines. From Vineland the statement is made that it was the wettest season ever known in southern New Jersey, and the conclusions drawn from the experiments that were made are that the copper sulphate may profitably be relied on as a preventive of grape mildew, and the Bordeaux mixture is thought to be the preferable one. Vines treated for black rot, rotted equally with those not so treated. Denison, Tex., reports that there seems to be positive evidence of preventive effects in the use of the different preparations of sulphate of copper, especially in early application with the Bordeaux mixture, when it reaches every part of the surface of the fruit. The most certain escape from black rot consists in planting varieties that are known to resist it, such as Perkins, Ives, Delaware, Norton, etc.

From the hundreds of reports from other different states it is made to appear that generally the sulphate of copper is beneficial for mildew, though not invariably so, and the Bordeaux mixture and ammoniacal solutions are the best for blackrot. For black rot none were satisfactory, and the remedies that have been named are the best we know of at present for the prevention of the grape, further experiments will be necessary to test their full value.

Device for Packing Apples.

A correspondent of The Prairie Farmer, who has had experience in gathering and packing apples, describes as follows a device, of which the cut is here reproduced, and gives some practicable instructions in the matter.

Gather the apples as soon as they are ripe, which is as soon as you can pull them easily from the twig. Sort them in picking, leaving the small and imperfect ones on the ground. I would like to impress it upon the minds of all fruit growers that it does not pay to put small or imperfect apples in the barrels. Small apples fill the spaces between large ones; they do not come out the way, and lower the price of the product. Put all sound and perfect fruit in bushel boxes, and take them to some central point to pack in barrels.

APPLE PACKING DEVICE.

Make a table, say 6 feet long, 2½ to 3 feet wide with sides five feet high. Have the legs long enough so that a barrel will go under the table. The other end should be four inches higher, so the apples will have a tendency to roll toward the end where the barrel is. Empty the fruit from the boxes into this table, set the head of the barrel with smooth apples. Now by holding one hand half way up to catch the apples, you can let them drop in from the table. The advantage of a table is that you can use any dexterous fruit, and, by turning them half over as they go into the barrel, you see all sides of them. Again, your hands being free, it enables you to sort them much better than from baskets, and more, it saves handling. Every time fruit is handled you lose 10 per cent. A man with a true eye and quick hands will fill barrels as fast as another can head them.

Things Worth Knowing.

The current and the gooseberry thrive best in partial shade.

As soon as the stem will part readily from the tree, pears should be gathered.

A Malino fruit grower uses manure liberally to plum trees on the first indication of black knob.

Remember that the strawberry beds require attention now.

Young poultry should now be protected from sudden and heavy showers.

Give to poultry a good grass run if possible.

Do not forget that the present is an admirable season for gathering dry earth and putting it under cover in convenient proximity to the hen houses, for future use as a dust bath and as an absorbent.

Feed plenty of charcoal mixed with ashes as pail to your swine.

The Clydesdale breed of horses originated in the valley of Clyde, in the vicinity of Glasgow, Scotland.

An exchange recommends sheep for feeding orchards rather than swine. They leave no safe cover for insects to breed and will keep the orchards healthy and the trees manured.

THE EDUCATION OF THE COLT

The True Theory of Training, Which Is, However, Seldom Practiced.

Following are some practical suggestions on the initial steps in training young horses, by Rural Canadian, that embody the true theory, as all horsemen will admit. It is, however, an unfortunate fact that not one man in ten carries out this practice. So well does it work that, in an incredibly short time, the colt becomes so gentle and teachable, the impatient trainer considers him sufficiently broken, and lessons to harness and work the animal, when, in point of fact, he has only arrived at the a, b, c of his education. The result of such undue haste is obvious, the colt is never really broken. That it pays in the long run to follow the advice here given the writer firmly believes:

Begin the education of a colt by handling, first on one side and then on the other. Put him about in different directions, forward, backward, to the left and right, and get him to yield to the bit in each of these directions. This should be done both in the stable and yard, and in using the reins for this purpose the trainer should exercise a steady, firm pressure on the bit until the colt yields, when the pressure should be removed at once, in order for him to understand that he has obeyed.

When the colt's head can be handled in every conceivable direction, and the muscles of his neck are supple and controlled, then handle the forward feet, then the body, and finish with the hind feet and tail. When handling the colt's feet teach him not only to allow you to pick them up and rub and rap on them with a hammer, but to hold them up until you get ready to let them go. Take the tail in your hand carefully, and raise it and up over his back, repeating this until he makes no objection. Take a pole about the size of a sled stake, pole him all over the body, and pry in between his legs until he shows no fear of it. Teach him to stand and allow a harness to be tossed on to and all about him. Handle unbeliefs, robes, paper, etc., about his head and body until he is utterly indifferent to them all. Lead and back him into and over an old pair of shafts repeatedly, and when he is standing in them raise them around each his legs with them, and finally bring the crossbar against his hamstrings, gently at first and then more forcibly, until he cares nothing for it. All these things should be done to the colt before he is harnessed at all.

A colt should be put through a series of reining lessons before he is hitched to a vehicle. While reining him the whip ought to be used, not only to get motion to handle on, but with a view to educating him to increase his speed when it is applied and getting him under control of it, for no horse is safe to drive unless he will "go to the front" when tapped with the whip.

In striking a horse with a whip, always go so forward of the loins. During his reining lessons the colt should be taught to stand still at the single word "whoa." He should also be taught to back.

When first hitched to the cart colt should be taken in a large yard and started about carefully, and when he can be driven and backed all about such a place it is time enough for a trainer to trust himself in the road, where there is more danger of a mishap and where control could not be so readily obtained if one should occur. In order to "wayward" a colt quickly and make him a nice reiner, he should be reined about from one side to the other, driven through shallow ditches, up alongside the fences, and out again into the road, turned around frequently, to the right as often as to the left, and taught to pass teams either to the right or left when meeting or overtaking them.

One Experience with Ensilage.

Professor A. J. Cooke says: I built a silo, and it has disappointed me only in being too small. I raised no more acres nor were my crops any better last year than previously. Yet, with five acres of my corn crop in ensilage, I was able to winter more stock than ever before, and my stock never did so well. For three successive years I had to buy feed to come through the winter; last winter I had some to spare, though the season was so severe and long continued that several neighbors, some of whom never before had a like experience, paid out considerable sum for feed.

A New Grape of Great Excellence.

In our illustration is shown a new variety of grape, which, combined with its high authority as Vick, is "of remarkable merit and will take a place above any white variety now known." It is said to be a cross of Concord with Iona. It originated with Jacob Moore, who produced the Brighton.

MOORE'S DIAMOND GRAPE.

The bunches are large, compact, shouldered, and sometimes double shouldered, very handsome. Berries large, white with a whitish bloom; skin thin, but tough; pulp very tender, with no foxiness, flesh melting; juicy and sweet to the center; vine a strong grower and abundant bearer.

Facts Worthy of Note.

The good home garden proves its own value

Keep tools in good order and save labor and time.

As much as possible protect animals from flies and mosquitoes.

Don't let the cows be hurried home from pasture.

Reports from the use of copperas solution on grapevines have been very favorable. Spraying with the solution usually mitigated the bad effects on the crop, though the disease was not entirely prevented.

New Jersey fruit growers in the northern part of the state, by reason of destructive insects that have wrought great havoc this season on small fruits, have appealed to the public to protect field mice, moles and insectivorous birds, the English sparrow excepted.

Five Reasons Why:

"OUR FAMILY PHYSICIAN" is the is the best medical work for home use ever printed:

First. It is different from all similar books ever published, and the differences are such as to make it more valuable in the family than any or all of them.

Second. It teaches those who have it how to tell what the matter is when a person gets sick.

[We will show you how it does this if you will call and see us.]

No other book published does this.

Third. In all cases of a dangerous disease, it advises to send for a physician at once; but it enables those who use it to know when to send, and when not to send for a doctor, and so saves people money and may save life.

No other book published does this.

Fourth. It gives the practice of all the schools of medicine—Allopathic, Homeopathic, and Electric for all diseases treated in the book.

No other book published does this.

Fifth. Its chapters on "Diseases of women and children" are pronounced the purest, most wholesome and practical ever written for the use of wives and mothers.

"OUR FIRST GRAY HAIR."

As the first lily pallening drops that fall
With a splash on the listless pane
Make as silver and start as they warn us all
Of a storm, or of coming rain,
So it is with life, when we are growing old,
And age stealth unawares,
We shiver and start if the truth were told,
At the sight of our first gray hair.

We mock not the light of our youthful house,
Like the first streaks of the dawn doth bring;
We hail not the birth of our summer flowers
As we do the first snowdrops of spring;
On the bleak winter wind we look not with grief,
Though it howl through the branches bare,
But we sigh when we witness the brown alone
Lead
And behold nature's first gray hair.

Gray hairs may come when the beaming eye
Has none of its brightness lost,
When with buoyant heart we would fain deny
Youth's Rubicon has been crossed;
Yet the lip-rouge look looks young and green,
Though a sapless trunk may be there,
And caught of decay on our cheeks may be seen
When we witness our first gray hair.

Come early, come late, like a knock at the gate,
Is that first sad visitor thrice?
And it joins with its silence the years that await
With the years forever fled;
It silently tells us we're journeying on—
It silently questions—Where?
O! a faithful milestone, were the truth but known,
Is seen in our first gray hair.

HETTIE WHEELER'S SCRAP BOOK.

BY JONAS JUTTON.

Never were two young people more devoted to each other than were Harry Somers and Hettie Wheeler. You might find in fiction characters whose hearts throbbed with a truer, nobler love for each other, but in real life never. They were as essential to each other's happiness as were the soft mellow rays of a fine golden sun, or the warm gentle showers to the rich purple violets and blue-bells which grew in rich profusion on the banks of the clear, babbling brook along which Harry and Hettie loved to stroll together in beautiful, balmy springtime. Hettie was the only child of her widowed mother, and Harry knew that when he married duty would require him to support Mrs. Wheeler as well as Hettie. Therefore prudence warned him not to attempt matrimony until he was sure that his income was sufficient to support them. He was a turner in a large furniture factory, and he knew he could not support them with his slender salary of $10 a week. As Harry was ever on the alert to advance his employer's interest, was prompt in the discharge of his duties, and polite and courteous to every one, the proprietor soon discovered his worth and assured him that he would be promoted to the position of foreman of the turner's room when the present foreman's contract expired, which was only ten months off. That was the time to which Hettie and Harry looked forward with so much pleasure, for as foreman of the turner's room, with a salary of $20 a week, the brightest dreams of their lives would be realized and their long-delayed marriage would be consummated. They talked of their future, thought of it, dreamed of it. Ten months seemed an age to them, but they were happy in the thought that the time was no longer. The day on which Harry received the pleasing information that he would be promoted to the foremanship of the turner's room, Mrs. Wheeler received a letter from her cousin, Mr. Frank Newton, of New York, stating that the following week he would be down in that part of the country to look after some land he had purchased, and that before returning to New York he would make them a visit. Hettie and her mother were in a flutter of excitement, for Mr. Newton, the wealthy proprietor of a popular New York literary paper, was almost a stranger to them. Hettie had never seen him, and Mrs. Wheeler had not seen him since they were children together. Mr. Newton, a fine-looking, portly gentleman of 40, handsomely attired, and with a magnificent diamond pin blazing on the immaculate shirt front, at last arrived. Mrs. Wheeler and Hettie heartily welcomed him to their humble home, which was as bright and cheerful as soap and water, four industrious hands, and two happy, smiling faces could make it. On the second evening after Mr. Newton's arrival, Hettie, whose services were required in the kitchen with her mother, excused herself to her cousin, and, handling him her scrap-book, remarked that he might find something in it that would interest him while she and her mother were out. After they had eaten supper and were again seated around the blazing fire which burned and crackled in the spacious rain-grate, Mr. Newton again picked up Hettie's scrap-book and carefully turned its leaves. After turning fifteen or twenty pages he stopped with said, "Cousin Hettie, while you and Cousin Kate were preparing supper I read three two little stories which interested me very much. I see they were written for your village paper. Their author certainly possesses rare literary talent. Do you know who wrote these pieces, Cousin Hettie?"

Hettie blushed and was on the point of stammering out a reply, when her mother said:

"I will tell you the name of the author, Cousin Frank; it is Harry Somers. He is a young man, a turner in the furniture factory here. He is an exceptionally nice young man, and is Hettie's most devoted admirer. They will be married as soon as Harry receives the position of foreman, which will not last fall. I am highly pleased with Hettie's choice, for Harry Somers is one of the nicest young men I ever knew."

"Ah, ha! that's the way the wind is blowing, is it, Cousin Hettie?" said Mr. Newton, with a merry twinkle in his eye. "But why are you waiting until he is foreman before marrying?" he continued.

"His wages are not sufficient at present to support us," candidly replied Hettie. "He only receives $10 a week now, but as foreman he will receive $20 a week."

"I would like very much to see the young man," continued matter-of-fact Mr. Newton, "and if it is not too far to his house, and you will accompany me, we will walk over and have a short talk with him."

"There will be no necessity for that," blushingly replied Hettie; "for this is Harry's night to call; and if he is well he will surely be here."

"I am glad to hear that, for I had rather see him here. But I had forgotten that, if I intruded, I will spoil your tete-a-tete," said Mr. Newton, with a sly glance at Mrs. Wheeler.

"Oh, I don't care for that, Cousin Frank. I can see Harry most any time, while you may never see him again."

She had scarcely ceased speaking when some one knocked on the door.

"Walk in," said Hettie, as she opened it, and a handsome young man of 25 entered. "Mr. Somers, this is my cousin, Mr. Newton, of New York, who is visiting us." Mr. Newton cordially grasped Harry by the hand and appeared delighted to see him. After conversing for sometime upon various subjects, Mr. Newton said, "Mr. Somers, by reading Cousin Hettie's scrap-book, and with Cousin Kate's information, I discovered you are an author! Have you cultivated your talent much?"

"Only for my own amusement," modestly replied Harry. "I have dozens of stories at home that I wrote at odd times merely because I had no other way of passing the time."

"No one who does not possess considerable literary talent would care to pass away the time by such laborious amusement as story writing. Excuse me for being so inquisitive. You have a fair education have you not, Mr. Somers?"

"Only a common-school education, sir. I attended school until I was 10, when my father died and I had to leave school and go to work to earn a living for my widowed mother who died two years ago. Father's greatest wish was to give me a collegiate education, and had he lived I would have attended school one or two more years."

"I am very much interested in you, Mr. Somers. Cousin Kate has told me how affairs are between you and cousin Hettie, and if for no other reason I would be interested in you for Cousin Hettie's sake. You think that you are not financially able to marry until you are earning a salary of $20 a week. I leave in the morning for home, and if you will write me a short story equal in literary merit to either of those in cousin Hettie's scrap-book, and forward it to me any time next week I will pay you $25 for it, and will pay you the same each week for a good short story. Here is my card by which you can see where to direct your letters."

"I know not how to thank you for your kindly interest, Mr. Newton," said Harry, "but I assure you there is no one who would appreciate it more than I do. I am afraid that I will disappoint you; I hope not, though, for I had rather earn my living by writing than by any other means."

"You will succeed, Mr. Somers, you will succeed; have no fear of that, for your soul is in your work. I must admire for you though. I do not wish you and Hettie to wait ten months before marrying, but I would like for you to wait at least four or five months, for by that time you will have established some literary fame; not much to be sure, but a foothold at least. If you were to marry now you could not give your time to your literary labors as you should on the start. I have not been as affectionate and as attentive to Cousin Kate as I should have been, even for a second cousin, and I intend to make amends in the future by running down here once a week and seeing how you all are getting along; and while here I will be happy to render you any assistance I can."

Harry again heartily thanked Mr. Newton for his kindness. Pretty little blue-eyed, fair-haired Hettie said not a word, but the tear of joy that silently fell on her cheek told plainer than words that her heart was overflowing with gratitude.

The following week Harry received the paper containing the story, and he also received a letter containing check for $25. He was the happiest man in the world. He had never thought of being known beyond the confines of his native county; but now, as contributor of one of the leading New York literary papers, he saw in the future his articles copied extensively, and himself honored and respected as a great literary genius. True to his promise, Mr. Newton came regularly Saturday evening and remained until Monday morning. One Sunday evening, two months after his first visit to Mrs. Wheeler, as he, Hettie, and her mother were seated around the fire in the sitting-room, he said:

"Cousin Hettie, how would you like to strengthen our relationship?"

"Splendidly, Cousin Frank! But how can that be done?"

"Well, you see, Cousin Hettie, while you and Harry have been billing and cooing, Cousin Kate and I have not been altogether idle. I love her devotedly, and she assures me that my affections are reciprocated, and she has promised to be my wife. How would you like me for a father, Hettie?"

"Better than any man in the world, Cousin Frank. We have become intimate you and mamma and to wish you much happiness," she said, with a pretty little laugh. "I must confess, though, that you have taken me completely by surprise," she continued. "I never thought that your weekly visits were prompted by anything more than cousinly affection."

"You and Harry could have married long ago," said Mr. Newton, "but I requested Harry to wait a few months, because I thought that I might gain Cousin Kate's affections and we would have a double wedding."

"So we can," cried Hettie, clapping her hands with delight. "I had not thought of that."

Preparations were made for the wedding, and two months later the merry bells chimed out the joyous news of the double wedding, which was the most important affair in social circles that had ever taken place in the village. Harry Somers is to-day one of the most popular literary writers, and he blesses the day on which golden-haired Hettie placed his first picture in her scrap-book.—Chicago Ledger.

THE SHIP DIARY.

"If I had a dollar for every diary I have begun with energy and ended with the third leaf," said one belle, "I could go shopping for a week. Why, here are some picked up on my last summer trip." This is a bride's diary:

"June 1—How cold and unfeeling language seems when I try to tell in this little book the wealth of bliss that floods my soul! Alone on the ocean—the boundless ocean—with Willie! I have taken out all the scent bottles, and my lovely toilet set, put up a few vases on the lodges, and made our precious Eden of a stateroom a perfect bower. Willie calls me to come and see the lightship. Dear little diary, I will confide to you my inmost heart, and return to you with fresh confidence very soon. June 2—Oh, dear! I have been on my knees an hour picking up the pieces of my beautiful toilet set. Everything got broken and made a beastly mess. Willie was far from kind, and called me a fool. June 3—I'm wretchedly ill, and Willie stops in the smoking-room. Told me I was a perfect fright. He had no idea I depended so much on dress. June 4—Oh! that I had never left my home! Everything goes wrong. Hettie, and if for no other reason I would be interested in you for Cousin Hettie's sake. You think that you are not financially able to marry until you are earning a salary of $20 a week. I leave in the morning for home, and if you will write me a short story equal in literary merit to either of those in cousin Hettie's scrap-book, and forward it to me any time next week I will pay you $25 for it, and will pay you the same each week for a good short story. Here is my card by which you can see where to direct your letters."

"I know not how to thank you for your kindly interest, Mr. Newton," said Harry, "but I assure you there is no one who would appreciate it more than I do. I am afraid that I will disappoint you; I hope not, though, for I had rather earn my living by writing than by any other means."

"You will succeed, Mr. Somers, you will succeed; have no fear of that, for your soul is in your work. I must admire for you though. I do not wish you and Hettie to wait ten months before marrying, but I would like for you to wait at least four or five months, for by that time you will have established some literary fame; not much to be sure, but a foothold at least. If you were to marry now you could not give your time to your literary labors as you should on the start. I have not been as affectionate and as attentive to Cousin Kate as I should have been, even for a second cousin, and I intend to make amends in the future by running down here once a week and seeing how you all are getting along; and while here I will be happy to render you any assistance I can."

Harry again heartily thanked Mr. Newton for his kindness. Pretty little blue-eyed, fair-haired Hettie said not a word, but the tear of joy that silently fell on her cheek told plainer than words that her heart was overflowing with gratitude.

The following week Harry received the paper containing the story, and he also received a letter containing check for $25. He was the happiest man in the world. He had never thought of being known beyond the confines of his native county; but now, as contributor of one of the leading New York literary papers, he saw in the future his articles copied extensively, and himself honored and respected as a great literary genius. True to his promise, Mr. Newton came regularly Saturday evening and remained until Monday morning. One Sunday evening, two months after his first visit to Mrs. Wheeler, as he, Hettie, and her mother were seated around the fire in the sitting-room, he said:

"Cousin Hettie, how would you like to strengthen our relationship?"

WON BY PRAYER.

How Dr. Lyman Beecher Secured His Last Wife.

"Saints, sinners, and the Beecher family," has been printed as the remark of the late venerable Dr. Todd, of Pittsfield, Mass. Possibly the following anecdote of the father, which I had from his eldest son, the Rev. William H. Beecher, may illustrate the peculiarities of his family. The old gentleman had lost his second or third wife and was resolved to marry again. Since at a family gathering in Cincinnati he said: "My children, hitherto I have married altogether to suit myself, but now I intend to marry again, and am willing to marry to suit you if you can think of any suitable and proper person who will have me." The children put their heads together and concluded that a certain Mrs. Jackson, who kept a large boarding-house in Boston, and was a member of Edward's church, would make him a capital wife, and it was agreed that the Rev. Edward to negotiate with Mrs. Jackson. After waiting a week or so the old gentleman became impatient and started for Boston, driving to Mrs. Jackson's house, calling for her, and unfolded at once the object of his mission. The good lady was thunderstruck, protested that she had no idea of marrying, and couldn't think of such a thing; it was impossible. To all of which the old doctor replied that he was equally surprised. The arrangements had been made in Cincinnati for a wedding to prepare the way, and he had made his arrangements to preach in Andover and Andoverset and to attend the May anniversaries, and expected, of course, to take her with him as his wife. At this point the good lady expressed herself as shocked, that Edward had never spoken to her on the subject, nor would it have made any difference if he had, for as for marrying again she could not and would not—not even the venerable and celebrated Dr. Lyman Beecher. After a moment's pause the doctor said: "My dear Mrs. Jackson, I am sorry you have so much feeling about it, but I will say with you a day or two and we will talk the matter up," to which the lady responded that her house was full; she had no suitable room for him, and could not entertain him. "O, never mind, then," said the doctor, "I will go around to Edward's and come and take tea with you." And sure enough at tea-time the doctor was there and sat next to Mrs. Jackson at the table. It was one of those large boarding-houses on Beacon street at which the lady of the house presides as at least an honor, and to the boarders which the boarders kept coming and going for two or three hours. Of course the old doctor became impatient and kept winding his watch, and saying "I want to see you alone!" "I must see you alone!" "Can't you see me alone?" at length Mrs. Jackson left the table with him and they went to a room by themselves. What then occurred, God only knows, but the family story is that the good lady protested, expressed her amazement, and even said: "You must be crazy; the subject too serious and solemn to be thought of without prayers to God."

"Have you not prayed about it?" said the doctor.

"Prayed about it! No," said Mrs. Jackson; "have not thought of such a thing."

"Let us pray," was the solemn response of Beecher, and they knelt down and prayed. Of course the old doctor was argued with; what a good wife Mrs. Jackson would make him; what a blessing it would be to her to have such a husband; she could do in the holy cause; what a disappointment if she did not marry Beecher, and Beecher if she did not; their moral and aesthetic emotions are more quickly touched, the play of their sensibilities is more rapid than those of other people. Often, it must be confessed, this quality is carried to excess, and the character becomes morbid and over-sensitive. This fact undoubtedly explains much of the popular feeling towards red-headed people. They are touchy and irritable, and it is often hard to comprehend their actions. For they are of the race of the poets and artists, and are, as I have shown, above aristocrats by birth—nature's aristocrats.—Chicago Journal.

A CRUEL RUSE.

Again is the cry being raised against the cruelty of the rule, which some stores are said to still insist on, which consists in asking a customer to remain standing for the entire day, except for the brief period allowed for luncheon. I feel of cases to evince the truth of this statement could easily be brought together. It will suffice to mention a few selected at random:

Shakespeare—The ancient bust over Shakespeare's grave at Stratford is painted with head eyes and auburn hair and beard. This bust has long been considered the most authentic likeness of the poet.

Milton is described by Prof. Masson as having "light auburn hair."

Schiller was "pale with auburn hair."

George Eliot had "rich auburn hair."

Of Keats it is said, "His eyes were large and blue, his hair auburn."

Heine had "long auburn hair and was not of Jewish aspect."

Carlyle had "shaggy, reddish hair."

Dr. Johnson's hair was "scarcely."

Cervantes had "aquiline features and chestnut hair."

Alfieri was "tall, thin, pallid, with red hair," and Lord Byron and Rossetti himself was "auburn-tinted."

Mr. James Russell Lowell's hair and beard when younger days were "tinted with auburn."

The poet Swinburne has auburn hair.

Two American Presidents, Thomas Jefferson and President Tyler, had auburn hair.

People with auburn hair, it is seen, talk with a distinguished company. Moreover, it is hardly to be esteemed a mere accident that auburn hair and poetic genius consort so often together. The explanation of it I conceive to be this: The temperament of red hair and the marks that go with it are almost always the sign of the possession of more than the average stock of vitality. The auburn-haired man is, as a rule, not usually of stronger physique than his neighbor, but his vitality is more intense, it is more available, it is not in mere friction and in overcoming resistance, so to say; less is wasted in the mere mechanism of the organs of the body. The sensibilities of auburn-haired people, it is frequently observed, are keener and more delicate; their moral and aesthetic emotions are more quickly touched, the play of their sensibilities is more rapid than those of other people. Often, it must be confessed, this quality is carried to excess, and the character becomes morbid and over-sensitive. A FARMER recently drove in a Dalton town, and on being questioned said that he had not "seen a party of railroad surveyors" working near by that day. This so enraged the people that they formed a vigilance committee on the spot and chased the poor man out of the country thirteen miles. And the editor of the local paper fired a bitter four times with a shotgun, and the worst of it was that the correspondent of the St. Paul and Minneapolis pioneer telegraphed that this very man had been in Dalton and reported seeing three different parties of railroad surveyors operating in the vicinity of his home."—Dalton Citizen.

OUR CHILDREN'S CONFIDENCE.

Few mothers really think what a grave error they are committing in telling the best secrets of their little ones. The time may come, all too soon, when the children who are so repelled will fail to have confidence in mamma when she would give all she holds dear in the world to gain it. Children must have somebody to talk to and confide in, and if mother does not have time to listen to them, a boy more than natural that they seek such a confidant elsewhere? And who knows what harmful counsel and advice that person may give you by-and-by? You may say, perhaps, that your boy or girl never cared to confide in you; they always preferred outside friends. If so, whose fault is it? A mother is her child's natural confidant, just as much as she is her child's natural protector. And if her child turns from her to seek counsel from others, then in nine cases out of ten the mother must have woefully failed in her duty.

In their baby days mamma is always ready with her sympathy when they come crying to her with their little troubles. If she is always ready to point out the right way to the wee lad, and to lend a helping hand to the wee lassie, when falling anything of the sort, and never-tiring supervision held over them, and the want of more charming surroundings.

Sometimes the Emperor and the Empress have the castle and its region, and make excursions to the nearest towns, and then the castle is left to the care of a few servants, who occupy all large apartments, and are considered safer and more trustworthy than the rest

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO FARMERS AND GARDENERS.

An Illustrated Description of the Polled Angus Cattle—Shown That in Immunity in Popularity in the United States and Canada.

The polled cattle are less well known to American dairymen than most other breeds of merit. These hornless cattle have, however, of late come into considerable prominence owing in part to their good points, and in part to the present crase existing in some sections for dishorning cattle. While there are at present no nervous advocates for dishorning the majority of breeders prefer not to run the risks of the operation, and many are deterred because they believe dishorning to be cruelty to animals.

POLLED ANGUS BULL.

The origin of the polled breeds of cattle is not definitely known. According to the Aberdeen Angus Herd Book, however, there appears to be evidence that the breed of the present day is a lineal descendant from the ancient polled cattle of the northwest of Scotland, known at the beginning of the present century in their respective districts as the Angus Doddies and the Buchan Humlies. The first account of the importation of a breeding herd of Aberdeen Angus cattle, according to Prairie Farmer, is that of Professor Brown of the Ontario, Canada, experiment farm, made in 1876 and consisting of two cows and a bull. These polled cattle are, at the present date, predominantly known in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, in Minnesota, Nebraska and Illinois. Importations have also been made in Maine, Ohio, New Jersey and Massachusetts.

Experiment with these cattle seems to have proved that they are well adapted to various climates; that they are hardy and deep milkers. The fact of their being polled is accepted by many as a great point in their favor.

A Convenient Feed Box.

One of many forms of feeding racks for cattle is here made or for feeding hay in the field, so as to avoid placing it on the ground, is represented in the accompanying cut, described by Country Gentleman.

FEEDING BOX FOR CATTLE.

This box has flight scantling at the corners, and boards, as represented, at the sides. Hay is thrown in at the cop. It is also used for feeding grain to sheep in the shallow trough shown by the dotted lines. It is about two feet wide and twelve feet long, the bottom boards forming the flat trough about a foot wide, they rest on a cross board in the middle. To clean it, it is simply turned upside down.

Commercial Fertilizers.

The ingredients of commercial fertilizers on which both their agricultural and commercial value chiefly depends, are nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash. Besides these more valuable ingredients, sulphuric acid and lime are always present in the superphosphates in considerable quantities, being a necessary accompaniment of phosphoric acid as it exists in nearly all manufactured fertilizers. Nitrogen is the most costly of the three important ingredients mentioned, and adds largely to the value of all the fertilizers sold with but few exceptions.

The following materials furnish organic nitrogen to fertilizers. Dried blood, dried and ground fish, prepared animal matter, fish scrap, meat scrap, cotton seed meal, castor pomace, hair, horn, wool, leather waste, etc. These substances must decompose and the nitrogen become changed into compounds of nitric acid and ammonia before it is available to plants. Soluble phosphoric acid is obtained by treating certain phosphatic materials, such as bone and South Carolina rock with sulphuric acid.

The potash used in this country for agricultural purposes comes mostly from Germany in the so called "German potash salts," which include potassium, sulphate, potassium chloride (the muriate) and kainite. Except for a few special purposes, potash is equally valuable in all these forms, but costs less in the muriate and kainite.

Potato Diseases.

After repeated experiments to determine the fact in his own mind, the editor of The Mark Lane Express advises farmers to cut off potato diseases as soon as they appear. The ball, or true seed of the potato, which results from the blossom, are not only unnecessary to the formation of the tuber below, but are a prejudicial strain on the plant. He says: "I have tried it again and again on a large scale, throw rows left and three rows cut—and the results have been more than satisfied me. It stands to reason that the plant which is propagated in acknowledged agricultural economy from its 'budding root stem,' must spend its energies and power unnecessarily in the production of flowers and seeds which are of no economic value whatever."

Preservation of Eggs.

Results gained from prizes offered by The London Daily for the best preserved eggs seem to show that the lime water system is all things considered, the best. Second of lime should be stirred with a gallon of water, and the eggs, perfectly fresh, immersed therein in barrels or jars. This excludes air and any germs that might cause mildew or mold, and prevents evaporation, so that the contents of the egg are not reduced in bulk. It is important to have a considerable excess of lime to replace any that may become carbonated. The vessels containing the eggs should be kept in a cool, well ventilated place.—American Stockman.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

Adopted by the National Convention at St. Louis, June 7, 1888.

The Democratic party of the United States in national convention assembled, renews the pledge of its fidelity to Democratic faith, and reaffirms the platform adopted by its representatives in the convention of 1884, and endorses the views expressed by President Cleveland in his last annual message to congress as the correct interpretation of that platform upon the question of tariff reduction; and also endorses the efforts of our democratic representatives in congress to secure a reduction of taxation. Chief among the principles of party faith are the maintenance of an inviolable union of free and indestructible states, now about to enter upon its second century of unexampled progress and prosperity; a union of equal rights and equal privileges to all citizens, strictly guarding the reserved rights of the states, recognizing the ability of the people of the entire ungrudged freedom of power; the encouragement of a judicious popular education; protected to all who have been chosen for brief terms to enact and execute the laws, and are charged with the duty of preserving peace, ensuring equality and establishing justice. The Democratic party welcomes an exacting scrutiny of the administration of the executive power, while four years ago was committed to its trust in the election of Grover Cleveland president of the United States, and it challenges the most searching inquiry concerning its fidelity and devotion to the pledges which then invited the suffrages of the people.

During a most critical period of our financial affairs, resulting from over taxation, the actual condition of our currency, and a public debt unmatured, it has, by the adoption of a wise and conservative course, not only averted disaster, but greatly promoted the prosperity of the people. It has reversed the improvident and injurious policy of the republican party, touching the public lands, and has secured to actual settlers, over 20,000,000 acres of valuable land to be sacredly held as homesteads for our citizens.

While carefully guarding the interests of the laborers, and contributing to their just principles of justice and equity, it has paid out more of pensions and bounties to the soldiers and sailors of the republic than was ever paid before during an equal period.

By intelligent management and a judicious and economical expenditure of the public money, it has not on foot the reconstruction of the American navy upon a system that forbids the existence of scandal and insures successful results.

It has adopted and consistently pursued a firm and prudent foreign policy, preserving peace with all nations while scrupulously maintaining all the rights and interests of our own government and people at home and abroad. It has protected from our shores of Chinese laborers has been effectually secured under the treaty, made by the treaty, the operation of which has been postponed by the action of a Republican majority in the senate.

Honest reform in the civil service has been inaugurated and; maintained by President Cleveland, and he has brought the public service to the highest standard of efficiency, not only by rule and precept, but by the example of his own untiring and unselfish administration of public affairs.

In every branch and department of the government under Democratic control the rights and the interests of all the people have been guarded and defended; every public interest has been protected, and the equality of all before the law, without regard to race or color, has been unshaken and unshaken.

Upon its record thus exhibited, and upon the pledge of a continuance in the people of the benefits of good government, the national Democracy invokes a renewal of popular trust in the re-election of a chief magistrate who has been faithful, able and prudent. We do not hesitate to do that trust the transfer to the Democracy of the entire legislative power.

The Republican party, controlling the senate, and resisting in both houses of congress the admission of unjust and unequal tax laws, have by their combined action, made it clear that they are not entrusting the abrogation of a tour years, four years of prosperity before the law and the fairness and the public good, to the party that. Thus the cry of a merican labor for a better share of the revenue of industry is drowned out by the pressure enterprise is fettered and bound down by house mortgage, capital is darkened with doubt, and unequal, unjust laws can neither be repealed nor amended nor repealed.

The Democratic party will continue with all the energy and force of its conviction, to demand that these laws in accordance with the pledges of its representatives in congress, be so changed as to yield to the people from the burdens of taxation, to declare our unalterable opposition to the present tariff policy of the republican party, and to the protection of the McKinley schedule of President Cleveland as to the protection of the industrious classes, and to the protection of all honest grants of public lands for the benefit of actual settlers, and to the protection of the people of Michigan, may once more be enrolled in the list of democratic states.

We declare our adherence to the platform of the national democratic convention at St. Louis, and we propose to do our part to secure representatives in congress in their efforts to make a reduction of the revenue, by taxation, preventing further accumulation of a dangerous surplus in the treasury and preventing the surplus from the burdens of the war tariff.

We believe that the best way to bring the policy of the government on this subject in harmony with the constitution, the true interests and welfare of the people, and to relieve the property of all industries and the development of the resources of the country.

The democracy of Michigan believes in the dignity of American labor; recognizes the right of wage workers to the fostering care of the government as the other industrious classes, and every walk of life shall be encouraged in its work of building up the material interests of state.

The ownership of real estate in this country by foreign corporation and non-resident aliens is injurious to American interests and should be prohibited.

We favor the adoption of measures providing for the health and safety of those engaged in manufacturing, mining and building industries, and the repeal of all class legislation under which monopolies have been fostered and protected.

We demand that congress shall open to the public domain for settlement all lands granted by railroads or other corporations which have not been earned, and more particularly do we demand the forfeiture of all unearned grants of lands in the Upper Peninsula, that that portion of the state may no longer be deprived of its natural growth of pine and hardwood.

That to the multiplication in this state of corporations, we attribute the growth of such powers and surroundings as insure neither obedience to the mandates of the legislature or people, leaving the matter of a proprietary or state control, which has been controlled by big rolling combinations, and as well as to the lack of system we attribute the great and increasing burdens of taxation, and therefore we submit that the case is one demanding the exercise of the legislature and state officials free to make changes which seem good and business methods.

The doctrines of home rule and local self government in matters of taxation, which have been so long and so ably maintained by the democracy, differ with the people of Ireland in the hard contest which is now being waged for the sovereignty of Gladstone and Parnell for the right to have the management of their own affairs.

That though more than twenty three years have passed since the close of the war, the fact that a large number of "that glorious and patriotic army that preserved to us an undivided country is still among us with increasing years and increasing disability, the result of their privations and exposure in the war, the national government should deal justly with them and that liberal pensions should be granted to the disabled, not as charity, but as due from the government to the soldiers, because of the inestimable services they rendered their country, and we point with satisfaction and approval to the liberal construction of the existing pension laws, which have been administered so as to bring relief to a large portion of the pensioners annually paid to veterans.

Rich and Poor,

Prince and Peasant, the Millionaire and the Day Laborer, by their common use of this remedy, attest the world-wide reputation of Ayer's Pills. Leading physicians recommend these pills for Stomach and Liver Troubles, Costiveness, Biliousness, and Sick Headache; also, for Rheumatism, Jaundice, and Neuralgia. They are sugar-coated, contain no calomel, are purely vegetable, mild in operation; and, therefore, the very best medicine for Family Use, as well as for Travelers and Tourists.

"I have derived great relief from Ayer's Pills. Five years ago I was taken so ill with that I was unable to do any work. I took three boxes of Ayer's Pills and was entirely cured. Since that time I am never without a box of these pills."—Peter Christensen, Sherwood, Wis.

"Ayer's Pills have been in use in my family upwards of twenty years and have completely verified all that is claimed for them. In attacks of piles, from which I suffered many years, they afforded greater relief than any other medicine I ever tried."—T. F. Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for a number of years, and have never found anything equal to them for giving me an appetite and imparting energy and strength to the system. I always keep them in the house."—R. D. Jackson, Wilmington, Del.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

Adopted by the State Convention at Detroit, July 19, 1888.

The democracy of Michigan assembled in convention to the number of one thousand strong, recognizing the fact that its chief duty is to protect the people against oppression, at the election will bring to the administration of state affairs, integrity of character, purity of purpose and sound business methods, reaffirms its adherance to the traditional and sound principles and practices of the democratic party in respect to national politics.

We renew the expression of our approval of the administration of President Cleveland which has won the respect and confidence of the people and has justified his renomination in response to the universal sentiment of the democracy by his unceasing devotion to public duty his courageous maintenance of democratic principles and his enforcement of purse, just and impartial methods of administration in all our departments of the government.

Upon the chief question of national politics the state democracy adopts the declaration of tariff taxation, we declare our unalterable opposition to the present tariff policy of the republican party. We affirm our approval of the last tariff message of President Cleveland as the ablest and most conclusive state of uniform democratic principles which should govern the taxation of revenue to meet the wants of the government, and the proper distribution of the burden of taxation, and we commend the action of our representatives in congress in their efforts to make a reduction of the revenue, by taxation, preventing further accumulation of a dangerous surplus in the treasury now lying idle in the vaults of the government.

We believe that the best way to bring the policy of the government on this subject in harmony with the constitution, the true interests and welfare of the people, and to relieve the property of all industries and the development of the resources of the country.

The democracy of Michigan believes in the dignity of American labor; recognizes the right of wage workers to the fostering care of the government as the other industrious classes, and every walk of life shall be encouraged in its work of building up the material interests of state.

We are informed that on two occasions recently, the windows of the Catholic church at East Jordan have been broken by the throwing of brick through them, evidently with malice intended. If done by boys their parents should look after them; if by older persons a prosecution would do them good.

Alex. Cameron has charge of the construction of the roof of Dr. Lewis' new opera house, and the way he has hustled things the past three days is a caution. With two perfect days—Tuesday and Wednesday—and a large force of men, the old roof was removed, and a temporary one put on, so that the building will be protected from any damage from the weather to the rooms below.

Mr. Nelson of Cheboygan, one of the leading lumbermen in the 10th congressional district, has come out for Cleveland and Thurman. Mr. N. has been a life-long republican and the free trade business has been thoroughly investigated by him and according to reports, he is disgusted with the delusive schemes resorted to by the republican party this year.

A strong point in behalf of Mr. Burnham for the office of Judge of Probate, is the fact that he is a farmer as well as a lawyer, and with the sympathies of a farmer he will at all times keep in mind the necessity of so adjusting the affairs of the best results for the widow and fatherless. Make no mistake, but support Mr. Burnham for Probate Judge in the manner look after your estates in your misfortune.

The Sentinel is terribly alarmed because the prohibition party put a ticket in the field, just as it was two years ago. Well perhaps there is cause for alarm. The old rotten republican party is breaking to pieces, and many of these pieces are being gathered up by the prohibitionists, like kindling wood, to replenish their own fires. There really is danger that the prohibition fire will burn out the republican party, and the local republican organ has just cause for alarm.

It is stated that the postoffice department is to have a new postal card. It is very much like a double card of the present pattern. The back folds are split diagonally and open out like a four-pointed star. The four corners are folded and joined in the center, when the card is ready for mailing, with a piece of gummed paper. The card weighs less than half an ounce and will contain no more writing than the present card, the only advantage being greater privacy.

A contemporary says: "Country editors are their own worst enemies. They work for their town and public without even a thank you. Their generosity, as a general thing, results in nothing but a kick in the pie instead of its blessings. They have one comfort, however, and that they will leave no stone unturned to go bobble up after they have passed over the "beautiful beyond." The Lord will give them a front seat in the big church not made by hands and will give the editors a back one."

How do skilled workmen like the assertion from Judge Ramsdell that "no job any shop or factory, the majority of skilled workmen have an unchangeable idea, and they call it speech." Now this must be understood either as an assertion that our skilled workmen are the slaves of pertinent bias. With no more political or religious bias than a big lump of impartial, independent newspaper, which will be mailed, postage paid, for $1.00 per year, or 25 cents per month. The farmer and mechanic can now afford, as well as the merchant and professional man, to have his metropolitan daily.

GEN. CUTCHEON'S SPEECH

JOHN NICHOLLS' OPINION OF IT.

An Analysis of Some of the General's Misstatements.

EDITOR JOURNAL,—On coming out of the hall on Thursday evening last, after hearing Gen. Cutcheon, my ears were greeted with sayings such as this: "What does John Nicholls think of that, I wonder?" So it appears that there are persons who are curious to know what so inconsequential a fellow as myself thinks of our member of congress. I therefore beg space of you to enable me to, at least, partially satisfy those who care to know what I think.

I suppose the curiosity of those persons related either to the tariff question or, more probably, to the indecent slur cast by the speaker upon Engl

BAZAINE DEAD.

A Prominent French Character Dies of Heart Trouble.

Ex-Marshal Bazaine is dead, his demise occurring at Madrid, Spain, from heart trouble. He had been ill but a short time. Francois Achille Bazaine ex-Marshal of France, was born Feb. 2, 1811, and entered the French army as a private in the ranks. He served in 1835 and in Spain against the Carlists, where for distinguished courage and ability, he was promoted to be a Lieutenant and then Captain, and also received the Cross of the Legion of Honor. He served in Algeria, was wounded twice, of Lieutenant and Captain successively, and promoted to be a Commander of the Legion in 1856. In 1859 he served in the campaign against Austria. When the French invaded Mexico in 1861 he was made Brigadier General and served in that region. Upon the fall of the forces in 1863, when he received the cross of Grand Officer, he was made a Marshal of France. In 1869 the Emperor Napoleon promoted him to be Commander-in-chief of the French army of the Rhine. Upon the battle of Sedan, he furnished the scene of Bazaine's surrender of his army, and of himself, to the prince. He was condemned to imprisonment in the Third Army Corps, near Metz. Upon the capture of Worth and Forbach he had been fought, disastrously to the French, at Gravelotte, and shut up in the fortress of the town, where he remained, in Aug. 18, 1870, he began a retreat from Metz, with 180,000 men, but the battles of Rezonville and Gravelotte before being forced back into Metz. This accomplished himself promptly by Prince Frederick Charles, and on Oct. 27, he surrendered himself, with his army, of 173 servants, 6,000 officers, and 140,000 men, over six thousand officers, fifty Generals, and three Marshals of France were made prisoners of war on this occasion, the largest number of men ever captured in a single battle, in modern times. This action then was followed by the trial of the French people was followed in 1873 by the trial of Bazaine by court-martial for having failed to do his duty. He was sentenced to degradation and death. Marshal Macmahon, of the French republic, commuted the sentence to imprisonment for twenty years. But Marshal Bazaine was taken to the Ile Sainte Marguerite, in the Mediterranean Sea, from whence he escaped after nine months' imprisonment. He visited Germany and England, then removed to Spain, and finally made his residence at Madrid, where he had some relatives.

BANDITS BAFFLED.

Robbers Make an Unsuccessful Attempt on a Texas Train.

A Schulenburg (Texas) telegram states that a passenger train on the Southern Pacific was stopped near Harwood by masked men who compelled the engineer, at the muzzle of a revolver, to uncouple from the passenger coaches and pull out of the way. Conductor E. E. Shackelford was compelled to assist in uncoupling the engine. Anticipating robbery, the train was guarded by United States Marshals, and a fight ensued. Three of the escaping robbers were wounded, and they will be pursued by all of Southwestern.

A FAMOUS CASE.

Judgment for $1,000 Rendered in the Iowa Calf Case.

The jury in the celebrated Jones County Iowa calf case, after being out forty-eight hours, returned a verdict for plaintiff for $1,000. Robert Johnson, the plaintiff, says this will end the case. The trial has been pending in various courts for over fourteen years, and has bankrupted several well-to-do people. The calf was worth about $15.

Territorial Politics.

A special from Guthrie, "No Man's Land," says that the Oklahoma Territorial Convention convened in O. Chase for delegate to Congress and put a full ticket for the Territorial Council in the field. The platform asks that "No Man's Land" be placed under control of the State of Colorado until it perfects laws of its own, and wails upon Congress to drop political strife and legislate in the interests of "No Man's Land," where it is badly needed.

Gen. Salomon, ex-President of Hayti, is dead.

Louisiana Negroes Shot by a Mob.

A crowd of armed men rode to the home of two negroes near Jean Pierre Saint and Didcaro, at Ville Platte Prairie, La., and after calling the negroes a short distance away riddled them with buckshot. The killing is supposed to have been brought about by insolent language used by the negroes. The affair caused intense excitement.

Engagement Announced.

The engagement of Miss Virginia Merchant, of Baltimore, the grand-daughter of Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, and of General Winfield Scott, to the Duke of Norfolk, one of England's wealthiest noblemen, has been announced.

GEN. NEWBERRY.

He Is Appointed to the Postmastership of Chicago.

The President has appointed Gen. Walter C. Newberry Postmaster at Chicago, vice S. Corning Judd.

Gen. Walter C. Newberry was born in Oneida County, N. Y., in the year 1804, and was a farmer's boy in his early life, with the exception of two years spent as Oneida Seminary. Afterwards, one year as Dr. Prentice's school, Geneva. His father, Ansaza S. Newberry, was extensively engaged in the lumber trade, and at the age of 17 years Walter was sent out on the road as an agent, a business in which he was very successful for four years, being a partner of each year's. Chicago in 1835 he entered the large lake shipping line of his father, which, at the time, was the largest, but is now dwarfed by it. He left Chicago for home in 1842, and entered in August, 1861, in the Eighty-first New York Infantry. A few months he found him an ambitious young private on the staff of the Colonel, Mr. Newberry's commission in November as First Lieutenant, in the Twenty-fourth Cavalry, and he was soon promoted to be Major. He was in Sherman's campaign, in 1863 he returned to New York and raised the Twenty-fourth Cavalry, and was soon returning to the front as its Major. In autumn of 1864 he was promoted Lieutenant Colonel, and in the battle of Five Forks he was seriously wounded there, and only was carried out of the article, a brigadier General at the age of 20. In 1865 he was honorably removed to Chicago, and with Col. Rankins engaged in the brewer-supply business, and in the lumber business, in 1866 and in Illinois street, where the firm is still located.

FUTURE STATESMEN.

Nominees for Congress of Various Political Complexions.

Francis W. Rockwell has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Twelfth Massachusetts District.

Congressman George D. Tillman was nominated by the Democratic convention of the Second South Carolina District after two weeks' session and several hundred ballots.

Thomas H. Greevy, of Altoona, Pa., has been nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Twentieth Pennsylvania District.

The Republicans of the Second New Jersey Congressional District renominated James Buchanan by acclamation.

The Republicans of Philadelphia renominated Congressman Henry I. Bingham in the First District, Charles O'Neil in the Third District.

The Republican Territorial Convention of Arizona nominated Gen. Thomas F. Wilson for Congress.

The Prohibitionists of the Fifth Illinois District have nominated Rev. J. M. Strong, of Lake County, for Congress.

George L. Yaple has been nominated by the Democrats of the Fourth Congressional District of Michigan for Congress.

Congressional nominations have been made as follows: The Hon. Richard Crowley is the Thirty-third New York District Republicans; the Hon. P. J. Consell, by First Nebraska District Republicans, on fifteenth ballot.

TRADE REVIEW.

The Condition of Crops and Business as Reported by Dun & Co.

The trade review of R. G. Dun & Co. for last week is as follows:

The volume of legitimate business continues to improve. Crop reports are mingled but wholesale is to corn. The general average of prices has been decidedly higher, and the aggregate is 90,000,000 bu. above last year's. Spring wheat is injured, and reports show that the money in circulation of all kinds was about $1,900,000,000 here, 1, against $1,732,000,000 a year ago, and the Treasury has paid out more than it has taken in, besides $2,200,000 more than the amount of gold and silver coinage, for the last week. The total addition to circulation was $3,900,000. The prospect of another for August shows that the exports of breadstuffs, provisions, cotton, and petroleum will be much less than for the first month last year, or 42 per cent. Wheat has been moderately active, with sales of 207,000 bu. hands, and only one-quarter cent advance in prices, while corn has declined one and three-quarter cents, and the sales of 1,000,000 bu. have not been so active. Pork products are 25 cents lower, lard 30 cents and lard 30 cents per 100 pounds. Exports of wheat from the country for July and August amount to 16,300,000 bushels, flour and other breadstuffs, 1,900,000 bushels, and the supply remaining for sale is 19,000,000 bushels. Probably about 24,000,000 bushels more that last year's exports for the next of the drop year. The business failures number 226, as compared with 217 last week and 184 the week previous to the last. For the corresponding week of last year the figures were 195.

PAYMASTER ROBBED.

One of His Assistants Mortally Wounded.

John Smith, stone contractor of Nashville and Knoxville Railroad, with his bookkeeper, Mr. Shreiner, was driving from Gordonville to Lancaster, Tenn., with $1,800 to pay off the hands, when two former employes stopped them and demanded the money. Smith was knocked senseless, and Shreiner fled, the highwaymen getting the money. But they had not gone far with it, when a posse of citizens overtook them. A man named Johnson wounded one of them fatally and the other severely.

ANNUAL ELECTION.

The Society of the Army of the Cumberland Choose Officers.

At the meeting of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland, held in Chicago, Gen. Rosecrans was elected President; Gen. Henry M. Cist, Corresponding Secretary; Col. John W. Steele, Recording Secretary; and Gen. Joseph S. Fullerton, Treasurer. A long list of Vice Presidents was chosen, among them being Gen. Harrison from Indiana and Colonel A. F. Stevenson from Illinois. The Society appointed a committee to co-operate with other organizations in the erecting of a monument to Gen. Sheridan. Resolutions respecting his death were also adopted. A committee was appointed to confer with the property of asking Congress for an appropriation to purchase the battle-field of Chickamauga. Col. W. McMichael of New York was chosen for the next orator, with E. D. Moyer of Ohio as alternate.

INJURED IN A RAILWAY WRECK.

A Bad Smashup Near East Washington, Wis.—Some Serious Injuries.

By the breaking of a passenger train in a collision, on the Burlington and Northern road, near East Winona, Wis., twenty-one persons were hurt, some of them badly. The injured were taken to the hospital at La Crosse, and embrace the following:

"A TARIFF IS A TAX.—Allan G. Thurman.

It is a condition which confronts us—not a theory.—Grover Cleveland.

"UNNECESSARY taxation is unjust taxation."—President Cleveland's Letter of Acceptance.

"We favor the entire repeal of the internal taxes (on whiskey and tobacco) rather than surrender of any part of our protective system."—Chicago platform.

"The platform is in entire harmony with my views."—Ben Harrison.

THE surplus revenue now remaining in the treasury not only furnishes conclusive proof of unjust taxation, but its existence constitutes a separate and independent license to the prosperity of the people.

The vast accumulation of idle funds represent that much money, drawn from the circulating medium of the country which is needed in the channels of trade and business.—President Cleveland's Letter of Acceptance.

States on the Vetoes.

If Mr. Blaine be dodging the tariff question in the West he could have been more fortunate than to accept Cleveland's vetoes for a substitute.

Mr. Blaine's speech at Detroit only amounts to an open plea for the policy of larceny from the public treasury. Because this government is large and the thief is small, then how could the chief executive find it in his heart to take the side of the public funds? All these little jobs were done in the name of loyalty to the Union and the republican party. Although the forty, if successful in congress, might be nothing short of robbery, was it not still a party theft which every republican should assist? The democrat who would stop it must be a knave. Hence Mr. Blaine held Mr. Cleveland up to the detestation of his party.

The facts may be welcomed. The President, since taking office, has been bombarded with an unending fire of special pension acts. The total number has not been less than 1,800. These acts, in each and every case, have been writs of supersedeas, reversal and pension, of applicants who had failed to make out a case before the bureau erected for that purpose of pensioning every man who was hurt in the war, his heirs, assigns and dependents. No such bureau exists elsewhere on earth. No such payments are made elsewhere. No hurt is too trivial. No circumstantial damage is too remote. With the machinery of this bureau 450,000 pensioners have been set to drawing stipend. But the furious waste of congress has not been held at such a tide. Eighteen hundred appeals from the bureau to congress have brought defeat on the bureau and Blaine would have them also attach disgrace to the President.

Carefully considering each one of these acts, the President has found one out of every six to be utterly base less. In this case the man deserted; in that, he fell down stairs in 1886 and attributed the misfortune to the battle of Chicamauga, in which strife he had no hand; in another, the claimant served in the rebel armies; in still another, the same bill had already passed and the beneficiary had been on the pay rolls two months.

The president sent back these 300 bills to the complacent jobbers who had enacted them. How many of these bills did congress pass over the presidential veto? How many went to a vote on such a passage?

President Cleveland was sworn to defend the people against thieves and to perform his duties according to his o. n science. Is Blaine under any such responsibility? Has he taken such an oath? Does he even know the facts? Why, then, does he defy his hearers to point to similar acts of other presidents, when Grant, in an age of even greater profligacy was forced to veto a bounty equalization bill which would have proved to be the greatest robbery of modern times?

It is a low state of party morals which will abandon its leaders to resources so contemptible. Yet, if there be any place along the democratic line where the commander-in-chief has chosen his own ground and made his position invulnerable, it is precisely at this point, on which the Plumed Knight now advances, hoping to avoid some difficulties of the tariff.—Chicago Herald.

High Tariff Robbery.

James G. Blaine declared in 1884 that in 20 years the nation had gained in wealth $30,000,000,000. That was a sum equal to $600 to every man, woman and child in the nation; or $3,000 to an average family of five people.

That was true. Who got the money? Let us see.

In 1860 the wealth in the nine manufacturing states was $529 per capita, and in the agricultural states it was $507 per capita. In 1880, after 20 years of high protective tariff, the wealth of the manufacturing states had increased to $1,353 per capita, while in the agricultural states it was only $673. This is not all. The ten northwestern states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan, are mortgaged to the enormous amount of $3,422,000,000. This frightful indebtedness is nearly all practically owed to the manufacturing states, and it reduces the valuation of the ten northwestern states by $186 per capita, and increases that of the manufacturing states by $326 per capita.

Making these corrections the north west has a valuation of $475 per capita, and the manufacturing states have $1,679 per capita. Thus in 20 years of high protection the matchless northwest has absolutely lost $32 per capita in wealth, while sterile New England has gained $1,152 per capita. Thus the $30,000,000,000 of wealth which Mr. Blaine boasted had been accumulated in this country between 1860 and 1880, amounting to $600 per capita, has been all absorbed by the manufacturing states. In 1860 they had $529 per capita and in 1880 they had $1,679 per capita, while the northwest in 1860 had $507 per capita, and in 1880 they had $475 per capita. The cause of this astonishing condition of things is the high protective tariff. It has robbed the people of the rich northwest and kept them poor and mortgage-ridden. At the same time it has enriched the people of New England.

Mr. J. S. Moore, the celebrated "Parsee merchant," estimated that the tariff compels the people of this country to pay tribute to the manufacturers to the enormous amount of $1,000,000,000 per annum. That is about $20 per capita per annum. The amount that Michigan must pay is over $37,000,000.

This is an enormous sum of money to force from the people of this state every year. It is over $3,333,000 for each congressional district. For an average county, like Ingham, for instance, it is over $600,000 every year. It amounts to $100 every year to every average family of five people. It is an enormous drain. No people on earth can stand this system of robbery and escape bankruptcy. This system of robbery kept up for twenty-five years has made the northwest poor by plastering it with mortgages, while it has made the manufacturing states enormously rich. It has enabled many to keep up the same system. But is it possible that the northwest will longer submit to this tariff robbery, the very word that ever was perpetrated under the sun? Under this miscalled protective system the east has robbed the west of more than two and a half times the entire cost to both sides of the late war of the rebellion. How long do the farmers want to go on paying this tribute?—Saginaw Courier.

State Taxes Outrageously Increased.

The state tax of Michigan in 1880, was $805,000. In 1887 it was $1,950,000. This is an increase in seven years of $1,145,000, which was the increase of 142 per cent. During the same time the property valuation of the state was increased only 50 per cent. The state tax thus increased 142 per cent in seven years, while the property valuation of the state increased only 50 per cent. in the same time. How long can a man continue to expend $142 as often as he earns $50, and escape bankruptcy. The state financial management is grossly extravagant and incompetent. This is a serious matter to every tax payer. If the state taxes are piled up in the future as they have been in the past seven years, certain disaster awaits the people of the state. The time has come to call a halt. Elect Burt and stop the increase of taxes.

The Rich Can Stand It.

Senator Hearst, of California, who is largely interested in mining and manufacturing industries, states his views as to President Cleveland and tariff reform in this broad and common sense way:

I have implicit confidence in the re-election of Grover Cleveland. I am under no obligations to him, and have not always sympathized with his theories and methods, but, if I have studied him aright, he is one of the purest and ablest men that ever reached the White House and has no ambition except to serve his public. The American people know this just as well as I do, and I don't believe that they will turn him down for nothing. So far as my personal interests are concerned, it is a matter of indifference to me how the thing goes. If the people of the United States don't want tariff reform and tax reduction, I am very much mistaken. It is a question for the poor and not for the rich. The poor people don't want the rich to pay for carrying on the government, and wish to continue bearing the burden while we don't feel our share of the load, I am not going to do it. As a man I can stand it; but as long as common sense rules the country I believe poor people and the people with small means will jump at the chance President Cleveland offers them in the policy he has laid down, and to which the democratic party has committed itself without reserve.

How the West is Cheated.

The high protective tariff enriches the east and impoverishes the west. In 1860 the east had $529 per capita and the west had $507 per capita. In 1885, after twenty five years of high protection, the east had $1,679 per capita, and the west had $475 per capita. The tariff robs the west and enriches the east. And moreover, the tariff does not distribute the wealth fairly among the people. It makes millionaires and tramps. The wealth of the east gathered by the tariff is mostly held by the wealthy. The laborer gets little more than a bare living, and in many cases sadly pinched at that. The tariff robs the west, enriches the east and makes millionaires and tramps.

Our Brave Leader.

Hon. W. R. Roach is making the most remarkable canvass that has been made in Michigan since the close of the war. His assault on the high taxes, extravagance and incompetency of republican management astonish and delight the people, but scatter consternation and dismay among the g. o. p. As a business man he takes a business view of things, and would bring business methods to bear on public affairs. The people see he will be the right man in the right place, when they put him in the gubernatorial chair which they are bound to do.

A Fact Stated.

A lower tariff means cheaper food, cheaper clothing and cheaper houses. It does not mean cheaper wages.—Chicago Herald.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

Adopted by the State Convention at Detroit July 19, 1888.

The democracy of Michigan assembled in convention for the nomination of state officers, reaffirming the faith that the chief duty is present to the people candidates whose election will bring to the administration of state affairs integrity of character, purity of purpose and economical management, and pledgeing themselves to the traditional and established principles and policies of the democratic party in respect to national politics.

We renew the expression of our approval of the administration of President Cleveland, and he has won the respect and confidence of the people of this state by his courageous response to the universal sentiment of the democracy by his message to congress, which has aroused the enthusiastic approbation of all true democratic principles and his enforcement of pure, just and economical methods of administration in all the departments of the government.

Upon the cause of national politics, the relief of the people from the burdens of tariff taxation, we declare our unalterable adhesion to the time-honored policy of the republican party. We affirm our approval of the last national message of President Cleveland as an accurate expression of the just and traditional democratic principles which should govern the whole subject of revenue reform and the reduction of the surplus in the treasury. We hail as the chosen standard bearer of the national democracy in the present campaign and to his administration of the nation, a tried statesman distinguished by a long life of public service which has been illustrated by the highest and perfect integrity of and fruitful of benefit to the people we pledge our best efforts to the end that Michigan may once more be enrolled in the list of democratic states.

We declare our adherence to the platform of the national democracy adopted at Chicago, and we approve the action of our democratic representatives in congress in their efforts to secure a reduction of tariff taxation, thereby preventing further accumulation of a dangerous surplus in the treasury and relieving the people from the burdens of the war tariff.

We believe that congress should bring the policy of the government on this subject in harmony with the constitution, the true interests of the people, the just demands of labor the prosperity of all industries and the development of the resources of this country.

The democracy of Michigan believes in the principle of American industry recognizes the right of wage workers to the fostering care of the government and that legitimate industry of every walk of life shall be encouraged in its work of building up the material interests of state.

The ownership of real estate in this country by foreign corporations and non-residents is injurious to American interests and should be prohibited.

We favor the adoption of measures providing for the health and safety of those engaged in manufacturing, mining and building industries, and the repeal of all class legislation under which monopolies have been fostered and protected.

We demand that congress shall open to the public domain for settlement all lands granted to railroads or other corporations which have not been earned, and more particularly do we demand the forfeiture of all unearned grants of lands in the Upper Peninsula, that that portion of the state may no longer be deprived of its natural growth and development.

That to the maintenance in this state of petty boards, commissions and officials, with such powers and responsibilities as impair our political responsibility nor respect for the legislature or people, leaving the matter of appropriations for state institutions to be largely controlled by log rolling combinations, and so will act to the lack of system we attribute the great and constant increase of appropriations; therefore we submit that it is time for a change, and the election of a legislature and state officials free to make changes which will secure and preserve honest methods may dictate.

The doctrines of home rule and local self government are cardinal principles of the democratic party. Therefore we cordially sympathize with the people of Ireland in the grand contest which they are making under the leadership of Gladstone and Parnell for the right to have the management of their own affairs.

That though more than a quarter of a century has passed since the war we should not forget that a large number of our fellow citizens are still suffering the effects of the unpardonable country is still among us with increasing years and increasing disability, the result of their privation and hardship. We believe the general government should treat with the utmost tenderness and liberality these pensioners should be granted in the disabled, not as charity, but as due them because of the inestimable services they rendered their country, and we point with satisfaction and reproach to the liberal construction of the existing pension laws by the present administration, resulting in a large increase in the amounts annually paid to veterans.

Thought from Young Men.

Professor Henry Drummond, whom "Natural Law in the Spiritual World" made so much stir in the world, is described to be a "tall, slim, fair young man, with a trim mustache and a well fitting frock coat, and resembling an officer of the guards rather than a lecturer at a university." It seems to be surprising to many that he should not be a dreamy, spectacled, shabby and crabby, but the reasonable mind will admit that the present is just the era to expect sound judgment and practical thought from young men. In other ages young men gave their youth to folly entirely, and were not in a state of health at the age of 30 to see clearly or moralize effectively. Seventy years or so gave a man authority as a philosopher, but the valuable experience of seventy years of a man's physical health strong while his mind develops, so that, unless our editorials are wilfully vicious, the coming century should produce a flow of intellect and bodies than did ancient Greece.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

FARM AND GARDEN.

EXPERIENCES AND OBSERVATIONS FROM TRUSTWORTHY SOURCES.

A Cheap and Convenient Apiary or Summer and Winter Stand for Bees, Illustrated, and Directions Given for Building the Same.

An Illinois correspondent of Rural New Yorker calls the structure shown in the accompanying cuts "a cheap and convenient apiary or summer and winter stand for bees."

FIG. 1—A CHEAP APIARY.

It is a frame building, 10 by 16 feet, 8 feet from floor to ceiling. The door sits the south and a double window in the north. The studding in both ends are sided up inside and out with skip lapped siding and the space between and that above the ceiling are packed with chaff or sawdust to the depth of 3 or 4 inches.

The sides are made double of lumber 8 inches wide. The lower inside board being sawed so as to fit between the studdings, of which there are three in each side, is hinged to the floor and doors and wards, the ends being sawed on a miter on each side of the studding thus making a reasonably tight joint when the board is raised; the next board is made the width of the whole length; the next one sawed as before and hinged to the top of the second board and alternately to the top. The outside boards are left the entire length and are put on the reverse of the inner ones, the upper board being first nailed on, the next one hinged to its lower edge and so on, or a two inch strip could be nailed on with its lower edge 8 inches below the plate, and the second board hinged to its lower edge and a strip cut to fit between its upper edge and the corner board hinged to its upper edge.

FIG. 2—A CHEAP APIARY.

In summer, by lowering the inner doors and raising the outer doors and hooking them up, the bees have free access to the hives while they can be protected from heavy driving rains by unhooking the outer doors and lowering them. In winter by closing all the doors and packing between them with chaff a good, warm room is obtained.

A Living Vase.

The process of ornamenting vases with living grass is by no means new, but as very many of our readers may not know how it is done, we give the representation of a living vase with flowers, which, depicting it, that appeared recently in The Northern Cultivator:

Any sort of vase may be employed, but those of unglazed terra cotta are preferable, being porous. In such vessels the water with which the vase is filled percolates constantly through the sides and moistens the plants which are fixed on its surface. This kind of vase is, however, not indispensable, for we can succeed with all kinds, whether in glass or metal. In the latter case it is necessary to prepare the surface, so as to convert it into a kind of soil, which it really represents—an operation which is easily managed by the aid of a piece of cloth or flannel which is fixed by means of a little pack thread or thin iron or brass wire. This being undertaken, the means employed to grow the seed must next be described.

If a porous vase be used it is filled with water or, better still, left in a pail of water to soak. After a lapse of twenty-four hours, when the water has not necessarily saturated the vase, it is laid on its side, and the seed sprinkled all over the upper surface, taking care to turn the vase in different directions, in order that the whole surface may be well covered with seed. This operation terminated, the vase is placed in a dark closet for some time, and, if possible, under a glass frame, so as to preserve humidity and facilitate germination. If a non-porous vase, after having well soaked the cloth which covers it, the seed is sown upon it and the same care is given as has already been indicated. When a porous vase is used it should be kept constantly full, as it is the water flowing slowly through it that feeds the plants which cover the sides. If that be insufficient to insure vigorous growth, the vase must be watered, taking care to pour the water cautiously, so as not to detach the plants. If glazed or metal vases be used, glass bottles, for instance, they must be constantly watered, the water should be poured from the top over all, so that, in descending, it will wet a part of the stock, which should always be damp. Whenever the plants droop they must be watered, but very lightly and carefully. The vase should stand in a saucer or pan.

A VASE COVERED WITH FOLIAGE.

The seeds used should be very fine, and especially light and of easy and quick germination.

Mix ben manure with fine soil before applying to plants.

About Hybrid Plants.

At the Massachusetts convention at Detroit, Mich., Thos. Meehan, an authority in such matters, said:

A plant with comparatively sour fruit has a tendency with every fruit, insect or the wind carry the pollen of the parent, or those like the parent, to the sweet, and impregnate the sweet and produces fruit neither sweet nor sour. The strawberries promoter is back again toward the ranks. It is next to impossible to make any new cardinal or shending or crossing improving fruits, in the origination of new races is, however, invaluable. There was a time when people believed they were sinning. The Commissioner doesn't believe in misrepresentation. It despises it. And as long as what is published it will not sanction it, whether it be misrepresentation of political amusing or political friends."

In an editorial on the 15th of August last, the same paper, speaking of the Union Labor party, said:

A century ago and today, these fellows travel around among the farmers, exaggerate their discomfort and try to make them miserable, discontented, sore and distressed. They discourage labor and renewed effort, and the hope that springs eternal in the human breast, and urge instead laziness, idleness and the denunciation of the more fortunate. With their lying tongues lolling out of their foul mouths, they decry honest industry and deny the word of God, that labor reaps its reward, and that comfort and riches are the fruit of honest endeavor."

If this is not willful misrepresentation it is The Commonwealth's honest Republican opinion, and like Harrison's honest opinion of the Irish, it will not do the Republican cause much good.—Kansas City Times.

An Unhappy Message.

An enthusiastic Republican desiring to cheer up Mr. Harrison telegraphed him to "Read the writing on the wall." Mr. Harrison, being an assiduous student of Scriptures, knew that the writing on the wall read "Thou art weighed in the balance and art found wanting," and it is inferred that the message failed to impart that degree of cheer intended, or that its sender intended.—Chicago Herald.

Five Reasons Why:

"OUR FAMILY PHYSICIAN" is the best medical work for home use ever printed.

First. It is different from all similar books ever published, and the differences are such as to make it more valuable in the family than any or all of them.

Second. It teaches those who have it how to tell what the matter is when a person gets sick.

{We will show you how}It does this if you will call and see us.

No other book published does this.

Third. In all cases of a dangerous disease, it advises to send for a physician at once; but it enables those who use it to know when to send, and when not to send for a doctor, and so saves people money and may save life.

No other book published does this.

Fourth. It gives the practice of all the schools of medicine—Allopathic, Homœopathic, and Electric for all diseases treated in the book.

No other book published does this.

Fifth. Its chapters on "diseases of women and children" are pre-eminent for the purest, most wholesome and practical ever written for the use of wives and mothers.

PETERSBURG CHURCHES.

WITH ONE EXCEPTION, THEY ARE EXTREMELY COMMONPLACE.

The Magnificent Church of St. Isaac, Upon Which Many Millions of Dollars Have Been Expended—Russian Choirs the Finest in the World.

BY WILLIAM ELROY CURTIS.

The churches of Petersburg are commonplace with one exception, and do not compare in architectural beauty and richness with those of any city of the importance. The one exception is the Church of St. Isaac, which did structure of the most costly materials, and an example of the purest Greek architecture, but, unfortunately, with foundations so insecure as to require constant repairs, and so ill-conceived in arrangement so peculiar as to conceal its beauties from the visitor.

St. Isaac's is very simple, so plain that one whose eyes have been educated to appreciate the elaborate ornamentation of the public cathedrals of the continent has to admit it is beautiful in its unadorned style. It is, first, last, and all the finest and richest in specimens of the marbles and granites in the world, and the longer and oftener one looks at it the greater its glorious proportions. The only other architectural edifice that can compare with it, of this order of simplicity, is the Church of the Savior at Moscow, or one recently built on the same general plan, to commemorate the deliverance of Napoleon's army.

The Greek ecclesiastical architecture is not adapted to the climate of Russia, as people usually infer, but to St. Isaac's it has lended much charm. Ever since the foundation of the city the Russians have had a place of worship on this site, but Peter a wooden edifice was erected that was destroyed by fire. Then Catherine built one, which was finished in 1801, but did not suit her, and with the reckless way she had of doing things, it was torn down, and foundations laid in 1819 for what was to be, and until recently has been, the finest temple in the Russian empire.

The foundation itself is a wonder, for it is a perfect forest of piles, some of them more of them; sunk in the quicksand on which city is built, at a cost of $1,500,000, but even this would not be sufficient to carry the enormous weight of stone resting upon it, and for more than fifty years all the engineers of the empire have been experimenting at an enormous cost to make it more secure, without great success. The walls toward the river are gradually sinking, and there seems no way to prevent it. Enormous scaffolding conceals the walls, destroying the appearance of the building, but giving continual employment to a large number of workmen, who undoubtedly need the money more than the church. The total cost of the building was originally $16,000,000, $3,000,000 more than the Capitol at Washington, but the repairs since it was completed in 1858 have been enormous.

The Pillars and Dome of St. Isaac's.

The building is in the form of a Greek cross, like all the Russian churches, each of the four grand entrances being approached by three broad flights of steps, each whole flight being composed of a single block of granite brought from Finland on sledges over the snow. The level roads and the snow make possible in Russia the transportation of large masses of rock from the Finland quarries, that could not be carried on wheels or railroad tracks. These steps lead from the four sides of the building to the four grand entrances, each of which has a superb portico.

Each portico has 112 massive pillars of polished granite, sixty feet high, with a diameter of eleven and a half feet—the finest specimens of granite in existence in the world, all from east of the same quarry in Finland. The pillars are crowned with capitals of bronze. Over the porticos, and at twice their height, rises the chief and central dome 26 feet, supported by thirty pillars, which, although granite is used, look small compared with those below. The dome is covered with copper, overlaid with gold leaf, hammered to the thinness of the American dollar. The value of the gold upon this roof is nearly 1,000,000 roubles, and it glitters in the sun with amazing brilliancy. Very naturally the dome of St. Isaac's, reaching far above everything else in the city, is the first object that one sees upon its approach and can be seen for miles around the country, rising like a golden mountain.

At the crest is a miniature dome, an exact copy of the great one, but behind, looking like a little chapel, and that is surrounded by a golden cross, the top of which is 336 feet from the ground. The Washington monument is 555 feet high, the dome of St. Peter's at Rome 448 feet, and the goddess of liberty, who stands upon the top of the Capitol at Washington, is 305 feet from the ground, or four feet higher than St. Isaac's. The dome of St. Isaac's is not so come-like as the domes of the Capitol, but it is of the Byzantine order, in the shape of a turnip.

Four more domes, exact duplicates of the church in miniature, are placed at the corners of the edifice, and complete what is considered the most harmonious and beautiful piece of architecture of the Greek school. The embellishments of the facade has occupied the lives and genius of some of the most celebrated artists in Europe, some parts being the work of natives, but the greater part being done by Frenchmen and Italians. The great doors, forty four feet wide and thirty-six feet high, are of bronze, and represent in spirited bas-relief, doors in the life of the Savior. I should say here that the Greek church elevates the Savior, the Virgin, and one of the Catholic saints, or apostles, directly over the church of Rome is that it worships a woman. The interior of St. Isaac's is adorned with 108 figures of bronze representing religious subjects.

The Treasures of Siberian Mines.

The interior demonstrates what the mines and quarries of Russia are capable of for all the material in or domestic production and all the labor was done by Russian workmen, although foreign artists have been engaged to furnish designs. It is said to record the ambition of the sculptors, says a decoration could be more severe, or more tritonic ornamentation meets the eye; the architect has permitted the effort to be produced by stupendous proportions and costliness of materials.

There is nothing in the world, except in the new church of the Savior at Moscow, such an assemblage of rare stones. There are pillars of malachite, columns of lapis-lazuli, frieze and wainscoting of both materials, whose proportions exceed anything that has hitherto been done in those beautiful materials, and a great part of the floor is of the same material, and it seems as if it was to be spread for people to walk upon. The attendants keep slippers of felt for tourists to draw over their shoes when they inspect the interior of St. Isaac's, to save them from broken bones. The columns of lapis-lazuli come from the mines of Siberia, and the cost of transporting them to Petersburg was $30,000 each. The malachite columns and pillars are also from Siberia, from the quarries belonging to the government, and the cost of their transportation was enormous, but not so great. The jasper comes from the same place.

The Iconostas.

The inmost shrine, or sanctuary, corresponding to the altar of a Roman church, and called the iconostas, into which women are never admitted, is a small circular temple, a model of the dome of the church—the same design is repeated everywhere—supported by pillars of malachite eight feet high, with capitals and bases of gilded copper. The cost of this work was $200,000. There is a fine window of stained glass, representing the ascension of the Savior, by a Russian artist. The effect is, however, destroyed by placing the head in which the glass is set of Czar Nicholas, and, even the silver sponge and spear have been used on their tables.

The walls of the interior are decorated with large pictures in mosaic or distempered by Russian artists, and the work is still going on, only a third or more of the surface being so far covered, although it is the ambition of the emperor to make it the most lavish. When the church is finished the entire interior, with the exception of the columns and other work of malachite and semi-precious stones, will be covered with mosaics and frescoes, and the effect will be very fine. It is now, the interior is too dark to display the beautiful workmanship. The colors of the walls will light it up.

The Singing of the Monks.

There are some fine statues and silver shrines in the interior, but very few compared with the older churches. Services held at St. Isaac's daily and almost continuously, the hours being 5 to 8 a. m., 12 to 3 p. m., and 4 to 6 p. m. Strangers in the city usually attend to hear the music, which is the most effective part of the services.

The singing of the monks justifies its fame. Women are not permitted to take part in the service, neither is any one whose life is not considered to be pure. No any musical instruments of any sort permitted. The music is wonderful. But there is a trained choir of barytone and basso voices, and the effect is very fine, and one can hear no finer music than they give. For this choir all the convents and monasteries in Russia furnish material. Young boys are educated expressly for the organ loft, and when their voices change, others are found to take their places. The choir is composed of about 50 or 60 voices, and, especially the basso voices, are of the finest quality. The effect of the music is heightened by the appearance of the monks, who do not are the choirs of other churches do, but stand in a semi-circle, two or three rows deep, as the case may be, in front of the iconostas or altar. Russian priests or monks may never cut their hair or beards, and they wear long robes and hats with peculiar head-dresses, stove-pipe hats without brims, covered with crape, which hangs down over their shoulders like a widow's veil.

The Finest Church of the World.

The finest church music is said to be found in the Cathedral of St. Paul's, London, where there is a choir of 250 boys; at Westminster Abbey, which some rich graduate left a legacy providing for the maintenance of a choir of high salaries of the finest male voices that can be obtained, in the royal chapel at Vienna where the Empress Elizabeth has taken the choir under her special patronage and selects the singers herself. An appointment in the choir is considered a great honor, and to be won by a competition. The Vienna choir is composed of members are subjects of imperial favor there is naturally an envious side for the place.

I have heard the music at all these churches, and while it is difficult to distinguish and compare them, there can be no doubt that the music at St. Isaac's is at least the most impressive if not the most artistic in a technical sense. The service is long, and it is very tiresome to stand. There are often solos for the tenor or basso voices, which are beautiful, and the choir are always in harmony. The services are so long that it would be impossible to be applied in music is the repetition of the Russian masses are composed of nothing else. There are no offertories or Ave Marias, no chance for the display of a fine voice, but simply a series of magnificent chorals, full and round like the diapason of an orchestra.

The only other first class church in Petersburg is the Cathedral of Our Lady of Kazan, the patron saint of the city. The saint to whom this church is dedicated is the most popular in the Greek calendar, and it is supposed to have the Russian Empire in her protection. The original church was built, 1801-1811, by perfect architects, and so obtained for them a copy of Kazan more than a thousand years ago. She was brought to Moscow in 1579 and to St. Petersburg in 1721, when this image of the Virgin was summoned to receive the emperors and empresses kneel at her shrine before setting out upon a journey or undertaking any important act, and implore her assistance and protection.

Before the Czar is crowned he spends several hours in devotion to her image, with his imperial forehead pressed upon the floor, contemplating his sins, or asking her intercession, so he may be come upon a return from a journey, or after some great emergency has passed, to offer thanks-giving and make vows.

Alexander is said to have spent an entire night in prayer to this image before his campaign against the great Napoleon, when the Czar's army was small and the great Napoleon's shattered army was sweeping toward the Russian capital, and another raise to the shrine again and spent another night in thanksgiving. The great Czar went at once to our Lady of Kazan to seek consolation upon the assassination of his father, and is a frequent worshiper at her feet. The people of Petersburg say that when the Czar comes to the cathedral it is a sure sign that something important has happened or is to happen soon.

The miraculous picture of the Virgin is represented as a screen of solid gold, heavily loaded with jewels presented by those to whom she has given her favor. The story is probably said to be worth $15,000, a large sapphire in the collection, and the gifts of Grand Duchess fifty years ago. One cannot enter the church without seeing a crowd before the image.

The cathedral of Kazan is a plagiarism of St. Peter's in Rome, although of course upon a much smaller scale. It was begun in 1802 during the reign of Catherine, is 228 feet long, 182 feet wide, and has a dome 80 feet high. There is a semicircular colonnade in front of the church, 560 feet long, made up of 96 monoliths of Finland granite 35 feet high, resting on bases of bronze and terminating in capitals of the same. The colonnade is connected with the church by illustrated bas relief, and bears an inscription to announce that it was a gratuity of the people of the Russian empire for the Russian arms, and the common people will tell you that without this image Alexander could have done nothing against the invader. The two great generals who served the Czar, Prince Toll and Kutusof, are honored by five bronze statues that stand before the church.

There are plenty of other churches in Petersburg, and they have their contain the offerings of silver, gold, and precious stones, but they are not worth the trouble to stop to see the treasures, of which one hundred churches in Russia are rich enough in the churches to make every decorative work in the world look poor. There is a church in every street, and there is gilding enough, and vessels of silver and gold enough, to make the pagan world feed all the hungry in Russia, but the worshipers are the poor of the monks, who do not are the choirs of other churches do, but stand in a semi-circle, two or three rows deep, as the case may be, in front of the iconostas or altar. Russian priests or monks may never cut their hair or beards, and they wear long robes and hats with peculiar head-dresses, stove-pipe hats without brims, covered with crape, which hangs down over their shoulders like a widow's veil.

GOING TO BE A SOLDIER.

GEN. A. E. STEVENSON.

ABLE SPEECH BY THE ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL.

Grievous Burdens Laid Upon Laborers for the Benefit of Capitalists by the War Tariff—Trusts Denounced as the Fruit of High Tariff.

General Stevenson, Assistant Postmaster General, and General Fairchild, Pension Commissioner of Grover Cleveland's time, recently addressed a mass meeting at Shepherd's Bush, General Stevenson began by reviewing the civil service reform policy of President Cleveland. He showed that democrats had been appointed to high places, and that the rights of the democratic party had been ignored. Declared that all departments of the Government had been administered in the interest of democrats, that there have been no Digbies, no Credits, no star-route thieves, no Secret Service robbers, and he published the fact to figures that the old soldiers have never been more liberally treated than under the Cleveland rule. Instead of having kept the promise of the Republicans to pass a service pension bill and had been shelved by the Republican majority in the Republican assembly, the administration had actually reduced and forced to retirement a thousand arms. "In the last, or one, or, as we prefer to call it, the present Congress, the Cleveland administration has actually recommended that the land office had recommended a further reduction of 4,000,000 acres now held by greedy corporations? Continuing, General Stevenson said:

"Where are engaged in honest, fairly endeavor by the hard labor of his hands to earn bread for himself and his family be a protect indirect in the tariff. As no period in our history has a class of people been so grievously taxed for the benefit of the people as at present. And at no time since the Republican party has been in power has the attention of the people so well received the attention of the people as at present. Since the Republicans have been in power, the tariff has been the chief topic of discussion, and the Republicans have actually reduced and forced to retirement a thousand arms. "In the last, or one, or, as we prefer to call it, the present Congress, the Cleveland administration has actually recommended that the land office had recommended a further reduction of 4,000,000 acres now held by greedy corporations? Continuing, General Stevenson said:

"Where are engaged in honest, fairly endeavor by the hard labor of his hands to earn bread for himself and his family be a protect indirect in the tariff. As no period in our history has a class of people been so grievously taxed for the benefit of the people as at present. And at no time

BOYNE, Oct. 9.—After a period of ten days of very cold and almost constant rainy weather, the clouds have disappeared, and from appearances, we are likely to have a season of pleasant weather, which will give the farmers a good chance to do their fall work.

There was a republican meeting held in the Mountain school house on Wednesday evening last. R. L. Corbet of Boyne, and F. W. Mayne of Charlevoix were the speakers; but owing to the threatening rain, and the fact that we are nearly all democrats in this section, there was not a very large attendance. But notwithstanding their politics, we were glad to have an opportunity to listen to the ideas of the opposite party. The speeches by both gentlemen were very good, bringing out a few facts of what free trade would do; but when one of the speakers came to speak of the President, it seemed as though he could not say enough against him, and of course spoiled the whole speech.

Chas. Bedwin went to Boyne Saturday on business.

A good democratic speech. On Friday morning last bills arrived here announcing that there would be a democratic speech held in the Freeman school house (otherwise known as the Mountain school house) on Saturday evening. The speakers were Milton M. Burnham of East Jordan, John Nicholls and A. D. Cruickshank of Charlevoix. The meeting opened at about 7.30 by Mr. Nicholls, who dwelt quite largely on the tariff question. He is a good speaker, a well-informed man upon political matters, and brought out many facts pertaining to the best interests of the American people; his speech contained much good information. After Mr. Nicholls concluded, Mr. Cruickshank took the platform with a cheer from the audience whose attention he held for over an hour, also bringing out many facts in regard to the "tariff question," the "whisky bottle," etc. Mr. Cruickshank's speech created considerable enthusiasm, and we do believe we could have spent the remainder of the night listening to the many facts of how the republican party would carry on the government, how they would protect the laboring man from the tariff of of whisky and tobacco; let the drunkard have his drink free, double duty on knives that there are enough homes in the land now made destitute by the cursed poison, without a tariff to help shovel into the free list. Mr. Cruickshank's talk undoubtedly surprised a few of our republicans, at least their countenances showed signs of surprise. Following Mr. Cruickshank, Mr. Burnham gave a history of his younger days, of his boyhood, and later on how he craved for a farm and how he went about to get one, practicing law to get money enough, and finally purchased one near East Jordan. He also stated how he could buy farming implements, lumber to build a house, and furniture to put in it, so much cheaper if it were not for the high tariff. After referring to the tariff question, he referred to the county officers calling attention to our needs in that direction, sawing over in his estimation the best men for the transaction of our county business.

After listening to his address, we think we are safe in saying that Milton M. Burnham is the most desirable man for Judge of Probate of any in the canvass. He is a clear headed lawyer, enough of a farmer to sympathize with the farmer's needs, and altogether a safe and careful business man. After a vote of thanks to the speakers the meeting adjourned at a quarter to eleven, all being more than pleased to have an opportunity to hear such good speeches. The school house was well filled and all listened attentively.

Harriet.—On Tuesday Sept. 25, at East Jordan, by the Rev. E. A. Bryant, Samuel Hayden, formerly of this place, now of East Jordan, and Miss Maggie Lloyd of Ironton. Congratulations to the happy couple.

Dugal Galbraith has purchased the house and lot adjoining the postoffice at Ironton of Mr. Webb of East Jordan, and intends going into the store business in the near future.

Wilson.

Oct. 8.—Weather pleasant.

Saw mill is running again for a few days.

Mr. Deitz has invested in a span of musings.

Potato harvest has begun and promises better than expected.

Town board met at Mr. Newvill's one day last week.

Miss Poly Ticks is the only Miss that receives much attention now a-days.

Chas. Hudkins is still very ill, but hopes are entertained for his recovery.

Sydney Burley's baby is so much better that they believe it will finally recover.

Supervisor Hudkins will spend the week at Boyne, at a supervisors meeting.

Chas. Knuttel is selling off his stock and fodder, preparatory to moving to Wisconsin.

Mr. Cain is going across the lake near Hipp's to winter with Joe Stacer who has recently moved there.

We heard the cry of "fresh beef" on our streets last last week. It came from A. B. Goucher, Esq.

We have heretofore forgotten to mention that Ed. Nowland and Jason Lewis have each built a new house this summer.

Barnard.

BARNARD, Oct. 9.—A very heavy frost here last night.

Mr. Gornell raised a frame barn today.

There will be no preaching in Barnard Sunday.

Rev. Whitman will preach at Hilton's school house Sunday at the usual hour, as he has taken that appointment.

William Rice is preparing to build a house on his farm.

Burgess.

BURGESS, Oct. 9.—Heavy frost last night that cooks things generally.

Misses Lillian and Alta Cram of Undine, have been visiting their aunt, Mrs. Hamlin, the past week.

Mr. Austin has traded his ox team for a span of horses.

Amos Webster is home for a visit for a week or so.

Miss Lena Cooper spent a part of last week with Miss Nellie Burnett.

Atwood.

ATWOOD, Oct. 10.—S. A. Brown was on the sick list last week.

The M. E. church was dedicated last Sunday. Elder Sherman preached. Three hundred dollars was asked of the congregation and they responded by pledging over four hundred. The church is a neat and tasty building and is heated by a Marshal furnace.

A New Bill in October.

It can truly be said of the republican senate that its bill to reduce the tariff is offered not in the eleventh month but at the eleventh hour. It is a death bed confession that the dogma of June in Chicago was hoxy. It is a devil's conversion, and as such only should be considered.

Time will be thrown away in making painful comparison of this bill, the Mills bill, and the act of 1883. The project of Morrill and Sherman's committee, if passed, would reduce taxes. But it will not pass. The making of the promise to the ear is all that is now open to useful comment. That promise has been delayed until the last moment. It traverses the McKinley platform, and there is satisfaction to reformers in the feeling that the agents and attorneys of high tariff have have seen the necessity of abandoning bravado and once more resorting to hypocrisy.

What is a republican promise to reduce the tariff, made in October, and open to the usual process of debate, reconsideration, conference, and general tergiversation? The Herald can tell all men that, so far as the senate may go, it is the veil of an increase of bounty to the protected manufacturers who are represented in the senate and its financial committee. This is not the first time John Sherman has affixed his name to a bill that made reductions. When the bills of 1882 appeared in both houses the duty on nearly everything was printed lower. Up to the hour the two bills were republished and the whole matter given to a conference committee—a Council of Ten—the figures all tended to make men believe the war tariff was to go. But taxes that both houses sent into conference at less than $15.00 came forth $17, and the result of the act of 1883 was was to raise the percentage of custom tax from about 40 per cent to 47 per cent in 1887. In both 1873 and 1874 the rate was but 38 per per cent. Yet John Sherman, then as now, when he brought in the senate bill in 1882, promised rates that should be less than the war duty of eight per cent, and where he then advanced that duty to 47 per cent he will now advance it to any further figure the manufacturers may desire. In his policy, if an increase be decided upon, a decrease is made as a beginning.

The deceit, duplicity and false stewardship of the republican senators, so often revealed to public observation, are again offered to the electorate as an aid to the success of General Harrison. It is hoped by the western leaders, who have rejected Blaine's plan of effronery, that the voters will believe the republican party wants reduction of taxes exactly as the democrats hope for it.

Jeffersonian republicans will be forced to contrast the promise of John Sherman, made in October and thwarting the Auditorium platform, with the actual performance of the democratic party, as recorded in the Congressional Record for the Mills Tariff Bill passed the house.

Whatever the house has done, is done. Whatever John Sherman has promised will certainly not be done unless it be carried through against his vote and influence. Chicago Herald.

THE WEEK'S FOR ONE DOLLAR CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

The Real Secret of the unparalleled success of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS may be found in two distinguishing characteristics, which more than anything else have contributed to its remarkable growth.

FIRST—It is a Daily Paper for Busy People. The people of the busy West appreciate, by the possession of a wide knowledge of the world's daily doings, but they are too busy to waste valuable time in searching through a cumbrous "blanket-sheet" newspaper for the nut meat of art, literature, science, religion, politics, and the thousand-and-one things which make up modern civilization. They want news—all the news—but they don't want it commended in an overpowering mass of the trivial and inconsequential. It is because THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is a daily paper and not a daily bluff, that its circulation is over "a million a week."

SECOND—It is a Democratic Independent Newspaper. The people demand a fair, impartial, fearless presentation of the news of the week, and gives it free from the lash of partisan bias. With no mere political bias to govern, it is a "daily" the impartial, independent newspaper and yet it is a "daily democratic" paper, and it has been one of every shade of political faith; and this is why THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS has to day a circulation of over "a million a week."

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS offers all these two comprehensive elements of popularity, a third, in its unparalleled reduction of price to ONE DOLLAR A DAY. It always large enough,—never too large. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is for sale by all newsboxes at One Cent per copy, or will be mailed, postage paid, for Ec per year, or 45 cents per month. The former and moderate one now afford, as well as the merchant and professional man, to have his metropolitan daily.

THE NEWS RECORD.

A SUMMARY OF THE EVENTFUL HAPPENINGS OF A WEEK.

The Latest News as Flashed Over the Wires from All Parts of the World—Regarding Politics, Religion, Casualties, Commerce, and Industry.

CONGRESS BEATS THE RECORD.

The Present Session the Longest in the History of the Country.

When the two houses of Congress were called to order at 12 o'clock Monday, October 1, the session became the longest by twenty-four hours in American history. The longest preceding session was that of 1850, the year of the Missouri compromise, which was adjourned at noon of September 30. The session of 1868, following the impeachment proceedings against President Johnson, continued later, the adjournment having taken place Nov. 10, but as a matter of fact Congress took a six-weeks' recess from July 27, and never afterward had a quorum or attempted to transact any business. The present House of Representatives has not had a quorum for several weeks, but such business as could be done "by unanimous consent" has been done, and as one of the regular annual appropriation bills—the general deficiency—is still before the conference of the two houses, it can not yet be said that the year's regular work for either house is finished.

THE UNKNOWN SLAYER.

The London Murderer Adds Two More Victims to His List.

A London (England) special states that that city has again been startled by the news that two more murders have been added to the list of mysterious crimes that have recently been committed in Whitechapel. The two victims, as in the former cases, were dissolute women of the poorest class. That the motive of the murderer was not robbery is shown by the fact that no attempt was made to despoil the bodies. The first victim had her throat severed from ear to ear, the final evidently being scared away before time for mutilating the body. The second—the body of an unfortunate woman—had been disemboweled, the throat cut, and the nose severed. The heart and lungs had been thrown aside, and the entrails were twisted into the gaping wound around the neck.

WEATHER AND CROP REPORTS.

A Favorable Week for Cotton-Picking—Rains in New England.

The following is the weather-crop bulletin for the week ended Saturday, Sept. 29:

The temperature during the week was decidedly favorable in the Southern and Middle and Western United States, the average daily temperature ranging from 7 to 10 degrees below the normal in all districts, but it was generally favorable for all growing crops in all sections except New England, where heavy rains were reported as unfavorable. Throughout the cotton belt the week has been favorable for the ripening and the stripping of the cotton crop. In Louisiana the conditions were favorable for sugar and the harvesting of rice; and generally throughout the Gulf States the weather was favorable for cotton picking and the sending of wheat, fall plowing and sowing being general. In the Gulf States and the tobacco regions of Tennessee and Kentucky, North Carolina and Virginia, and in the Middle Atlantic and New England States, which will probably result in some injury to the crop. In Ohio and Indiana the frosts were severe enough to do threatened sections in time to enable those receiving them to secure the greater portion of the tobacco crop not previously cut.

VALUABLE PROPERTY AT STAKE.

Two Men Claim the Title to Improved Lands Estimated to be Worth $8,000,000.

Robert A. and John F. Annett claim to possess a deed which gives them a clear title to a valuable tract of land in Cattaraugus County, New York. The piece includes 968 acres, nearly every foot of which is highly improved, many handsome residences having been built thereon. It is believed to be worth in the aggregate about $8,000,000. Three railroads run directly through the property, which also takes in the whole of one town a few miles from Elmira. The claimants are preparing to bring suit to recover the property.

MORMONS MOVING TOWARD MEXICO.

Large Tracts of Agricultural Lands Purchased from Private Owners.

The movement of the Mormons toward Mexico is assuming definite shape and large proportions. They have quietly bought from private owners large tracts of agricultural lands in Northern Chihuahua, principally in the valley of the Casas Grande River, and they are negotiating for more. Several flourishing villages exist in that neighborhood already, the principal one being called Pedrito Juan. These colonists are the precursors of greater bodies in the future, and are very quiet and unobtrusive.

Renomed for Congress.

The Democrats of the Fifth Illinois District have nominated for Congress James Herrington, of Greene. D. B. Sherwood, of Elgin, declined to make the race.

Howard University Officers.

The board of Governors of Howard University, at their meeting, elected as Directors William O. Bunell, Samuel A. Green, Charles F. Adams, Charles C. Beaman, Augustus Homenway, Robert T. Peabody, Stephen M. Nye and Henry W. Torrey. The Hon. Charles W. Codman was chosen President of the Board.

Maine Election Returns.

At Augusta (Me.) special dispatch of Sept. 29 says: "The full official returns of the late election now in the State Department out down the Republican plurality from 19,490 to 16,053. The Democratic gain over 1884 was 3,229, or 5.10 per cent., and the Republican gain, 1,525, or 2 1-10 per cent."

MILTON WESTON PARDONED.

The Long Struggle to Free the Capitalist from Prison Successful.

A Harrisburg (Pa.) special is as follows: Milton Weston, the Chicago millionaire who was serving a five-year sentence in the Western Penitentiary for counterfeiting, pardoned in the death of a man named Haymaker during a night between 200 employes of the two men over the possession of a piece of land in western Pennsylvania about four years ago, has been released from prison.

In giving their reasons for the pardon the board review the case, going into many details of the trial. They were "bound by the evidence to controvert the allegation of Weston that he was not in the city of Pittsburg at the time of the alleged crime, and in his efforts to maintain what he believed to be his rights. It has been difficult, so to speak, to see Milton Weston was more guilty than others who were present and participated with him. Witnesses, prominent people, testified that Weston was a law-abiding and peaceable citizen. Weston at once returned to his home in Chicago.

HEADED FOR THE CAPITAL.

Prominent Congressional Nominations Recently Made.

The Second District Democrats of Illinois renominated Frank Lasher, and the Third District Democrats nominated M. R. Fresenburg.

The Eighth Massachusetts District Republicans have nominated the Hon. Frederick L. Greenhalge.

The Republicans of the Tenth Ohio District have renominated Congressman John Romels.

Congressman Charles S. Barkley, Republican, has been renominated in the Thirteenth New York District.

Congressman Asher G. Caruth (Dem.), of Louisville, Ky., has been renominated.

The First District Democratic Congressional Convention of Massachusetts resulted in a split, the Delano faction (sixty-nine delegates) nominating George Delano, and the Cummings faction (sixty-one delegates) nominating John W. Cummings for Congress.

Massachusetts—First District, Charles B. Randall (Rep.); Ninth, Edward Burnett (Dem.), renominated; Tenth, John E. Russell (Dem.), renominated.

Michigan—1. M. Stephenson, of Menominee (Rep.).

Kentucky—Seventh District, A. M. Swope (Rep.).

Pennsylvania—Twenty-fourth District, Jefferson Immel (Dem.); of Washington.

TRADE AND CROPS.

The Agricultural Outlook Most Flattering—Large Increase of Values.

In their review for last week, Dun & Co. say:

Doubt about the corn crop has vanished. Estimates vary, but it is doubtless the largest crop ever raised. The increase of acreage is not so obvious in this crop far outweighs in value the loss in cotton, which is now seen to be quite less than the yield of cotton, but the yield of oats is also the largest on record, and the yield of hay and potatoes excellent. It is safe to say that this year's agricultural produce will exceed by far any one hundred millions of money than last year's, at average prices of both years. Cotton, 7 cents, compared by artificial prices. In just proportion prices have yielded but little, and manufacturing lands behind last year. Corn has fallen but one cent, notwithstanding the great increase, and wheat, 10 cents, while cattle is overstocked, and prices are so low as to check movement. The best and also most active trade is large. The iron market is still at Philadelphia, but weaker at Pittsburg, where Bessemer pig has fallen to $17 at furnace. Imports. The cotton crop is about three weeks late, and forwarding is delayed by stoppage of traffic. All Western points beyond the danger of fever continues to report increased business, and Southern merchants give collections in hand. Money is generally in ample supply, but the stringency increases at Cleveland and the demand is strong at St. Louis and Milwaukee. Kansas City reports loans very hard to negotiate, and Omaha reports money in Omaha, against improve exceeded expects by $1,000,000, and the excess for eight months was $67,000,000. From New York the exports for the last four weeks have been 4 per cent. lower, but 4 per cent. higher than those of 1887. The business failures for the week are 201, the corresponding week of 1887 the figures were 208.

STOLE THOUSANDS.

The Attorney of the New York Produce Exchange Accused of Grave Crimes.

Another case of enormous forgeries on mortgages has been disclosed on the New York Produce Exchange, and the sum involved, so far as ascertained, is $156,000, or more than half the amount stolen by Bedloe. The fraud was operated through the gratuity fund of the Exchange, and the man supposed to be the perpetrator of the crime is William R. Foster, Jr., who has an office in the building and is an attorney for the Exchange.

ADVERSE TO MORMONISM.

Utah Should Not Be Admitted to Statehood Until Polygamy Is Abolished.

The majority report of the Utah Commission, signed by G. L. D. Godfrey, A. B. Williams, and Arthur L. Thomas, has been filed in Washington, as follows:

It recommends that Utah be not admit-ed to the Union until such time as the Mormon people shall manifest by their future acts that they have abandoned polygamy in good faith, and not in the mere formal manner in which they have in the past attempted to deceive the United States people as to the practice of polygamy. It says the convention which a year ago proposed some terms upon which an appeal was made to Congress for admission to the Union was held without authority from any proper source. It is further asserted that the proposed constitution is silent with respect to the office of polygamy, and the Commissioners are of the opinion that the Government should not be deprived of the right of marriage which it now holds, and which has been secured at much expense and trouble. They also doubt that no harm can result from the admission of the Territory. It is also stated in the report that the Mormon Church is now in more parts of Utah than their organization recently held, indorsed the position taken in the two civil reports. The report concludes that the Mormon Church is committed to a policy which, in effect, will prevent the operation of the public school system in Utah. During the year there have been 1,087 arrests for violations of the polygamy statutes, 331 pleaded for unlawful cohabitation, and 241 convictions.

ONE THOUSAND LIVES LOST.

Valparaiso, Chili, Flooded by the Breaking of an Artificial Lake.

Advices from Valparaiso, Chili, tell of a terrible calamity which occurred there recently. An artificial pond, 800 feet above the level of the city, burst, flooding the valley lengthwise and several streets with a wave twelve feet high. Shops were deluged and the contents destroyed, and houses were swept away and their inhabitants drowned or bruised to death. It is estimated that from a thousand lives were lost and that the damage to property will reach $1,000,000. Hundreds of the victims were buried in one day. The Chilian Congress has voted $300,000 for the relief of the sufferers, and the new hospital wards have been opened to shelter the homeless. The streets were impassable four days after the disaster.

NEW FAST MAIL.

Twenty-seven Hours Only Between Chicago and New York.

Postmaster General Dickinson, acting by W. L. Bancroft, General Superintendent Railway Mail Service, has completed arrangements by which a new fast-mail train will be put on between Chicago and New York. This train is known as the Chicago and New York Fast Mail Line, and is scheduled as follows: Leave Chicago 8:30 a. m.; arrive Buffalo, 11:45 p. m.; Albany, about 7 a. m.; Boston, about 9 a. m., reaching New York at 12:30 p. m., being twenty-seven hours in transit from Chicago to New York.

New Presidential Postoffices.

Among the postoffices established to the Presidential class are the following:

Dakota, Minot; Indiana, Huntingburgh, Ind.; Iowa, Ackley, Bloomfield, Cedar Falls, Coalville, Horton, Lenox, Lipsbie, Mechanicsville, Pangor; Minnesota, Warren, Wineskeag; Ore-gon, Oswego; Texas, Dallas, Calder; Utah, Ogden; Michigan, Rhine under, Rice Lake; West Virginia, Ceredo.

Trains Abandoned.

Advices to the Postoffice Department at Washington say that, owing to the yellow-fever scares, the running of trains in Alabama and Mississippi has been abandoned; that the whole region is panic-stricken; and that "the people along the Vicksburg and Shreveport Road seem to be one vast mob."

A Prominent Wedding.

Miss Mary Campbell Schofield, daughter of General Schofield, was married to Mr. Avery L. Andrews, Fifth Artillery, U. S. A., at Governor's Island, N. Y. Gen. Sherman was one of the notable guests and kissed the bride.

Three Boys Drowned.

Joseph Bartelme, aged 17, Henry Bartelme, aged 15, sons of Louis Edward, and Maurice Hugh, an orphan lad, were drowned off Dalhousie, N. B., by the upsetting of their boat. The bodies were recovered.

Shot Himself.

William Syms, baggage master on the eight-express on the Fort Wayne Road which left Chicago the other morning, was found dead in a car at Alliance, having shot himself through the head. No cause for the suicide is known.

A Bigamist Sentenced.

J. W. Brown has been convicted of bigamy at Detroit, Mich., seven of his alleged thirty-nine wives having testified against him. He has been sentenced to seven years and six months imprisonment.

Impressive Ceremonies.

Archbishop Ireland was invested with the pallium in the Roman Catholic Cathedral at St. Paul, Minn., recently, the ceremonies being of an impressive character.

Fatal Boiler Explosion.

Jesse Miller, of Marion, Ind., whose fourteen-year-old son was run over and killed by a train on the Toledo, St. Louis and Kansas City Railroad, is suing that company for $10,000.

Lively Stepping.

U-Bet, the pacer, is reported to have covered a quarter of a mile in 29 seconds at the fair grounds in Kansas City.

Fatally Burned.

By the explosion of a gasoline stove at Wichita, Kan., Mrs. Mary Sanford was fatally burned.

Democratic Representative Convention.

A democratic representative convention will be held at the opera house Charlevoix, on Friday, Oct. 19, 1888, at 2 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating a candidate for representative to the state legislature, for the district composed of Charlevoix, Antrim and Manistee counties, and to transact such other business as may be properly brought before said convention.

Dated October 5th, 1888.

J. MILO EATON,
PETER JACKSON,
JAMES DUNLEVY,
Representative Committee.

"A TARIFF is a tax.—Allen G. Thurman.

It is a condition which confronts us—not a theory.—Grover Cleveland.

"UNNECESSARY taxation is unjust taxation."—President Cleveland's Letter of Acceptance.

"We favor the entire repeal of the internal taxes (on whiskey and tobacco) rather than surrender of any part of our protective system."—Chicago platform.

"The platform is in entire harmony with my views."—Ben Harrison.

THE surplus revenue now remaining in the treasury not only furnishes conclusive proof of unjust taxation, but its existence constitutes a separate and independent measure in the property of the people.

The vast accumulation of idle funds represent that much money, drawn from the circulating medium of the country which is needed in the channels of trade and business.—President Cleveland's Letter of Acceptance.

WE are annually collecting at our custom houses and by means of our internal revenue system many millions in excess of all legitimate public needs. As a consequence there now remains in the national treasury a surplus of more than one hundred and thirty million dollars.

No better evidence could be furnished that the people are exceedingly taxed.—Grover Cleveland's Letter of Acceptance.

Under labor men, remember how Frank Fogg negotiated for your barter and sale to the republicans and repudiate the whole black scheme.

THE republican papers are now kept busy trying to explain that the great advance in wheat and wool is not owing to the threatened tax reduction.—Burlington (Iowa) Gazette.

MR. HARRISON followed the path his party blazed out for him like a calf the footsteps of its mother. The president marked out the road for his party to follow, and placed himself in the van of the reform column. —Alta California (Dem.)

GENERAL HARRISON criticises secretary Fairchild for depositing part of the surplus where the people can borrow it. Yet John Sherman deposited in one favored bank, when secretary, more money than all of them now hold.—Minneapolis News Letter.

ALL the republicans want is to get at the surplus, and then how they would gorge themselves on "Star Route" contracts, navy jobs, whiskey ring steals, Black Friday manipulations of the stock market, land grabs, railroad schemes, and easting their anchor to windward.—Reading Telegram.

WE really think the republican papers ought to pay a little attention to Grandson Harrison, just for form's sake. This adulation of Blaine is well enough in its way, but, after all, the real candidate is one Benjamin Harrison, of Indianapolis. He is a truly good man, and his grandfather was very respectable.—Boston Globe.

MR. POWDERLY claims that he has been offered the commissionership of the department of labor if he will "pull the Knights of Labor off Harrison's back in Indiana." Considering the republican situation, an offer of a federal office in the event of Harrison's election is not very tempting.

THE APLIN wax just in the man to transact the commercial business of buying the leaders of the union labor party in Michigan. Every toiler in Michigan should resent the insult to their honesty by voting against Aplin and for honest Bartley Breen for auditor general.

A GERMAN citizen near Reading bought a McCormick binder this season, paying $140 therefor. In writing to his friends in Germany he told them of his new purchase, and what it cost him. What was his surprise to learn from them in reply that the same machine could be bought there for $60. That's the way the American farmer is protected! That is an actual occurrence.—Hillsdale Democrat.

THE Chicago Herald sees much encouragement for Cleveland and Thurman in the political aspect of New York city. It is the history of presidential elections that the more city tickets there may be in the field, the greater will be the vote that is called out, every ballot carrying the national candidates, as well as local nominees. It will be so in 1888, and all the better for Cleveland and Hill.

THE New York sugar trust has forced the sugar refinery firm of Decastro & Downer to the wall, and as a result 1,000 men are thrown out of employment, says the Detroit Free Press. Perhaps any one of these 1,000 idle men will not stop to think that some one in authority ought to stop this system of oppression. Mr. Blaine would think so too if he were in the place of any one of these discharged workingmen.

WHEAT, corn, wool, and other farm products, are up, and climbing higher! Lumber holds a firm market, wages are good—the whole country seems to be fairly prospering, and this, too, in face of the great republican scarecrow of "Free Trade!" The fact of it is, the intelligence of the American people is stronger than the "clap-trap" of the politician.—Big Rapids Herald.

AT a recent meeting of the national democratic committee, a complete canvass of all the states shows that Cleveland will surely hold all the states which gave him a majority in 1884, and will gain Michigan and Illinois, besides showing democratic gains in all the western states and most of the eastern. New York City alone will increase the vote for Cleveland fully 25,000, while the state does not show any decided republican gain.

FOUR years ago, P. T. Barnum, the great showman, said if the democratic party was successful, he would be glad to take fifty cents on the dollar for his property. Well, Cleveland was elected, and Barnum to-day asks twenty five per cent more than he ever did for his real estate in Eliza Junior. His great competitor in the show business, Adam Forepaugh, supported Blaine and Logan four years ago. This fall he is working hard for Cleveland, and has $30,000 to bet that Grover will be re-elected.

WHAT honest men there may be in this state who have heretofore identified themselves with the union labor party must now see that they are the dupes of political scoundrels, who are leading them in the interest and at the bidding of the republican managers for a price. All old greenbackers in the state should rally together under the honest, earnest leadership of Gen. Innes for Burt and the whole union ticket, and thus severely rebuke the corrupt republican state bourbon ring that stoops to the cesspools of politics for odorous weapons of defence against the democrats in the person of such rotten scum as Potter and Fogg.—Grand Rapids Leader.

Bribery and Theft.

Burglary for felonious possession of private letters is a favorite scheme with the republicans this election year. The house of Hon. Bartley Breen at Menominee was broken into twice within a short time in the absence of the family, and his private papers ransacked for letters. No property of value was carried away, showing that the criminals were there for the special purpose of stealing private letters for political use. Either republican managers themselves is person took charge of this villainous job or else they had hirelings to do it, especially instructed to steal nothing but letters. Postmaster General Dickinson has had his desk at Washington ransacked by these thieving hirelings of the republicans for private letters and the letters they obtained immediately appeared in the New York Tribune, showing the close connection of the thief with the head center of republican organs and leaders. And now we find the same line of criminal business being pursued by the republicans in this district against Ford. It is a new and startling feature in politics and shows the reckless villainy into which the republican leaders have sunk. Could men capable of such low and mean criminality be capable of serving the people in public places honestly and justly? Honest and just men would scorn such dirty work.—Evening Leader.

Workers Need Protection.

Wheat, corn, wool, and other farm products, are up, and climbing higher! Lumber holds a firm market, wages are good—the whole country seems to be fairly prospering, and this, too, in face of the great republican scarecrow of "Free Trade!" The fact of it is, the intelligence of the American people is stronger than the "clap-trap" of the politician.—Big Rapids Herald.

Questions for Workers.

If high tariffs make high wages why have the workingmen of this country—those in the "protected" industries most of all—been compelled to strike for better wages thousands of times during the last fifteen years?

Why, if the tariff protects, has labor found it necessary to organize for self-protection?

Why, if protection insures abundant employment, have 1,000,000 workingmen suffered enforced idleness at one time, and hundreds of thousands been shut out at frequent intervals?

Why are wages from 30 to 60 per cent higher in the same industries in different states that are all under the same tariff and subjected to free trade among themselves?

Why are wages lower in the so-called protected industries—mining, mills, manufactories, etc—than in other forms of skilled labor—carpenters, masons, printers, etc.?

Why are wages the lowest in the most perfectly "protected" countries of the world—China, Russia, and Spain—and higher in Free-Trade England than in any protected country of Europe?

What section of the tariff law constrains protected manufactures to add the tariff to the wages of their operatives? Do they in fact do this?

Let workingmen think of these things.—New York World.

Vote for Burt and Sweep Clean.

The sneers of the republicans against Mr. Burt's grammar will not go far. Mr. Burt is an intelligent gentleman, thoroughly real up in public affairs. His fitness for governor is far above that of Luce.

He is not a selfish, egotistical old granny without backbone. If elected he will be governor and no junta of politicians will run him. He will be governor in the name and for the whole people. He will reduce taxation by reforms that will protect the people and maintain the high character of Michigan.

But Mr. Burt should not be elected alone. He should be surrounded at Lansing with state officers in sympathy with him. It would be a great mistake for the people to make Mr. Burt governor and expect him to effect reforms with the twigs now left us by our last legislature. Let the people understand that the democratic state ticket is the only ticket that will sweep the state clean.—Ionia Sentinel.

The Republican Platform.

What Monopoly Rule Has Done.

I saw a curious compilation the other day, and here it is: Our total wealth of all kinds is estimated at $45,000,000,000. There are 5 American citizens with private fortunes averaging $50,000,000 each; 50 with $10,000,000; 100 with $5,000,000; 200 with $3,000,000; 500 with $1,000,000, and 1,000 with $500,000. In other words, 1,855 persons own $3,000,000,000, or more than twice as much as all the actual money in the country. A less number of men, not to exceed 1,000—railway magnates, princely bankers and heads of vast protected corporations—have absolute control, equivalent to almost actual ownership of $25,000,000,000 more than 3,000 men controlling $28,000,000,000 of the $45,000,000,000 of wealth in this country.—W. CONTEMPT FOR HARRISON.

"Don't Let That Creature Be Sent to the White House."

Senator Cameron makes no concealment of his hearty contempt for the republican standard bearer. Recently he had Senators Allison and Hale to accompany him to his home for a visit of a few days. In the parlor car on the railroad train was a well known Indiana lawyer and politician, shrewd ability and whose prominence in its state entitles him to be heard. He has twice represented a Republican district in congress. He was not acquainted with Allison and Hale, but knowing Cameron well, accosted him and was introduced to his distinguished companions.

When the four were seated the senior Pennsylvania senator said, and not in a whisper: "Well, do you know I wished to let that creature Harrison carry Indiana?"

The Indiana gentleman was rather surprised, but said, "I know that is the opinion that Indiana is safe for Cleveland."

"Well," said Senator Cameron, earnestly, "you, your friends, and you more closely, for they intend to repeat the 1860 trick upon you. But for Heaven's sake if only as an act of charity, don't let that creature Harrison be sent to the White House."

"Charity? What do you mean?" asked the Indianian, wonderingly.

"I mean he would be so confoundedly lonely," answered the senator from Pennsylvania, emphatically, "that it would be a crime to send him there. No self respecting man who was associated with Harrison in the United States senate would go near him in the event of his election. I certainly would never call upon him. Allison and Hale here may not think it wise to talk so frankly as I do, but they know that what I say is true."

Hale and Allison and Hale also sat by, smiled and said not a word.

The Same in Other Sections.

Algoe, Rusk, Stockbridge and other Republican papers are now engaged in a desperate attempt to fool the farmers of Michigan. The forty lumber and salt millionaires are arranging the twigs more effectively to deceive the rural rotten borough men they have plundered for twenty years. The forty millionaires are satisfied with McKinley's clipping bill. Corn. They will vote for Harrison and Morton set for four more years to which to feather their nests.—Chicago Herald.

A Misrepresentation Exposed.

The act of 1857 became a law on March 6, and the imports, which were $310,432,319 in 1856, immediately jumped up in 1857 to $363,388,054. In the following year they fell off greatly.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Fiscal years ended on June 30. The following year," in which the imports "fell off greatly," was the first after the low tariff of 1857 went into effect.—San Francisco Examiner.

Henry Watterson in New York.

Mr. Watterson is a master of the English language and a most accomplished rhetorician. Those who have read his pruned the natural luxuriance of his style and found his labor lost in the chaste of limpid and unadorned speech. The following extract affords a good example of his simple and straightforward method of handling his subject:

"Fifty years ago free trade was seriously thought of in England is extinct here in America. Actually within fifty years before Cobden and Peel carried their measure of free trade in England. The governments of the United States, with Washington as president and Hamilton as secretary of the treasury, offered to carry on free trade between this country and England, and the offer was rejected by England.

"At the very moment when Mr. Clay gave the term American to the system of protection proposed by him, the English tariff was higher than our tariff, and England was a greater protectionist by much than the United States. All Mr. Clay contended for first, then and thirty odd years, as being quite enough to establish a new industry. But for Heaven's sake, if only as an act of charity, don't let that creature Harrison be sent to the White House."

"Charity? What do you mean?" asked the Indianian, wonderingly.

"I mean he would be so confoundedly lonely," answered the senator from Pennsylvania, emphatically, "that it would be a crime to send him there. No self respecting man who was associated with Harrison in the United States senate would go near him in the event of his election. I certainly would never call upon him. Allison and Hale here may not think it wise to talk so frankly as I do, but they know that what I say is true."

Hale and Allison and Hale also sat by, smiled and said not a word.

Blaine's Burkhalfeight.

Mr. Blaine continues to pour contempt on the Republican platform and the professions of its architects by asserting that "trusts are private affairs," "that they are state issues," and have no place in this campaign." While the Blaine Knight champions trusts and monopolies in this way, Candidate Harrison rests in state and footmen platitudes about protecting labor and the rights of "Hoosier" workmen. Blaine is Burkhalfeight and the spider to the fly.—St. Paul Globe.

FARM AND GARDEN.

TIMELY SUBJECTS TREATED IN A PRACTICAL MANNER.

How and When to Set Out Strawberry Plants—A Convenient Plan for Laying Out Garden Beds—The System of Rows in Field Culture.

A question often asked by amateurs is, "When is the best season to plant out strawberry beds?" All seasons, when the soil is in good condition, in the hands of skillful persons and with care in shading, protecting, etc., are successful, but the months of April and May in the spring, September and October in the fall, throughout the northern states, January, February and March in the south, are periods when the least care is required to insure the greatest success.

DIAGRAM OF STRAWBERRY BED.

The ground being properly prepared, the planting should be in straight rows, using a line, and may be done with a dibble or by furrowing a line lightly with a shovel or double mold board plow, and then drawing the earth in around the plant, as it is placed, with the hands. In extensive field culture the system of rows is the most advantageous, and these should be about three and a half feet apart, with plants one foot apart in the row, to admit of the passage of the horse-shoe cultivator between them.

Cultivators differ in opinion and practice as to the arrangement of plants in beds. In the old days we presented in shows a plan that affords great convenience in a garden plantation and one that is easily employed. The ground is divided into beds of 4 feet wide, each of which may contain three rows of plants, the two outside rows 6 inches from the edge of the beds. The plants may be set 12 inches apart in the row, except in the case of very strong growing plants, when 18 inches apart will be found preferable. Thus, a bed 30 feet long and 4 feet wide will contain from 40 to 60 plants. Where there are several of these beds, it will be a good plan to separate them by walks of 2 feet in width.

The plants should be of one season's growth, from the seed or runner, and well rooted.

PERFECT—PISTILLATE—STAMINATE.

In setting strawberry beds it ought to be borne in mind that there are three kinds of blossoms, the male, female and hermaphrodite. Hardly any varieties are now grown that are purely staminate or male, they are entirely worthless except for the pollen. The pistillate or female varieties are numerous, such as Crescent, Manchester, Rubach, etc. These, properly pollenized, are the most abundant bearers.

The hermaphrodite, such as Wilson, Cut Leaf, Charles Downing, etc., that have a perfect blossom, are productive without any other kind.

Select, if possible, a moist time for transplanting strawberries. Spread out the roots and cover them with moist earth, so as not to expose them to the drying wind from everything the liquid toward the roots and cover them with earth.

Important Points in Wheat Culture.

A few years ago an experiment was conducted at Cornell university with a view to deciding the proper depth for planting wheat. Seven plots were seeded, in 1 at 1 to 1 inch, No. 2 at 1 to 1½ inch, No. 3 at 1½ to 2, and so on to plot 7, which was planted at 6 to 6½ inches. The result gained from it was concluded that the seed placed at 4 to 4½ of an inch produced by far the strongest plants, and that depths of not less than 3 or more than 5 inches are probably the extremes for wheat to secure the best results.

In the rut is shown a wheat plant from seed sown at a depth of 1 to 2 of an inch, and one sown at a depth of 5 to 6½ inches. It will be observed that the wheat plant tends to spread its roots just below the surface of the soil. When the English tariff was higher than our tariff, and England was a greater protectionist by much than the United States. All Mr. Clay contended for first, then and thirty odd years, as being quite enough to establish a new industry. But for Heaven's sake, if only as an act of charity, don't let that creature Harrison be sent to the White House." the Republican platform is contending for protection to establish infant industries now fifty, sixty and one hundred years of age.

Having first secured the attention of his hearers by a number of delightfully humorous sallies, he proceeded to dispatch the serious business for which he had accepted the invitation of the Young Men's Democratic club. He made it clear that for the first time in our history the doctrine of protection is now proclaimed as a principle and not as an expedient. Until the latter day Republicans who assumed to be wiser in their generation than the illustrious founders of the party, asserted the contrary, protection had been urged as an incident of the system of custom revenue, and not as the main object of it. But the political legatees of the deceased Republican fathers have made the question of protection superior to the question of revenue and seek to establish the utterly fallacious proposition that the existence of a high tariff is the chief cause of our industrial prosperity and our overall rates of wages.

He demolished this superstition by quoting citations going to prove that under high tariff and low tariff and peace tariff and war tariff we have had both good and bad times; but the two great historic facts which wholly overthrew the Republican argument are that the country's prosperity reached the high water mark during the decade embraced between the years 1850 and 1860 when the Walker or low tariff was in operation, while the protective schedule adopted in 1861 was followed in 1873 by a season of widespread ruin and disaster unequaled by any previous commercial calamity in our experience.—Brooklyn Eagle.

FALL FEEDING OF MILCH COWS.

When Shelter and Extra Feeding of the Cows Pays Best.

The pastures begin to fail, as a rule, the latter part of July, from which time soiling in part, either with green corn fodder, lucerne, millet, oats or clover, must be resorted to for keeping up a flow of milk until cows go to bed the aftermath, that the flow of milk may be kept up, for if cows are allowed to fall off when the pastures fail, it is next to impossible to bring them back again by fall feeding.

As the season advances and occasional frosts occur, cows are very liable to fall off in their milk yield, if precautions are not taken to prevent it. Not only has the grass lost much of its nutritive value, but cold storms and frosty nights reduce the general tone of the animal's system. It is wise, therefore, at this season to use a little bran or ground grain, or a little meal in preference to home the milk temperature is not very low. A cow in milk is very susceptible to changes in the weather, as all scientific dairymen must know.

Remember that at no season of the year does stock, and especially milch cows, require more care than during the cold, stormy weather liable to come in the autumn. Shelter and extra feeding pays at such a time, for what shelter is lost during the fall is seldom regained throughout the entire winter. Good shelter is economy in that it saves feed, for every one knows or ought to know that unless an animal is kept warm by artificial means, a large percentage of its food goes to furnish warmth. This subject has been so many times more than once before that additional remarks seem superfluous. So no more will be added except a quotation from an good authority as Willard's "Practical Dairy Husbandry."

The secretions are always disturbed by coldness, that cause pain or uneasiness, and every shiver of a half frozen cow will make itself felt in the milk pail. It will pay, therefore, be a matter of economy for dairymen to begin feeding cabbages the tops of roots, or small quantities of grain, just as soon as the grasses of pasture have been touched with frost. A daily allowance of bran, shorts or ground feed of barley or oats, or oats and corn, in the proportion of two parts oats to one of corn, will be of great service in keeping up a flow of milk and at the same time keeping the animal in health and condition.

Remedy for Leaf Eating Insects.

For all leaf eating insects—as canker worms, tent caterpillars, forest tent caterpillars, tussock moths, and a host of others which attack our fruit and shade trees as well as many of our shrubs—one of the best and most effective remedies is to shower the trees with Paris green or London purple in water, says Professor C. H. Fernald. The method adopted by the fruit growers in New York state is to put into empty kerosene oil barrels, holding about fifty gallons each, in a wagon and fill them with water. Then they take a pound of London purple for each barrel, first mixing it well in a pail of water, and pour it into the barrel. The wagon is then driven along the windward side of the row of trees. If there is much wind, and with a fountain pump having a fine hose attached the liquid is thrown over the trees in a fine mist till the leaves begin to drip. The water in the barrels must be stirred constantly to prevent the poison from settling. Great care is also taken to prevent the wind from carrying the liquid toward the men or horses. In rainy weather they have to be protected by rubber coats and hats. With two teams and four men they are able to spray about 400 trees an hour, and the cost is set at a few cents a tree for trees properly planted having been made all the way from three cents to ten cents per tree.

Saving Seed Corn.

Experience teaches the value of saving seed corn, no matter from what source, whether in the ear or shelled. I have been drying in the fall and keeping in a dry place, but have found it quite troublesome during winter, is the surest way of preserving it. A novel method of saving seed is practiced by Southern Farmer as follows:

"My method of saving and keeping seed corn consists in having before me and I have practiced for over forty years without a single failure, and to my mind it is as follows: When husking I select the portion of the ear that grew from the ear which I keep in one corner of the wagon box, and when I get home I place it in a dry place till thoroughly dry, when I shell it and scatter it for first three days and then vessels, like old wash boilers, punched full of holes to admit air, but which exclude mice. I find I can better protect the corn from mice when shelled than when on the ear. After being so shelled I give it to the dryest and warmest place in the house, where I have placed a tier of old tin boilers at a small cost by attending auction sales of household goods."

Arrangement of Flower Beds.

The Revue Horticole calls attention to the fact that the formal arrangement of plants has been abandoned in the flower beds seen this year in the city of Paris. Such beds are now usually surrounded with a formal row of plants of one variety, the remainder, except in the case where the bed is divided into compartments by means of rows of color, being entirely filled with various combinations of flowering or foliage plants, grouped naturally and without formal arrangement.

Here and There.

According to one report the wheat crop for 1888 in Manitoba will be the largest ever grown in that province.

The opinion prevails to a large extent that no equal has yet appeared to the Australian seeding and earlier sorts of grapes adapted to New England.

At a recent meeting of the Massachusetts Horticultural society a new white pansy, semi-double, the stamens having been changed into petals, was counted among the novelties.

From the department of agriculture comes the report that Paris is the most popular winter resort for invalids, occupying nearly one third of the area sown.

An experiment station to be located at Washington, D. C., will, among other work, publish each week the results of the experiments made at the various stations throughout the country as may prove of practical value to the average farmer.

It has been announced that the rules of the American Pomological society will govern the exhibition of fruits at the Augusta national exposition, Augusta, Ga., in October and November next.

WHAT SOWN AT DIFFERENT DEPTHS.

On the subject of commercial fertilizers the Wool Burd New Yorker gives the following advice: Buy of any well known fertilizer firm a "complete" fertilizer for wheat, and state whether your soil is light or sandy. Do not buy any incomplete fertilizer unless you have good reason for believing that your soil does not need a complete fertilizer. Bone dust, your land needs bone; probably it needs potash; probably it needs nitrogen; and it also probably needs all, in which case any one alone will not pay. Sow it broadcast before harrowing, at the rate of not less than 500 pounds per acre.

Seeding Land to Grass.

American Cultivator reports that those who have tried the method of seeding their land to grass in August or September without sowing any grain with the grass seed, have been pleased with the result if the land was in good condition. That is, sufficiently well fertilized and rich enough for a seed bed.

AT HEADQUARTERS.

WHERE THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE DOES ITS WORK.

A Palatial Home in the Heart of New York—How to Reach It—The Officials—A Cellar Full of Documents—Encouraging Facts and Figures.

The house occupied by the national Democratic committee at No. 10 West Twenty-ninth street, New York, almost adjoins the Sturtevant house, which is on the corner of that street and Broadway. On the opposite corner is the Gilsey house. Like nearly all the other houses in the street, the one used by the committee is of brown stone. It is four stories high, with a basement. It was occupied by the committee July 15. Previous to that date it was unoccupied for some time, although well fitted as a residence and in a desirable neighborhood. It is only ten doors from Fifth avenue, and there are a few shade trees opposite.

EXTERIOR VIEW.

So far as the location goes the national committee could not have bettered themselves. The Broadway cars and the Fifth avenue stages are only half a block distant each way, while the Sixth avenue elevated railroad is a block and a half west. The most convenient station on this line is at Twenty-eighth street, about three minutes' walk from headquarters. There are several hotels, besides a lot of theatres, and plenty of life and excitement during the evening, in that quarter of the city.

The main entrance to headquarters is high and broad. From the spacious hallway there is a wide staircase neatly carpeted. On the left is a big reception room that runs back fifty feet to the rear wall of the house. This room, like all the others, is carpeted, while the walls are covered with light colored paper and the ceilings artistically frescoed. Here, on the walls, are portraits of President Cleveland and Judge Thurman. Against one side of the room are shelves covered with campaign documents, books, tracts and cards showing the issues paramount in this campaign, as well as exposing many false statements and distortions of the Republican party. Entrance is found at the rear end of this room to the newspaper or press bureau, over which Col. Tracy, a well known journalist, presides. He is courteous, genial newspaper man, whom all the reporters know and esteem, and from the vast amount of work now in the Democratic campaign as it is desirable to furnish to the press. At the right of the hallway and at the front of the stairway is a door on which a card is displayed reading "German Bureau." This is in charge of National Committeeman Herman Oelrichs, who has several assistants. He formerly was president of the German papers and looks after the German interests of the campaign. Going up to the second floor and turning at the head of the stairway to the right, the room of Calvin S. Brice, chairman of the executive committee, is found. This is richly furnished and reeks with evidence of great office and wealthy business man. Across the hallway, directly opposite the room used by William McClelland, the secretary of this committee, and by stenographers and typewriters. Connected with this room, which is designed as a suite of apartments, is a door leading into the front room, which is occupied by Col. Neve, of Ohio, who looks after the speakers' bureau. There is another room in front that is reached from the hallway, where Hon. William R. Barnum, chairman of the national committee, is quartered. The room is furnished with easy chairs, a roll topped desk, pictures of the Democratic candidates, newspaper racks in which the city dailies hang, and a long table around which the executive committee hold their weekly meetings. The rooms on the third floor front are used by ex-Assistant United States Treasurer Charles G. Jones, who is in charge of the finances of the campaign, and E. Hughes, the cashier, and Col. R. S. Dickinson, the assistant secretary of the national committee. The two rooms on the same floor in the rear are devoted to the use of the numerous clerks required in the great work of the campaign committee. The top floor is occupied almost wholly by telegraph operators who are kept busy all day and a good part of the evening receiving and sending messages from and to all parts of the country during the progress and work of the national canvass. The basement is entirely given over to the storage and mailing of campaign literature. Of the prospects of Democratic victory, it may be said that they are exceedingly bright and encouraging to those having the campaign in charge.

Five Reasons Why:

"OUR FAMILY PHYSICIAN" is the is the best medical work for home use ever printed;

First. It is different from all similar books ever published, and the differences are such as to make it more valuable in the family than any or all of them.

Second. It teaches those who have it how to tell what the matter is when a person gets sick.

[We will show you how it does this if you will call and see us.]

No other book published does this.

Third. In all cases of a dangerous disease, it advises to send for a physician at once; but it enables those who use it to know when to send, and when not to send for a doctor, and so saves people money and may save life.

No other book published does this.

Fourth. It gives the practice of all the schools of medicine—Allopathic, Homeopathic, and Electric for all diseases treated in the book.

No other book published does this.

Fifth. Its chapters on "Diseases of women and children" are pronounced the purest, most wholesome and practical ever written for the use of wives and mothers.

MILLS DEFENDS HIS BILL

THE TEXAS TARIFF-REFORMER DEFORE AN INDIANA AUDIENCE.

A Vigorous Speech on the Leading Question—How Free Raw Material Will Benefit the Workingman—Figures that Show the Tendency Toward Free Raw Material Over One.

Hon. Roger Q. Mills received an ovation on a platform at Richmond, Ind. We print below a summary of his very able speech.

Mr. Mills, on rising, was greeted with a ringing cheer, which continued for a minute. His speech, he pitched his voice in a high key and was easily heard by those even at the outskirts of the assemblage. He opened at the outset by from Mr. Blaine's New York speech, that capital was able to take care of itself; that the question in the campaign was one of honesty and not of tariff. He said that in his case he was in the same boat. Mr. Mills said he would accept that a election, and he proposed to show that the Democratic party was one in and had always been, too true friend of labor and of the laboring man. The Democrats had secured the first enfranchisement of property to poor by any of great, he cited the amendments (applause) proposed by the Republican party during and after the war, until the income honor to be bestowed on the laboring man. He said he called a tribute to the fact that when the Democrats came into power they found the laws of the land made to favor the class of the poor, but directly of the rich. The income tax, he said, was a tax on the rich and not on the poor, and the rich of the country, and they all were rich, was taxed to the support of the government, and in its case it was forced the rich, while pretending to be the friend of the toiling masses. In the same life was their treatment of the tax on railroads and other wealth-yielding corporations. They were a class of property which was taxed as other property, and yet they had been so favored by the welfare of the laboring people. On the rich land, he said, the Democrats proposed to remove the tax from the clothing of the poor, from the necessaries of life, upon which the poor earn their subsistence, and from other articles of use and comfort, the consumption of which by labor to gather an income, (applause) This effort met with uniform opposition from the Republicans, and yet Mr. Blaine would have the people believe that this is a campaign in which the Democrats are the enemies of labor. He said he was in the same boat with Democrats. It was indeed a question of labor, but the true friends of labor were found in the Democratic party. Mr. Mills was emphatic in his declaration that the Democrats did not propose to give the nation free trade, but that it was indeed of that idea or of free trade, that the Democratic party was in favor of free trade in the raw material, and that it was in this line, if it took all summer and all this fall.

Continuing his proof of the proposition with his strong statistics, Mr. Mills showed that the Democrats had reduced the average rate of the tariff as proposed in the Mills bill. "Why," said he, "we propose to reduce the tariff forty-seven per cent. to forty-two and one-half. That is no more free trade than was the reform made by a hard drinker when he reduced his drams from forty-seven to forty-two and one-half drops."

Mr. Mills went on with different arguments enumerated in his bill, in which there was a reduction of the tariff, to show how in each case the protection which the Republicans insist on was not needed, and how it was a tax on everything made by the workmen, and that, in every case the benefit of the protection went to the manufacturer—and not to the man.

"Let me see what sort of a bill we have presented. It is very modest, too. It is not even the average schedule. Suppose, Mr. Blaine, we should take a little less than 50 on a hundred ten imported goods. They are only about the cream by and saying this is free trade, that is will run the whole country. A free-for-all reduction in taxation on the necessaries of life, and yet the Republicans insist that it is the wicked of taxation—is that free trade? If it is, I would like to know what they mean by protection.

He then took up the iron schedule, stating that the Mills bill made a reduction of 45 from the $100 worth of iron and steel. He compared the duties on iron and steel with those on other articles. "Our high-priced labor only amounts to $1.50 a ton; suppose there is 75 a ton, then if we make a duty of 75 cents on pig iron that would cover the difference between England and the United States. Suppose we put a duty on pig iron, that would cover all we would be 75 a ton, and we would have a wide margin for profit. We assume the duty on pig iron on old costs, leaving it at $8. That is for labor. We let these pig-iron manufacturers do as they which they tell us they want for their protection. Now, what is the difference between us? The difference is 75 cents a ton. Is this the balance of it? There is no statute that prevents them from paying this money that is placed in their hands by Congress in trust to pay their workmen. Mr. Blaine, we are willing to be manufacturers down to the present time they have hired their laborers at the lowest cost in the open markets of the world. The reason the laborer doesn't get that is because the tariff is not for the benefit of the laborer. They can tool them—anyhow. They tool to the laborer that he is a fool if he does not pay the tariff, that it is for his benefit. The laborers to take an interest in the tariff because they have votes and money has not votes.

"The tariff is on the thing that labor makes. That thing belongs to the laborer. The tariff is a tax on the laborer, and he ought to have the benefit of it." Mr. Mills said that the Republicans talk all the time about the cheap labor in other countries, and that it is a fine thing to have the cheap labor in other countries, but that it is a fine thing to have the cheap labor in this country. He said that the Republicans claim that the tariff is for the benefit of the laborer, and that the Democrats propose to take the tariff off the articles of which the laborer is the chief consumer

AROUND THE COUNTY.

Evelyn.

ironton, Oct. 16—Mrs. McDonald and family have moved to their store opposite Ironton.

D. Galbraith and family intend moving this week into the house lately purchased of Mr. Webb at Ironton.

W. S. Stripp and family, of this place, have moved to Charlevoix where they intend to reside. W. S. and son George intend to take in the excursion to Detroit to-day (Tuesday) and from there to Canada on a visit.

Chas. Henrie gave a chance at his place known as the old Lake farm, on Monday evening to his friends. Charlie has rented the farm of Joe Lanvey in South Arm township, south of the village of South Arm, and will move his family there this week. We wish him good luck.

David Stephens, of Trenton, has rented the place known as the Richard Lake farm, for two years. We understand he intends moving his family to it soon. Success to Dave.

R. G. Jarman, and Wm. and Joseph Thayer are adding their houses and otherwise improving them, preparatory to plastering them.

"And now they say the railroad has got to come." Mother go Gallagher, we wonder yet.

There is an abundant apple crop. On visiting the farms of N. L. Cash and A. J. Beers the other day, we were shown some very fine specimens of fruit. Mr. Beers informed us that he had about 300 bushels of apples, and Mr. Cash has about the same amount.

Banks.

Oct. 16.—Mrs. Albert Superneau died last Sunday, the 14th, of paralysis. She was confined to her bed for over nine months.

There will be a supper at the town hall, Friday night for the purpose of raising money to paint the Catholic church.

The band boys gave an oyster supper last Saturday night. Proceeds, $12.50.

The k. E. Sunday school elected officers for the coming year: Superintendent, E. Byers; assistant superintendent, E. Jolliff; secretary and Treasurer, S. A. Brown; chorister, E. Jolliff; organist, Miss Lora Jolliff; librarian, Neal Flanigan.

A Word to the Voters of Charlevoix County.

Through the kindness of the JOURNAL I am permitted to reply to the article found in the issue of the Sentinel of the 20th, headed "the prohibition ticket," in which the Sentinel in its usual abusive and bombastic style imputes to the convention that placed the ticket in nomination, all manner of hypocrisy and dishonesty. I can give you no better reason for the call of the convention and nomination of the ticket than in the preamble and resolution adopted by the convention.

Preamble. Whereas, neither the democratic or republican parties have placed in nomination such tickets as will insure a temperance men support for county officers,

Therefore, Be it resolved that we the convention assembled proceed to put in nomination such a ticket as consistentions temperance voters of the county can support.

Even the Sentinel can say nothing against the personnel of the ticket well knowing that they are men well known throughout the county and that their reputation as honest upright men cannot even be attacked even by the slanderous mouthpiece of the Sentinel.

I suppose there is some excuse for the senseless ravings of the Sentinel. Even Balsam's beast spake when the ass rebuked the prophet and stood in the way with a drawn sword threatening destruction to her master. The Sentinel evidently has caught a glimpse of the angel of prohibition with a drawn sword standing in the way threatening the life of the great master of the republican party, the saloon, therefore its mind needs follow the example of his illustrious name sake and open his mouth too.

W. C. T. U. Convention.

Mrs. F. H. Palmiter, secretary, furnishes the following report of the recent W. C. T. U. convention in this city:

The fifth annual convention of the 11th district, W. C. T. U., was held in Charlevoix Oct. 2d, 3d and 4th, in the Congregational church. The large platform was beautifully decorated with flowers, plants and expressive mottoes. Attendance of delegates, good, considering the extent of territory embraced by the district.—Mrs. Estes of East Bay, driving with her cirage 50 miles that their little union might be represented. Mrs. A. S. Benjamin of Portland, president of the 5th district was with us all through the convention. She is highly appreciated and is rapidly becoming a necessity to the women of the 11th. Mrs. F. J. Howard of Bay View, district president, reports a membership of 385. Local unions active and unfaltering. Department superintendents pushing their several lines of work. Mrs. Martin Lunney, superintendent of the lumbermens and miners department, deserves special mention. She has distributed 501 pounds of literature at an expense of $18.35 which she freely donates. One poor fellow writes her, "The W. C. T. U. are the only organ I can on earth that cares whether my poor devils have a soul or not." The "Flower Mission" had a new plan presented to it, that of carrying the white ribbon to the aged. Chloe McCartney won the beautiful silver medal in the Demorestis medal contest. We must usefully thank the Charlevoix union and their friends for the generous hospitality of their homes, and the kindness of the Congregational church for the use of their house of worship, Miss Vera Burns and the choir for their prescice faled sheering; and Rev. A. C. Downs for his beautiful words of welcome; Rev. W. H. McCartney and Rev. W. G. Clark for their approval of our work and hearty God-speed; and all others who have in any wise helped to make our meetings a success. The officers elected for ensuing year were: president, Mrs F. J. Howard, Bay View, corresponding secretary, Mrs. F. J. Cox, Harbor Springs; recording secretary, Mrs. F. H. Palmiter, East Jordan; Treasurer, Mrs. M. J. Johnson, Boyne City.

An Explanation Needed.

Our esteemed contemporary The Chronicle has the monumental effrontery to compare the Chinese records of Cleveland and Harrison, to the disadvantage of the former. Such a thing might do very well occasionally as a joke, but when it is repeated with apparent seriousness it becomes tiresome.

The Chronicle quotes an extract from Harrison's letter of acceptance to prove that he has been converted to the policy of Chinese exclusion. We refer to and Mr. De Young, not as a journalist, but as a politician, as the confidential friend of the Republican candidate, the chosen spokesman selected in his contingent exigency, the official leader of his party in the Pacific coast—we desire to ask him, we say, whether Mr. Harrison is not precisely the same man today that he was two weeks ago, when Mr. De Young said:

Why Mr. Manufacturer Was Speechless.

The wife of James Davana, of New Canaan, Conn., a demoralized and a shoemaker, is a tailoress. A clothing manufacturer, a rampant republican, met Davana on the street not long ago. He told him how the republican party protected the American workingman, and declared that if the tariff was reduced the country would go to the dominion bowwows. When he got a chance Jim said:

"My boy went to your clothing store the other day to buy a pair of pants, didn't he?"

"Yes," replied the manufacturer. "They were all wool and a fine pair."

"I know that," replied Davana. "But my wife made the same pair of pants for you for 31 cents. Now, I'd like to know where the other $5.19 goes to."

The manufacturer said nothing, but left suddenly.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. Dr. Sore has arranged his practice to remain at home (without this remedy) to a specialty. A pamphlet containing full particulars and testimonials sent on receipt of two cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 16ow1d

Much Wise.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. F. G. HIXON & CO., Druggists.

Farm for Sale or Trade

ON YOUR OWN TERMS.

Eighty acres of land, three miles from Charlevoix, on south side of Pine Lake, known as the Gaskill farm. Will sell or trade for stock, on the same note today that he was two weeks ago, when Mr. De Young said:

Ask for Ayer's

Sarsaparilla, and be sure you get it, when you want the best blood-purifier. With its forty years of unexampled success in the cure of Blood Diseases, you can make no mistake in preferring Ayer's to any other. The forerunner of modern blood medicines, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is still the most popular, being in great demand by those who prefer the only $1 Sarsaparilla worth $5 a bottle.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is selling faster than ever before. I never hesitate to recommend it."—George W. Whitman, Druggist, Albany, Ind.

"I am safe in saying that my sales of Ayer's Sarsaparilla far exceed those of any other, and it gives thorough satisfaction."—E. R. Bush, Des Moines, Iowa.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla and Ayer's Pills are the best selling medicines in my store. I can recommend them conscientiously."—C. Bickham, Pharmacist, Roseland, Ill.

"We have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla here for over thirty years and always recommend it when asked to name the best blood-purifier."—W. T. McLean, Druggist, Augusta, Ohio.

"I have sold your medicines for the last seventeen years, and always keep them in stock, as they are staples. There is nothing equal to Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Frank L. Parker, Fort Leake, Wis.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla gives the best satisfaction of any medicine I have ever handled. I recommend it, or, as the Doctors say, 'I prescribe it nine times out of ten.' It never fails to meet the cases for which I recommend it. Many of my best citizens have been led to use it, through my influence."—C. F. Calhoun, Monmouth, Kansas.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Price $1; six, $5. Worth $5 a bottle.
